Secy.-Treas. Dave McDonald of the Steelworkers urged greater participation in politics and said his union was "going all-out" in the current campaign.

Mayor Lawrence of Pittsburgh and State Democratic Chairman Matthews expressed appreciation of CIO indorsement of their party's candidates.

The group commended Ramsey S. Black, Democratic candidate for auditor general, and W. J. Lane, Democratic candidate for state treasurer.

It was announced at the meeting, at which State PAC Chairman Harry Boyer presided, that indorsements of candidates for the Legislature would be handled by local CIO unions.

Four Progressives Withdraw in N. J.

New Jersey's top PAC leader made a "they're damned if they do and damned if they don't" attack on the Progressive Party in his state.

1. Withdrawal of four Progressives from races in New Jersey "is an indication both of the weakness of the Progressives and of their continued double-talking insincerity.

2. The candidacy of Progressives who have not withdrawn is "either a deliberate attempt to elect reactionaries or an indication of personal political ambition on the part of Mr. (James) Imbrie and his Communist cohorts."

Imbrie is Prog chairman for Jersey and a candidate for the U. S. Senate. Concerning him and his followers Moran said:

"These bat boys for reaction have failed to get a single local union in the entire state to endorse Third Party candidates. On the contrary, the overwhelming majority of CIO members and local unions have voted support for CIO policy in opposition to the Third Party."

About 100,000 copies of the CIO News 1948 Voting Record rolled off the presses in July.

Orders started pouring in to the CIO News—and within a short time a half million copies of the Record had been printed and distributed to CIO members throughout the country.

Orders continued to pour in. Several CIO newspapers ran the Record as a supplement.

Approximately 1,500,000 copies have now been distributed—and at the rate they're going, distribution probably will reach two million or more.

Copies of the Record can be secured from the CIO News, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices are 5c a copy, 100 for $4, 500 for $16 and 1000 for $22. Quantities of 5000 or more, $20 per 1000.

DIXIECRAT DOUBLE-TALK

The Dixiecrats, who lost their shirts at the Philadelphia Democratic convention, began dealing some fast ones from the bottom of the deck after they returned home.

They began building a political organization of their own on the cockeyed premise that their beloved "states rights" took precedence over the civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

They announced they would have candidates of their own running for president and vice president. This, they said, would give Southerners an opportunity to show how they felt about that rebel Harry Truman and his dad-blasted civil rights program.

Then they began a campaign to keep Truman's name off the ballot!

Temporarily, they have succeeded in Alabama and Louisiana.

The Dixiecrats, who had full opportunity at Philadelphia to vote on the party's nominee, are trying to deny citizens of two states the right to vote on the man the party nominated.

This disgraceful behavior goes with the double-talk about "rights" which has been coming from Dixiecrats.

So there will be no misunderstanding, we state flatly that we feel the same way about those who seek to keep Henry Wallace's name on the ballot. ★ ★ ★

OH, SO IT IS SILLY? One of our staff members, who sometimes prefers the ridiculous to the sublime, suggested the other day that it might be a good idea to try to get Congress to establish a National Management Relations Board with a pro-labor attorney as its general counsel.

"Under such a set-up," he said, "the officers of all corporations would be required to file 'non-subversive' affidavits and file financial information with the government before they'd be permitted to use NMRB in their dealings with labor.

"Managerial groups would have to be approved by a majority of all stockholders in government-conducted elections before they could represent the stockholders in collective bargaining.

"There would be an 80-day 'cooling-off' period for corporations whose decision to close plants temporarily menaced the public health or welfare.

"And if you think I'm crazy just go through my plan carefully and see if it isn't almost a Taft-Hartley Act in reverse."

We did. It was. ★ ★ ★

THIS DOESN'T MAKE SENSE A labor reporter for one of the nation's leading newspapers tells us that he and a friend now know a lot more about "Red hysteria" than they did a couple of weeks ago—and they are both angered by the manner in which they acquired their knowledge.

The reporter and his friend, a girl still in her teens, joined a California campus organization because both liked the anti-race prejudice program the new group said it would conduct.

A short time later they learned they had joined a Communist "front" organization and they immediately resigned.

That happened a number of years ago and neither thought their actions would have serious consequences, but——

"This girl got a job with the Economic Cooperation Administration about the time it was set up," the reporter said.

"ECA officials learned a short time ago about what had happened out in California—and the girl was fired. It doesn't make sense to me."

Nor to us either.

There's A Revolt On Down South

Mighty Struggle For Power Behind Scenes As Dixie Expands Industrially

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE'S a quiet revolution going on down in Dixie, where the sweet magnolias bloom and foul-smelling smoke belches from industrial smokestacks.

It's a region where you can find the best that tomorrow offers and the worst that yesterday left behind.

It's a part of the country in which some men live in unpainted wooden shacks and work with the world's most modern atomic energy equipment.

IN the midst of the revolution—which is merely high-speed evolution—the CIO launched a membership campaign in the summer of 1946.

Those wise to the ways of the South said nobody should expect overnight organizational miracles.

Look instead for steady progress, they said, and do not try to judge progress by membership gains alone.

Perhaps there have been no miracles, but the CIO has made a real contribution to the welfare of the South and, indirectly, to the entire nation.

Some of these contributions can be measured in dollars and cents. Others can be measured only in terms of increased human dignity and a stepped-up trend toward real democracy.

FOR years the South has been plagued by low wages and an influx of "runaway" industries which moved Southward in a quest for cheap labor.

The CIO has completely eliminated the North-South pay rate differential in some industries and has narrowed it in others.

It has played an important part in drying up the major sources of cheap labor.

It has done more than any other organization to bring about improved relationships between whites and Negroes.

It has given thousands of men and women a voice in determining the conditions under which they work and live.

THE cold statistics show the CIO has more than doubled its membership in the South since the summer of 1946 and that there recently has been a sharp increase in the establishment of new CIO unions in the region.

But there are no statistics by which to measure one of the most important contributions the CIO has made to the Southern revolt.

This contribution was in the field of civil liberties, the foundation-stone of democracy.

CIO attorneys have gone into court many times to fight against curbs on the civil rights of Southern organizers and union members—and they haven't lost a single case!

Thus they made more secure the right to free speech and free assemblage which mill owners and local law enforcement officers sought to abridge.

YES, there is a quiet revolution going on and its consequences will be far-reaching.

Big mechanical cotton-pickers and flame cultivators are beginning to take over the back-breaking jobs that gave employment to thousands of poorly paid Negroes.

Big industrial plants, which will provide work for many of those forced to leave the farm, are being built all the way from Virginia to Texas and from Kentucky to Florida.

Men and women who learned as children how to plow and hoe are now learning to operate drill presses and lathes.

Dixie is balancing its agriculture with industry.

BEHIND the scenes there is a mighty struggle for power below the Mason-Dixon Line—a struggle between liberals and reactionaries—a struggle between political bossism and those who believe in real democracy.

It has aligned itself with the under-dog—the worker who has felt compelled to think as the boss thinks and vote as the boss

It is operating on the theory that Southern wage-earners will achieve political liberty if they can obtain a reasonable measure of economic freedom.

It is trying to destroy the race and religious prejudices which employers exploit to keep wages low, which demagogs exploit to gain political power.

Yes, more—much more—than wages and working conditions are involved in the CIO's Southern campaign.

Pamphlet Finds Civil Rights in Danger

SOME of the gravest danger to civil liberties today comes from those who claim to be protecting the American way of life, warns Dr. Robert E. Cushman in a pamphlet, "New Threats to American Freedoms," just published by the Public Affairs Committee, 22 East 38th St., New York 16, N. Y.

Dr. Cushman, professor of government at Cornell University and a leading authority on civil liberties, describes the present threats to our fundamental rights as more serious than any faced by the American people "at almost any time during their entire history."

"We have learned in two world conflicts that war, by its very nature, is a menace to civil liberty," Dr. Cushman says. He finds progress, however, in the fact that the mistakes made in World War I when freedom of speech and of press were ruthlessly limited and several thousand persons prosecuted for unlawful speeches or publications, were not repeated in World War II.

Less than a hundred people were sent to prison for sedition during the last war, and no witch hunts were conducted, he says.

"We were, however, guilty of an assault upon civil liberty, new in method, and of appalling brutality in its effect upon its victims," Dr. Cushman maintains, in throwing 70,000 native-born American citizens of Japanese ancestry into concentration camps.

Dr. Cushman cites four main postwar dangers to civil liberty: fears arising out of a "cold war" with Russia; the fact that we possess the secret of the atomic bomb; failure to realize that the civil liberties of all groups, even those that seem "queer" or "undesirable" must be protected; and confusion arising from indiscriminate use of such labels as "Communist," "subversive," or "fellow traveler."

Since most of us never suffer any attacks upon our civil liberties, Dr. Cushman says, we tend for this reason, "to associate the term 'civil liberty' with unpleasant people or events."

As a basis for a better understanding of the basic American freedoms, the pamphlet gives a detailed analysis of the federal Bill of Rights and the safeguards afforded by the states.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"If that union delegation calls again, don't be afraid to use those words I taught you!"

Cops Decide It, Legally, Was A Parade

IT WAS one of those delightful bull-sessions that you hold in somebody's hotel room late at night after the mimeograph is quiet and the handbills are ready for early-morning distribution.

Organizers, some of them with shoes off to ease their aching feet, were draped ungainly about the room—some on the bed, some in chairs and a couple on the floor.

They, as was natural, were discussing the membership campaign in which they were engaged.

Finally their conversation on this subject ran thin and the talk turned to strikes.

"SAY, did I ever tell you guys about the way they slapped injunctions against us down in Georgia?" one of the men asked.

He didn't wait for anybody to answer. He told the story in considerable detail.

The high point dealt with a strike at a textile mill, where a temporary injunction was slapped on the workers just as soon as they formed a picket line.

Following that there was the usual court battle, which resulted in modification of the original injunction.

The judge ruled that the union could picket the mill. He placed no direct limitation on the number of pickets but said that when marching they had to remain at least 10 feet from each other.

"The pickets had a lot of fun over this provision," the organizer said. "They used to show up with tape measures and make a big pretense of trying to determine whether they were violating the injunction when they found two pickets only nine feet, six inches apart."

THE group had hardly started chuckling over the story when another organizer cut in with, "Say, that reminds me . . ."

He told of a tough situation in which he had been involved a number of years ago.

The plant on strike was in a town which knew little about unions and seemed to care less. Those in charge tried a number of stunts in an effort to gain public sympathy.

"Finally somebody hit on the idea of the pickets bringing their young sons along with them when they walked the line," the organizer said.

"The boys carried small signs saying 'Daddy needs more pay to he can take better care of me' and things like that.

"Boy, it seemed to be going over big—and then the cops arrived and arrested the pickets on charges of contributing to the delinquency of minors!"

AN organizer, stretched out on the bed, said, "That's a pretty good story but I can tell you a better one.

"The unusual thing about this strike is that the cops were on the side of management and the judge seemed to be on our side.

"We'd hardly begun walking the picket line before somebody ran to the Circuit Court judge for an injunction. He refused to grant one, holding that we were conducting a peaceful strike and had a right to picket.

"This made us feel awfully good and temporarily we forgot about the cops. Then it happened.

"The boys in the blue uniforms showed up one morning, got out of their car and walked toward the picket line. They called the fellow at the head of the line aside and placed him under arrest. They did the same thing with each man as he became the lead man in the line.

"They arrested about 10 guys before we learned they were being charged with 'leading a parade without a permit.'

"The rest of us formed a circle in a hurry—and they didn't arrest anybody else because you can't figure out who's leading a circle!"

THE CRUSHER

Why Not Send Labor Leaders As Ambassadors?

AMERICAN labor leaders should be U. S. ambassadors because when they talk about our democracy to folks abroad, they are likely to be believed, says Eric Johnston in Chapter 8 of his forthcoming book, "We're All In It." Former president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Johnston is now president of the Motion Picture Association of America.

The book will be published Nov. 8 by Dutton & Co., N. Y. C. Excerpts from Chapter 8 — "Ambassadors From Labor"—follow:

IMAGINE the stir in this country if the morning papers announced that Philip Murray, president of the CIO, had been named our ambassador to France! And David Dubinsky of the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers as our ambassador to Italy!

Sounds startling, doesn't it?

We accept as the normal, unexciting thing the appointment of the lawyer, the businessman, the newspaper publisher, the soldier or the public career man to various high governmental posts both abroad and at home. Lewis Douglas, business executive, as ambassador to England, makes not a ripple of excitement.

But Murray to France—Dubinsky to Italy! Incredible!

But is it so startling?

The battleground for the new world of today is at the worker level. We are up against the task of adjusting our foreign policy to deal with a world of swirling masses and a world seething with new ideas. The old-fashioned diplomat is out, along with crowned heads and entrenched governments. He doesn't fit this picture. He doesn't know it yet, but he's extinct, all ready for stuffing and mounting beside the Dodo bird and dinosaur.

As we adjust our foreign policy to the new shape of the world, we'll obviously adjust the personnel to make it click. In dealing with people as no other leading power had to do, we need among our emissaries men and women who know people best and are the closest to them.

Labor leaders can bring special equipment to an assignment like that. They are used to dealing with people. When they tell the facts about America's democratic capitalism to other peoples they are more likely to be believed in the circles where it counts.

There is no mystery to the friendly reception American labor leaders get wherever they go. They may not speak the tongue of workers everywhere, but they speak a common language. Shop talk is an easy route to understanding among men in any field.

WHEN the Kremlin passed out the word to Communists to attack the European Recovery Program, Communist-dominated unions everywhere began to fall in line. The Kremlin, indeed, had hoped to use the World Federation of Trade Unions, which includes some so-called "unions" behind the iron curtain, to spread the big lie that American recovery aid to Europe was a Wall Street plot aimed at capitalist domination of the continent.

James Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, nailed that story for the lie it was at a Paris meeting of the World Federation when he said:

"Was it Wall Street that fought and made the sacrifices and paid for the war? Was it Wall Street that provided lend-lease to the Soviet Union? Has it been Wall Street that has provided relief to the world since the end of the war? It was the people of America, all the people—all the taxpayers.

"We have no American ideologies to export; I'm talking in terms of food and coal and fertilizer, agricultural machinery and power plants; transportation and cotton and steel.

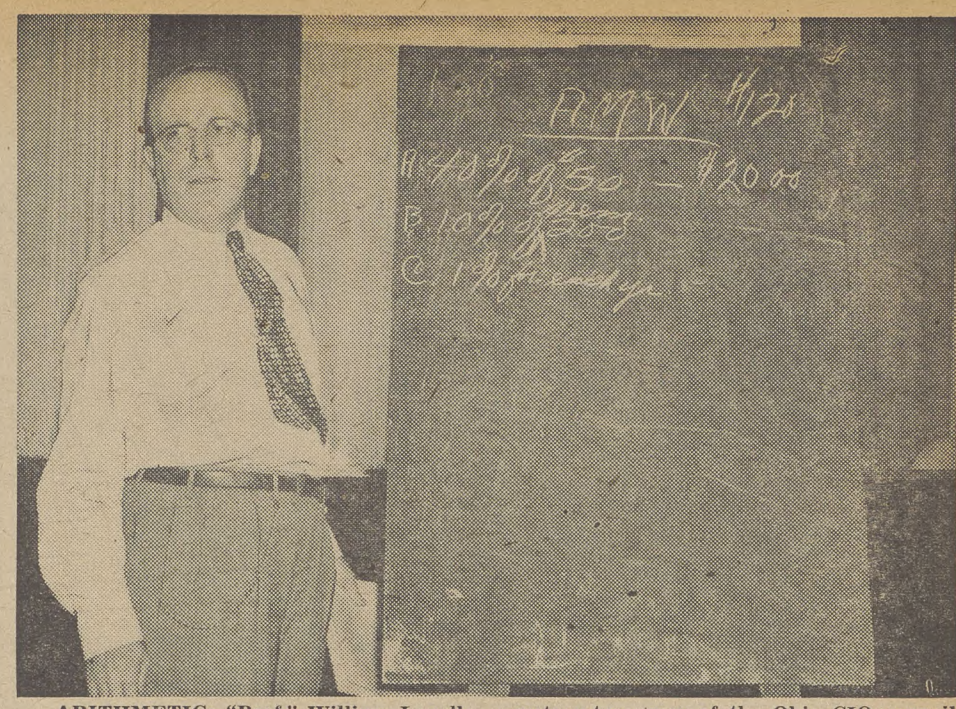
"These are the things you want; they are the things the people of America want to provide, to get your industries going, enable you to raise your standard of living and become self-supporting."

Nobody but a labor leader could so effectively have made that speech about America's purpose before a labor meeting abroad.

Golden Praised

Eric Johnston in his forthcoming book "We're All In It" credits Clinton S. Golden, an ECA labor advisor and former vice president of the CIO Steelworkers, with introducing collective bargaining into Greece. Johnston said that before Golden and his colleagues from American industry arrived, the Government told the unions and industry what terms should apply to the workers.

TRY ON FOR SIZE: These Steelworkers, members of the Community Services Committee in the American Can plant at Cincinnati "model" the official CSC counsellors' badges at the Community Services' Clinic held at Dayton, Ohio, by Steelworkers' District 25. They have not yet taken the course, hope one will be set up in Cincinnati soon. Left to right: Emerson Mahan, Irwin A. Lauck and J. B. Posey.



ARITHMETIC: "Prof." William Lavelle, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO council Lavelle is showing how the amount of an unemployment compensation check is computed. In Ohio, he said, so many monkey wrenches are thrown into workers' way, that last year 25% of the applicants for jobless pay were disqualified. Answer is political action, says he.

MODERN SAMARITANS

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WE HOPE it never happens, but . . .

● Suppose your home burns down, leaving you destitute. No Rockefeller in your family; almost nothing in the bank. To whom do you turn?

● Or suppose you have an illness—say tuberculosis—that requires prolonged rest and expensive treatment you can't afford. What can you do—besides forget about it? And who will provide for your family?

● Or again—if a wage earner in your family dies or loses a limb on the job, what assistance can you expect from the government? What do you do to get it?

These are but a few of the questions plaguing workers that were answered at a Community Services Clinic conducted by District 25 (19 counties in southwest Ohio, seven counties in northern Kentucky) of the CIO Steelworkers in Dayton, Ohio, Sept. 18-19.

And they are likewise just a minute sampling of the questions that trained CIO Community Services counsellors are answering in local unions dotting the country. Aim of clinic was to promote the use and stimulate the growth of counselling.

COUNSELLING is a relatively new union service. It grew out of a wartime survey in Detroit which disclosed that absenteeism was largely due to health and welfare difficulties at home.

Since then, under the guidance of the national Community Services Committee, locals in a number of cities have sponsored six-weeks courses—complete with professional instructors—in how to assist union members in obtaining help. Graduates of such courses receive certificates and credentials attesting to their official status as union counsellors.

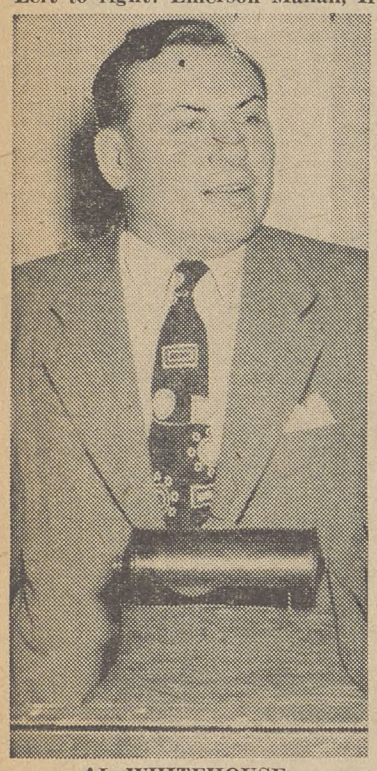
What do they "counsel" about? Any individual or community problem that can possibly be solved by outside assistance. A New Jersey worker's daughter needed a brace for her leg which the worker couldn't afford. The counsellor was able to refer her to an agency which supplied the brace free.

An electrician in an Ohio steel plant died of a hernia. His wife received a $4200 compensation check through the efforts of the union. In Chicago during the Packinghouse Workers strike counsellors were able to refer needy strikers to welfare agencies where they obtained immediate assistance.

Counsellors are trained to know what services are obtainable from what agencies and how: welfare assistance, workman's compensation, unemployment insurance, family and child welfare, hospitals and clinics, veterans' rights, and legal assistance.

"Our union is not just a bread and butter union," says Al Whitehouse, District 25 director of the CIO Steelworkers and Kentucky State CIO Council president. "We're concerned with making the community a better place in which to live and with helping our members, when they're in need, obtain the services to which they contribute."

That was why big Al set up a two-day clinic for steelworkers in his district. It was the opening gun in what is to be a nationwide drive to establish Community Services Committees in every CIO local and counselling courses in every major CIO town.

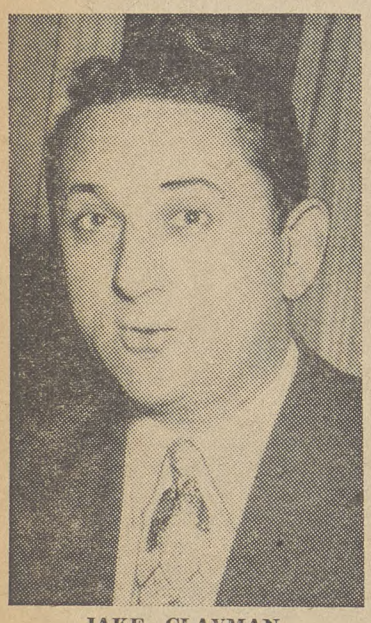


AL WHITEHOUSE

Steelworkers district director, he called the two-day "clinic," reminded his steelworkers they were losing thousands of dollars through ignorance. CSCs, he said, saved the international union about $250,000 in strike benefits in 1946.

LEO PERLIS

Natl. director, CIO Community Services Committee, he told participants that 325,000 people die annually who could have been saved by proper care. One of CSC's jobs is to help bring that care to workers.



JAKE CLAYMAN

Counsel for the Ohio CIO council, Clayman explained Ohio workers' compensation rights. He delighted the audience by speculating on his own right to compensation if he dropped Whitehouse's watch and the Steelworkers director popped him in the nose. Group decided in Clayman's favor.

Ask Your Barber

One of these days, something'll be bothering you and you'll just casually mention it to your barber or beautician as you relax in the chair. Then you'll get a surprise.

He, or she, will suggest you go into a little more detail. It won't be prying, either. It will be an offer of real help. There will probably be a framed certificate on the wall to inform you that you're talking to a graduate of a CIO course in counseling, taught by experts in the social welfare field.

This will mark the latest extension of an experiment launched three years ago by the CIO Community Services Committee.

Now, after conferences between Leo Perlis, national CSC director, and Lilyan Moscowitz, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Barbers and Beauty Culturists, the union counselling program is taking another step forward. It is extending to the general public a service until now limited to CIO members.

Under the new plan, the 7,000 members of BBCUA, including 3,000 in New York locals, will be offered a course equipping them to serve their customers not only with shaves, haircuts, facials and permanent waves but with skilled guidance to agencies that hold the solution to a variety of problems.

The courses will be given in classes of no more than 50 members each, meeting two evening hours a week for a period of six weeks. The instructors will be drawn from various social service agencies, and the matters to be dealt with include child welfare, family relations, marriage problems, legal aid, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, medical care, hospitalization.

EAGER TO LEARN: Part of the 100 Ohio and Kentucky Steelworkers who pumped eight guest speakers full of questions about unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, community services—and booed mention of Taft and Dewey. Counselling courses are being started in Zanesville and Warren, O. Others are expected to result from workers' enthusiasm at Dayton clinic.

Buckmaster Victorious In Rubber Union Row

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE 13th annual convention of the CIO United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum and Plastic Workers of America, meeting last week in Omaha, Neb., voted by a narrow margin to back Pres. L. S. Buckmaster in a dispute between him and the majority of the general executive board.

On a roll call vote, the delegates cast an 818 to 788 ballot to "adopt" a report Buckmaster had made to the convention in his opening address. The vote came after three days of long and at times bitter debate.

Buckmaster nosed out George Bass for the presidency by a vote of 810 to 808. Bass is from Local 5, Akron, Ohio.

Following the vote, Buckmaster declared that "Bass is a man of principles and a man who has always played straight across the table." Both indicated a desire to forget differences and work together for a better union.

Bass then told the CIO News that he is "100% against the Wallace Third Party."

For the general vice presidency, incumbent H. R. Lloyd defeated Joseph Childs, Local 9, 811 to 807. Incumbent Secy-Treas. Charles Lanning, Local 3, won reelection over Floyd Gartell, Local 43, by a vote of 859 to 752.

In Memoriam

A striking memorial service was held by the Rubber Workers' convention for 700 members who had died during the year since the previous convention.

Buckmaster, in his report, had accused the board majority of: (a) Setting up a political machine within the union; (b) of illegally reappointing Organizational Director N. H. Eagle after Buckmaster had nominated someone else for the post; (c) of failing for a long time to back CIO policy in favor of the Marshall Plan; (d) of giving the impression that the URCLPWA was a Communist-led union by failing to repudiate directly the third party of Henry A. Wallace.

Numerous speakers joined in both sides of the debate, which had been made a special order of business. A motion to bar the press was roundly defeated. Main speakers in reply to Buckmaster's charges were Eagle and Vice President H. R. Lloyd. Both denied his charges, declared there was not a trace of Communist influence in the union and accused Buckmaster, who is a vice president of the CIO, of being too conservative.

L. S. BUCKMASTER
Wins By Two Votes

Alabama Bound

Said Rubber Workers' Pres. L. S. Buckmaster when a speaker dwelt long on the fact she had been born in Alabama:

"We are allowing a lot of latitude in this debate (on the controversy between him and the Executive Board) but I'm asking you one thing: let's get out of Alabama."

All factions roared laughing.

Other features of the convention, which had the unusual slant of being held in a city in which there are no rubber workers:

1. An accusation by CIO organizational Director Allan S. Haywood that George Morris, labor editor of the Communist Daily Worker, was in effect a strikebreaker. Haywood referred to a column written by Morris, and distributed as a pamphlet to striking CIO Packinghouse Workers, which Haywood declared, was aimed to undermine the strikers' confidence in their union and the CIO.

2. A CIO Political Action Committee "pitch" by Assistant PAC Director Tilford Dudley, in which more than $500 was collected for PAC in less than 10 minutes.

3. An address by Omaha Mayor Glenn R. Cunningham in which the youthful official declared he was proud of having been accused during his campaign, of being the "darling of the CIO."

4. An address by Rep. Walter Huber (D. O.) who represents the Akron region in which there are thousands of Rubber Workers, in which the congressman declared "there is only one thing to do with the Taft-Hartley Law—repeal the whole kaboodle."

BUCKMASTER had actually fired the first shot in his campaign against the executive board in the September issue of the United Rubber Worker, which carried his annual report. "In the Field of Civic and National Affairs," he wrote, "I regret to report that the international executive board has failed to give our membership emphatic and vigorous leadership."

He further stated, "This failure of the board to act decisively (on the third party issue) has left many of our members and the nation as a whole with the impression that our union actually supports the third party, which, I believe, is a tool of the Communist Party."

In his address to the convention, he revealed that the board had refused to repudiate the third party in the language used by the CIO Executive Board, but had instead, after a long delay, voted to back any candidates indorsed by PAC. This he said, gave the impression that URCLPWA might be following the party line, though, he said, he knew of no board member who had any Communist leanings.

He pointed out that under the union's constitution the organizational director must be appointed by the general president, with the approval of the board, and serves for a one-year term.

He said that he had decided last December not to reappoint Eagle because the director was engaging in a campaign of political dealing, intimidation and disruption. Buckmaster instead nominated Rex C. Murray, a district representative, who was rejected by the board. Two other Buckmaster nominations were rejected, he said, and then the board proceeded on its own initiative to rename Eagle.

BUCKMASTER also dealt at length with charges of some of his opponents that he had failed to press industry-wide bargaining. He declared the wage policy conference, held in February, had not proposed industry-wide bargaining, that the various commitees set up by the conference and the board had not called for industry-wide bargaining.

"The issue here is not militancy," he asserted. "The real cause of the division within our ranks is in the record of those who seek control. It is in the record of the organizational director and his political machine, which is irresponsibly dividing us because a small group of wilful people wish to divide us. The choice is not militancy, but whether we have a clean union or a bombastic political machine. It is either left or right, right or wrong."

Open Door

L. S. Buckmaster: "We didn't want to slam the door in Henry Wallace's face, but we would like to slam it at him."

Vice-Pres. H. R. Lloyd, saying he spoke for all the board members except Buckmaster and two others, said: "With all the honesty I can muster, I deny that I am a Communist, ever was one or ever expect to be. All of us have signed the non-Communist affidavit required. Under the Taft-Hartley law, our constitution bars Communists from membership.

"I, as a member of the CIO executive board, voted for the anti-third party and pro-Marshall plan policy. Not a single Rubber board member voted against the ERP.

(He revealed that the board had voted seven in favor, three to defer, one indefinitely and two not voting.)

"I think that the sole motivation behind Buckmaster is that he is afraid someone will steal his job."

HE also read a letter from Buckmaster to the U. S. Rubber Co., concerning an "illegal" strike—which Lloyd agreed was illegal—and accused Buckmaster of putting ideas in the company's head of how to punish the illegal strikers.

Eagle declared he was convinced that Buckmaster's charges "were designed to divert attention from the real issue. There are no basic facts behind the accusations".

Several opposition speakers made much of the fact that William B. Allen, staff assistant to Buckmaster, was a "Harvard boy."

Boys' Town

Rubber Workers' delegates, at the invitation of Father E. C. Walsh, visited Boys' Town, near Omaha. Father Flanagan, famous Boys' Town director had accepted an invitation to address the convention, but died recently. Father Walsh succeeded him.

Buckmaster explained that his letter forestalled a heavy damage suit by the company. He called for unity and said he prayed that "whoever is elected president will have better backing than I have had in the past 12 months." He declared his leadership had been aggressive, not conservative.

The officer's report to the convention showed that contractual gains for employes of the "Big Four" and smaller companies had generally followed an 11c pattern and a third week of vacation after 15 years of service. There also were major gains in holiday pay.

The report also showed that during the past year 40,843 had entered the union and 60,340 had left, most of them with transfers to other unions. The total membership as of June 30, 1948, was 189,436. A serious problem was noted in the decline of employment in the industry.

The PAC "pitch" by Dudley was a popular highlight of the convention. Contributions were mostly of $1, but there was at least one of $20 and several other high ones.

George Roberts, PAC director in Southern California, who is a member of the Rubber Workers, assisted Dudley. Good crack by Dudley: "In New York they say: You have to know Tom Dewey to dislike him."

He declared that the CIO hadn't deserted Wallace, but that Wallace had deserted CIO. "Why, he didn't even bother to ask our advice about launching the third party."

AT&T Offer Not Enough, Says Union

The American Telephone & Telegraph Corporation's first offer of from zero to $6 weekly increase has been termed "highly unsatisfactory" by an official of the American Union of Telephone Workers, CIO.

Affiliated with the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, the union bargains for 25,000 long lines employes.

In addition to omitting entirely several groups of employes, the wage offer was termed unsatisfactory because it "ignored cost of living factors" and failed to conform to the national wage pattern, according to the union spokesman.

New CIO Pamphlet Explains Draft Law

If you're between the ages of 18 and 26, the new CIO pamphlet, "Are You Going to be drafted?" means you.

Simply and briefly told, the brochure outlines general provisions of the Selective Service Act, describes your job rights on returning, recommends action that local unions can take in their community.

Unions are urged in the pamphlet to seek positions on the various citizen boards and agencies created by the draft act, and to insert military service clauses in contracts when they reopen.

Priced at 5c a copy, $3 for 100, the pamphlet may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Esposito, Bail Reelected

Playthings Union Indorses Truman

By Alice Skodzus

TEN years of progress as a CIO affiliate were celebrated by 200 delegates to the Fifth Biennial Constitutional Convention of Playthings Jewelry & Novelty Workers International Union.

Indorsement of President Truman for reelection, opposition to communism and full support of the Marshall Plan and military preparedness highlighted the political decisions of the delegates.

The convention also urged repeal of Taft-Hartley, enactment of civil rights legislation, increased social security benefits, federal aid to housing, and rebuilding of the Department of Labor, which Congress has stripped of many of its functions.

The convention reelected Anthony H. Esposito by acclamation as international president for a fifth term. He has served the union in that capacity since its founding. Alex Bail was reelected by acclamation as secretary-treasurer for a third term.

Delegates recalled that the organization was granted a charter by the first convention of the CIO in 1938, upon petition by the Toy and Novelty Workers Organizing Committee, which had 4,819 members.

Now representing approximately 50,000 workers in the toy, jewelry and novelty industries, the union reviewed 10 years of organizational progress. Wage levels in the industries within its jurisdiction are now four and five times the open shop scales of a decade ago. Job security has replaced terrorism. Every contract provides vacations, holidays, and welfare benefits. And the industry which was once characterized by its fly-by-night enterprises now operates with stability built on known labor costs, a sound labor market, and standardized procedures of production.

Eleven delegates to the tenth aniversary convention had been among the 47 delegates to the founding conference of the Toy and Novelty Workers Organizing Committee. Among these were Pres. Anthony H. Esposito, Emanuel Diana, Harry Damino, Bob Juliano, Sam Liberman, Morris Malmignati, Anthony Mobilia, Albert Perrone, Alfonso Pallone, Tony Verdibello, and Natale Zaita.

Against Dewey

One of the delegates at the convention—an old timer—laughed sourly during a discussion of the GOP stand for a return to the "good old days." "Maybe that's for Dewey," he said, "but it's not for me. Back in those days, too, I worked in a doll shop, and conditions were so bad that they even kept the bathrooms locked, for fear that some workers would cheat them of a minute's work. Nobody could drag me back to those times!"

CIO Rail Workers Win on Santa Fe

CIO Railroad Workers have beaten back efforts of an AFL union to capture bargaining rights for close to 13,000 maintenance-of-way and miscellaneous employes on the Santa Fe Railroad in a Natl. Mediation Board election.

The CIO union, a division of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, had held a contract with the company for two years when the AFL Brotherhood of Maintenance-of-Way Employes attempted to make inroads.

CIO regional directors in states along the line and six Natl. CIO organizers plunged into the "keep CIO" campaign that preceded the election. A. B. Martin and W. M. Sheets headed the campaign, which culminated in a 7271 vote for CIO to 4213 for the AFL.

What Makes Union Leaders Tick is Theme of Novel

"BY decision he had rejected his individual past, and had chosen instead common hungers and the common past. And he had chosen, too, the way that was not opposition to any single oppressor, but war with the many tyrannies . . ."

That was Mark Shearer, labor leader, vice president of a large international union, hero of a new novel, "Sir and Brother."

CIOers will recognize in selfless, hard-hitting Shearer many characteristics common to most of their union leaders. They will find in "Sir and Brother" a warm understanding and sympathy not only for the labor leader, but for the ordinary Joe on the picket line and the objectives of the union movement as a whole.

Author Harry Lee sets out to answer the question: "What makes Mark Shearer tick?" What prompts a man to forego the ordinary comforts of life, to neglect his family and health, forget meals and recreation? What impels a man of outstanding qualities of leadership, intelligence, farsightedness, and ingenuity to choose the union instead of industry, where presumably great wealth and position would await him?

UNFORTUNATELY the book falls short of answering the question. It is as though Lee were embarrassed to offer as one of the explanations the most obvious—a sincere dedication to the betterment of human lives. In fact, he shies away from that crusading spirit to such an extent at times, that occasionally the labor leader almost becomes a cool manipulator—just for the sake of manipulating.

Despite its few shortcomings, the book is highly readable. The plot moves swiftly and very realistically through the union's battle with a giant corporation, Shearer's convention and pre-convention fight with the communists, and Shearer's gripping love story.

Immediately the reader finds himself wondering after whom the characters are patterned and trying to find real-life parallels to situations in the book. It's not hard to do. The union is the spittin' image of the UAW; the economic theory promoted by Shearer has a resemblance to Walter Reuther's during the 1946 General Motors strike—and since. And we have heard it rumored that Shearer himself absorbs a good bit of the personal characteristics and much of the biography of CIO national Community Service Committee Director Leo Perlis. Perlis was the author's boss during the war when Lee served as public relations director for the CIO War Relief Committee.

The title of the new book should ring a familiar note in the ears of any unionist—the traditional salutation at the beginning of a union letter. The story is as steeped in the flavor of unions as the title.

Constitution Altered

Brewery Workers To Have President

BY EMIL BEINECKE

THE CIO Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers at their 30th convention at Milwaukee altered their constitution to create an office of general president.

Nominated for the post are William J. Kromelbein, present general secretary-treasurer, and Karl Feller, present general corresponding secretary. The membership will elect the president in a referendum Nov. 10-Dec. 10.

The convention also created a new position of general recording-corresponding secretary. The present general recording secretary, Edward Hughlett, was nominated for this position without opposition.

Joseph Hauser, veteran business agent of Brewers Local 6, St. Louis, is unopposed for general secretary-treasurer. Also nominated without opposition were General Organizer Charles Lindberg and Co-ordinator of State Councils Joseph Brady.

The union also abolished the 62-year-old system of weekly executive board meetings to direct affairs of the union, endorsed new contracts, etc. Authority remains vested in the board, with the general president reporting to board members throughout the country.

MOST of the incumbents for the general executive board (one from each district) and the 10 alternates, were nominated without opposition.

Asst. Sec. of Labor John Gibson's address was a high spot of the convention. CIO Vice-Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood kept the delegates alternately laughing and cheering as he tore into AFL craft unionism, John L. Lewis and communism.

With the spectre of prohibition always before them, the delegates welcomed assurances of spokesmen representing the anti-prohibition departments of the brewing industry and beer wholesalers' national association that their groups would cooperate in the union's campaign against local, state and national prohibition.

This campaign during the past 15 years has already seen the establishment of State Councils of Brewery and Distillery Workers in many states and has won the support of both city and state CIO Councils in many areas.

A CALL for closer relations between management and labor in the brewing industry was sounded by one of the two industry representatives, Bruce Berckmans of the U. S. Brewers Foundation. James Shakman of the Pabst Brewing Co., Milwaukee, speaking on trends in the industry, predicted a large increase in beer production capacity by 1960 to meet the ever increasing demand for beer and other brewery products.

Every delegate pressed forward to shake hands with Gibson, former president of the Michigan CIO Council, when he finished a fighting speech in which he blasted the Taft-Hartley law, particularly its "preference" for craft bargaining units. He said that because the act favors craft bargaining units, it "is undoubtedly going to lead to more jurisdictional disputes and chaos in a number of industries."

Popular Speaker

Editor Bob Hansen of the Eagles Magazine, national publication of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, was a popular speaker at the CIO Brewery Workers' convention. It turned out that Bob had many fraternal brothers among the delegates—the Eagles being primarily a working men's organization—and they all wanted to shake his hand after he concluded his remarks.

GIBSON said: "Those who framed this infamous act have the nerve to tell the American people that this vicious legislation was passed to protect the workers from their unions and their union leaders. The Taft-Hartley Act does offer protection, but not to the workers.

"It offers aid and comfort to the so-called rugged individualists who fought the right of workers to join unions and bargain collectively in keeping with the provisions of the Wagner Act. The workers of the country have answered the question of whether they want unions by their votes in the union shop elections since the Taft-Hartley law was passed."

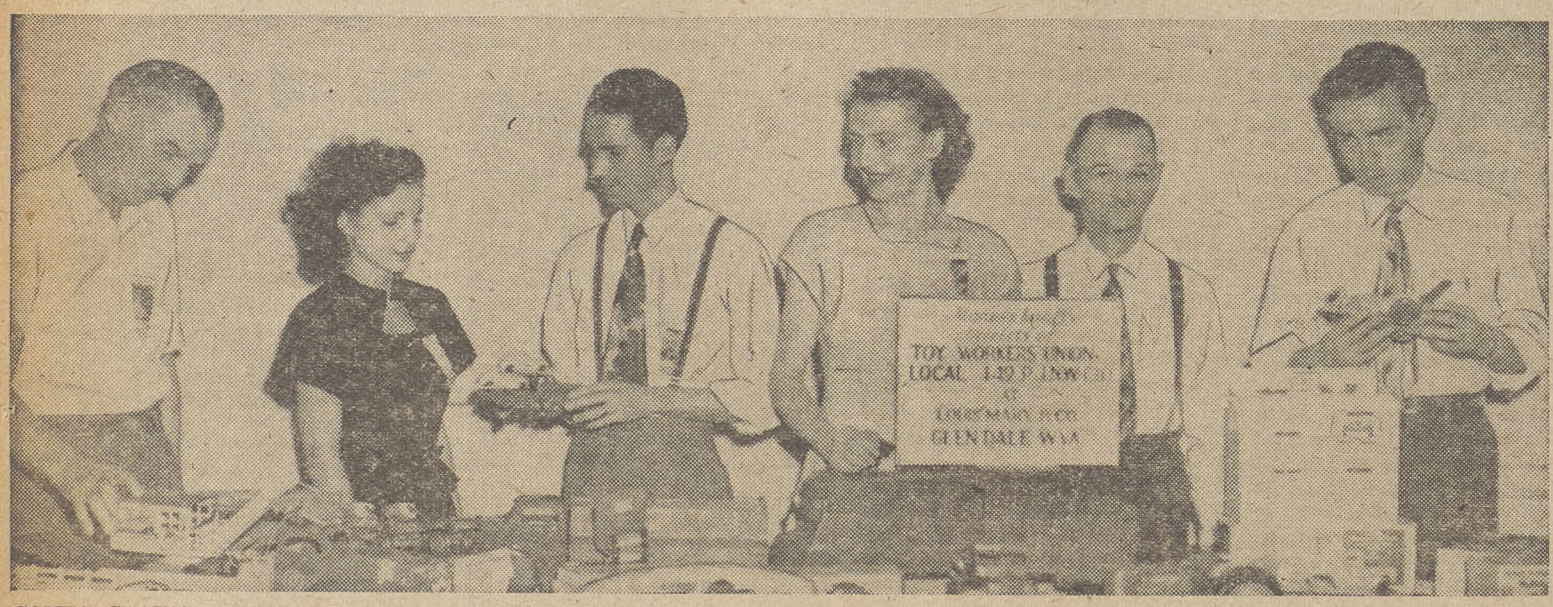
Gibson also hit at the 80th Congress for slashing to the bone the appropriations for the Dept. of Labor, asking, "What sort of protection do you think the Dept. of Labor can give to more than 61,000,000 workers with a staff that has been cut to 3,300 employes?"

The Convention also:

- Set up a five-man committee to investigate the feasibility of a pension and retirement plan, to be embodied in union contracts.
- Approved legislation by the state and federal governments to alleviate the housing shortage, an increase in federal minimum wage standards and retention of the 40-hour week.
- Demanded the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law.

(The delegates' temper on the Taft-Hartley Law was shown in the bitter denunciation of the havoc it has created, in some instances, in an industry where the closed shop had become traditional.)

- Established a research and education department.
- Increased the per capita tax by $4 a year—from $6 to $10. The delegates accepted without question the explanation by the International officer that the increase in service to the local unions could not be continued without additional funds.



SANTA CLAUS' HELPERS: These members of Local 149, CIO Playthings, Novelty and Jewelry Workers, Glen Dale, W. Va., brought the toys they make to the union's fifth biennial convention at Atlantic City. Officers reported that the union, which is ten years old, represents 50,000 workers in the toy, jewelry and novelty industries and that the wage levels in the categories in its jurisdiction are four and five times the open-shop scales of a decade ago. Eleven of the delegates had participated in the union's founding convention.

Labor Group Scores Failure To Encourage Unions

German-Soviet Alliance Is Feared

"AN alliance between an extremely nationalistic Germany and Soviet Russia" is likely because the U. S. military occupation authorities are favoring former Nazis and ignoring the trade union movement and other democratic forces."

That is the warning sounded by the subcommittee of the Labor Dept.'s Trade Union Advisory Committee on International Affairs. The CIO was represented on that committee by Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross, and the AFL by Irving Brown and Henry Rutz.

They were accompanied on their visit to Berlin and the most important centers of the three Western zones by Arnold Steinbach of the Labor Dept. Office of Intl. Labor Affairs.

Bureaucracy Is Feared

A leading demand of the German unions is labor-management control of industry, the Labor Dept. subcommittee on International Affairs declares.

The subcommittee reports that "socialization is an immediate problem in the coal mines . . . Trade unions and their leaders fear that the development of a new economic bureaucracy will crush them or prevent their functioning as effective and free representatives of the economic interests of the workers."

Suggestions To Aid Economy

In addition to several steps aimed at giving the unions a larger role in the German economy, the report of the subcommittee of the Labor Dept.'s Trade Union Advisory Committee on International Affairs recommends:

1. An occupation statute defining the powers of the military and civil authorities.
2. Re-establishment of the post of top adviser on labor affairs to General Clay.
3. Extension of collective bargaining.
4. Improvement of housing.
5. Determination of the extent of dismantling.
6. Extension of the Smith-Mundt bill to occupied territories so that there could be an exchange of trade unionists.
7. Establishment of a joint committee of the military government, the American trade union movement, the German administration and the German trade union to probe the re-entry of the Nazis into leading positions in the German bureaucracy.

The subcommittee's report is similar, in many respects to that of Victory Reuther, CIO Auto Workers' education director, who said recently after a visit to Germany, "We are hurting our true friends — the democratic trade unionists—and aiding our enemies, the former Nazis and the Communists." The subcommittee reported:

"Resentment and criticism throughout our zone, whether justified or not, are rife to such an extent that one can generalize by saying that no German political leader can afford to become too much identified with occupation policy and administration.

"Yet it is true to state that the way in which we hand back our controls will determine economic and political conditions far into the forseeable future."

THE U. S. trade union representatives said they found that most of the German union members and all democratic forces in Germany "fear annihilation if military government disappears.

"They are unanimous in charging that under present conditions military government is handing Germany back to the same forces in the economic and political life of Germany who were mainly responsible for the rise and maintenance of a Nazi Germany."

The report says that "the occupation forces will have to remain not only to prevent the new democratic forces from being strangled by a new nationalism but also to prevent Russia's exploitation of this new nationalism to crush all Germany.

"An alliance between an extremely nationalistic Germany and Soviet Russia is one of the outstanding dangers."

Although food, machinery and raw materials are vital factors in developing future democracy and in increasing production, the subcommittee reports, increases in production depend on "the future ownership and workers participation in the controls of industry and the economy."

Readiness of the leadership of the German trade union movement to assume its share in building a democratic Germany was seen by the committee in the union's handling of the Ruhr crisis.

(Industrial peace was maintained in the Ruhr although there was an acute shortage of food.)

"The trade unions," the report states, "constitute one of the greatest democratic forces in Germany and unless they are given a larger role in the German economy they will atrophy . . . and the resentment of workers will turn against the unions."

The report praises "the heroic struggle waged by the Berlin trade unionists against the rule of the communist leadership.

"The refusal of these leaders to accept the result of the elections which gave the democratic groups in the Berlin unions a majority, has led to a split in the Berlin trade union movement." The unity of the Democratic Socialist and the Catholic trade unions against the Communists is lauded.

The American military government is praised for protecting the democratic unions against the defeated minority and the Soviet military government.

The report is critical of the failure of the U. S. military government to return Nazi-confiscation property to the unions and to put social security plans into operation. Also criticized is the occupation authorities' "unreal concept of wages which has made collective bargaining impossible."

The subcommittee also reports that "the influence of labor within the military government has distinctly declined" since the return to the U. S. of Joseph Keenan, former labor adviser to Gen. Lucius Clay, head of the occupation forces.

Make Survey Of Civil Rights

Roger N. Baldwin and Arthur Garfield Hays of the American Civil Liberties Union and Editor Norman Cousins of the Saturday Literay Review are making a survey on which to base recommendations for civil rights in the American occupation zones of German and Austria.

Baldwin—who is ACLU director—said that he would confer not only with occupation authorities but also with German and Austrian officials and the leaders of democratic agencies. Gen. Lucius Clay, commander of U. S. occupation forces, invited them to make the survey.

"One of the best antidotes to communism is civil liberties," Baldwin declared. "Their promotion in occupied areas is one of the tests of our democratic goals abroad. The present moment may seem unfavorable for such an effort, but this is a long-range task."

Rieve Tells Subcommittee:

Textron Mill Closings Part of Firm's "Racket"

By JOHN A. McCARTHY

THE ruthless manner in which 10,000 textile workers have been left jobless by the shenanigans of Textron, Inc., has ben revealed to a Senate subcommittee in Nashua, N. H.

The spark which set off the hearing was the sudden closing on Sept. 8 of the Nashua and Jackson mills which employed 3,500 workers. Previously the company closed mills in Dover, N. H., Manville and Esmond, R. I., Taunton, Mass, and Waynesboro. Va.

Textron Pres. Royal Little late last week offered a bone to workers protesting the company's mill closings.

Little offered to keep operating the Jackson mill at Nashua, provided 700 workers turn out the same production now done by 1,500, and provided he makes a 10% profit. The other Nashua mill which makes blankets, employing 2,500, is expected to be closed down by the end of the year.

Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R., N.H.) who heads the special subcommittee of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, last week began to investigate the financial manipulations of Textron, Inc. and its president, Royal Little, at the request of the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO.

Little's contention that he closed the mills because he can get more produced for less pay in the South and in Puerto Rico was refuted by Emil Rieve, TWUA general president.

Rieve bluntly accused Little of placing the blame for his actions on New England workers in an effort to "throw a smokescreen around speculations which are undermining the entire textile industry."

REVIEWING the history of Textron, the TWUA president showed how Little developed a small rayon company into a textile empire with an annual business of $100 million by buying healthy mills, milking them of their assets and then dumping them on the market piece-meal.

"I cannot even begin to describe all of these transactions and what they mean," Rieve told the subcommittee. "I do not even pretend to understand all of them. This is a job for expert investigators who have the power of subpoena. We have asked for this investigation in the hope that your committee will undertake the job—not for us, but for the American public."

Outlining the methods by which Textron acquired the Nashua mill for $10½ million (it had a book value of $12 million) and within a few months took $9½ million out of it, Rieve said the profits, surplus and working capital of the mill went for speculation elsewhere.

"Mr. Little has not used Nashua as a mill," Rieve said. "He has used it as a mine—a gold mine. He has mined and stripped it. Now he is ready to kill the whole enterprise, and destroy the city of Nashua, for a few dollars more.

"DO not be deceived by Mr. Little's statement that he now wants to sell the mill as a unit. If you had not started this investigation there would not have been such talk from him.

"His own original statement said the property would be disposed of in the way which produced the most money. This would mean that by now the title of Nashua's machinery would be held by mills in Zanzibar or Guatemala. The real estate would already be pledged for use as a warehouse or cowpasture."

To prove his point, Rieve recounted the histories of other mills bought, milked and scrapped by Textron. He also warned both the South and Puerto Rico against being taken in by the talk of Little.

"I would not feel free to come here today if Mr. Little simply transferred his operation from one section to another—from north to south, for instance. If the threat of death to Nashua meant a breath of life to some other city, my concern would be help for Nashua, not an attack on mill management.

"But this is a different issue here. The operations of Textron are a very different matter. We have, in Nashua, not a city threatened by competition, but a city about to be crushed by a by-product, an incident, in the financial manipulations of one man.

"There is no 'empire building' in Textron, except an empire for Roy Little. His kind of profit-seeking does not produce jobs for others—it destroys them."

Rieve, calling Textron "a racket," asked the Senate subcommittee to check the operations for legality and, if it found the operations to be legal, to decide whether legislation is necessary to curb such practices in the future.

Mayor Oswald S. Maynard and other citizens of this town of 35,000, which is just 40 miles north of Boston, feel that they have won an initial victory through the investigation forced by TWUA.

They point out that Little originally planned to sell the huge mill piece by piece but has been stopped by the current investigation and another threatened by Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Neb.) who heads the Senate Small Business Committee.

Wherry has expressed a desire to go into the closing of other mills by Little and find out what effect they had upon the small businessmen and merchants whose customers were deprived of jobs.

SEN. STYLES BRIDGES (R., N.H.) a ranking member of Wherry's committee has also threatened to investigate the movement of Textron to Puerto Rico where the company has committed itself to a $12 million dollar expansion plan and will erect five mills.

"I am going to find out how Puerto Rico, where American tax dollars have been poured for years, can lure away American business, leaving stranded thousands of employes who have served as good citizens."

School's Theme Is Politics

"MOST successful to date." That was the stamp of approval placed on the Fourth Annual Ohio CIO Council Summer School which held a week-long session at Tar Hollow Group Camp at Chillicothe.

An all-time record number of students attended, with the registration list showing 10 states, seven CIO International Unions, and a number of CIO Councils represented.

Emphasis was on political action with all of the courses dovetailing into the need for strong PAC work by the members of CIO.

The school had two highlights—a forum on political action conducted by Jack Kroll, president of the Ohio CIO Council and director of CIO-PAC, and a forum at which members of the State Grange and the Ohio Farm Bureau were guests of the Ohio Council in a complete discussion of the joint problems facing agriculture and labor.

KROLL pointed out that "when unions were weak, the bosses did not bother about legislation. But when unions grew strong and made great gains through collective bargaining, then the bosses took their money-bags to the halls of Congress and the state legislature, and you know the results.

"Victory for the liberal candidates endorsed by CIO-PAC from President Truman right down the line can, should, and must be attained. Certainly it is going to be a tough job, but when did we in the labor movement ever get anything the easy way? We didn't get our unions the easy way, and we certainly won't keep them if we are afraid of a tough job."

Continuing the emphasis on political action was a course taught by Secy.-Treas. William Lavelle of the Ohio CIO Council and Ohio CIO-PAC, who stressed the why and the how of effective political action.

Nearly 30 farmers, Grange and Farm Bureau members, engaged in a spirited discussion with CIO on the joint problems facing labor and agriculture, and the means for combatting those problems. Joseph W. Fichter, Master of the State Grange, hailed the forum as an outstanding achievement, and called for many more discussions between the farmer and the worker.

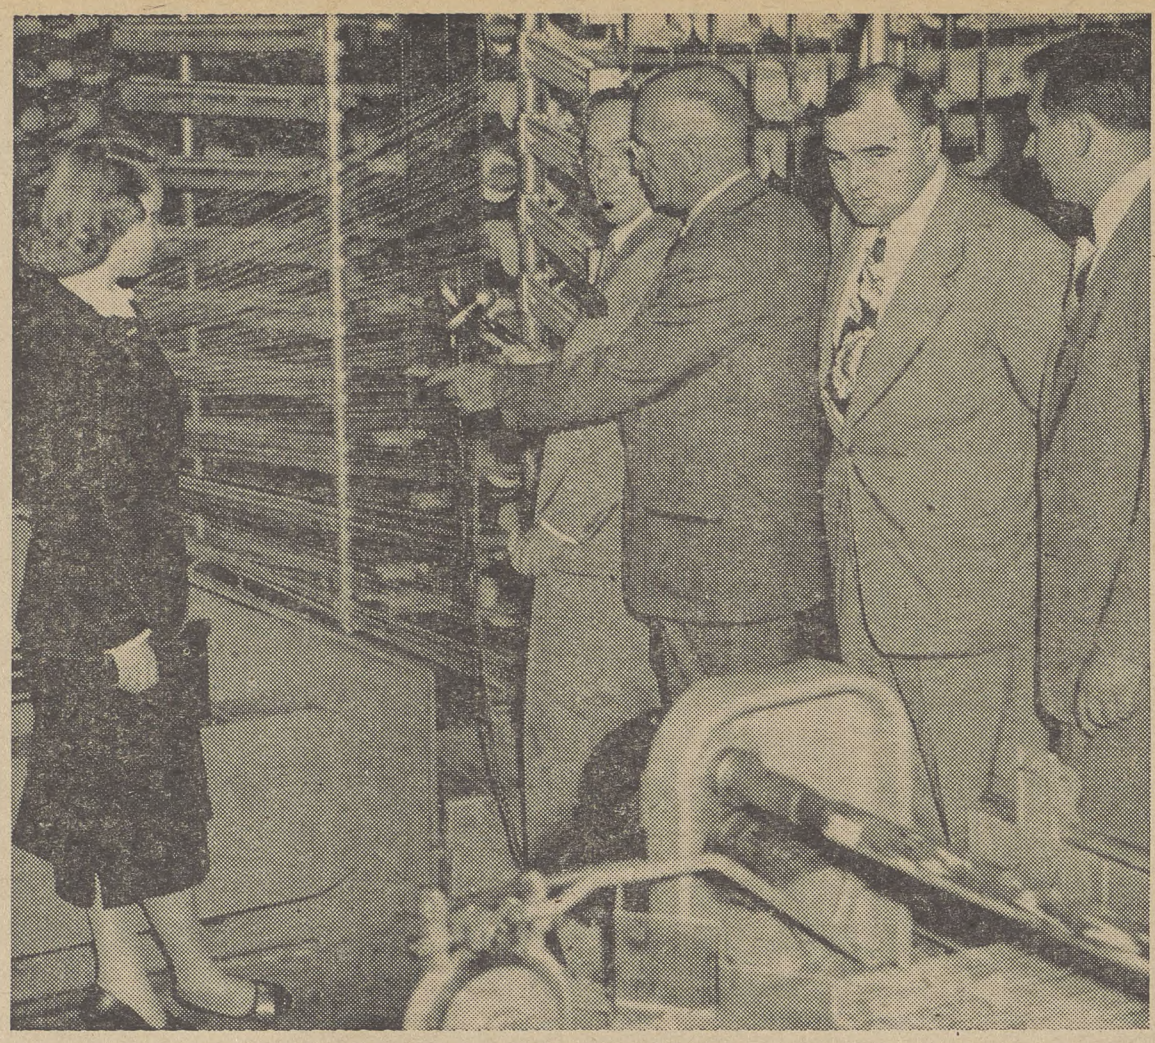
UAW Liquid Assets Total 2 Million

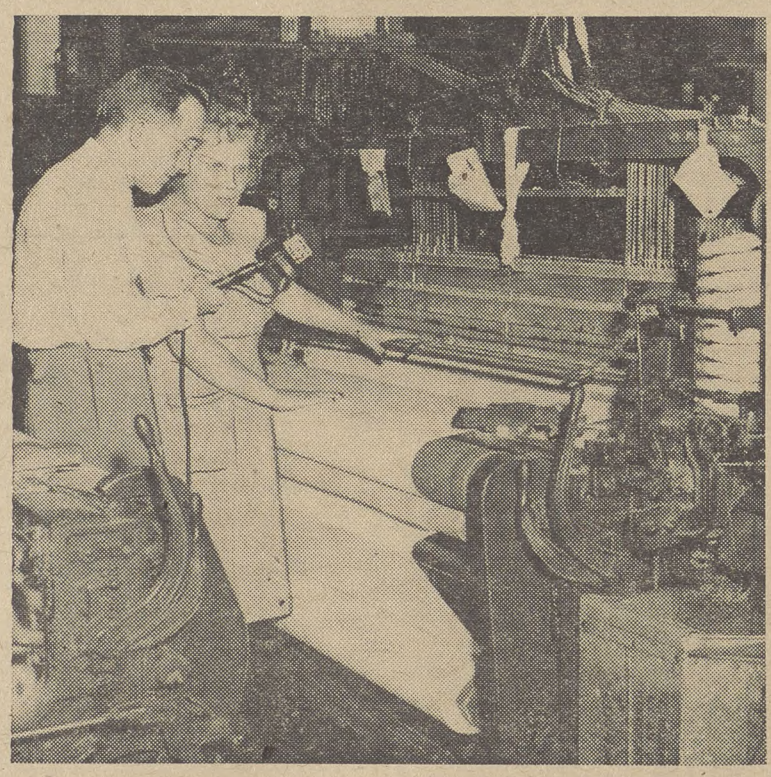
With liquid assets totaling $2,032,391.02 on August 31, the CIO Auto Workers is in the "soundest financial position it has been in a great number of years," according to UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

Mazey made public the union's quarterly financial report for the quarter ending Aug. 31.

The total liquid assets of the union improved during the quarter by $585,437.80, Mazey said. During July the union purchased $500,407.06 worth of U. S. Certificates of Indebtedness, bringing the total amount of union funds invested in government bonds to $801,521.97.

Good Labor Relations Go on Air





The Columbia Broadcasting Co., left the ranting about a few strikes to others and focused its "Cross Section—USA" program on a good example of happy relations. The Forstmann Woolen Mills, Garfield, N. J., under contract with the CIO Textile Workers, was the scene of the last "Cross Section" broadcast of the season. Winding up the broadcast from Washington, D. C., CIO Publicity Director Allan L. Swim and Chamber of Commerce representative Reuben Siverson commented briefly.

Decertification is Defeated By Textile Union in Crucial Poll

CIO Textile Workers last week won an NLRB decertification election by a vote of 671 to 484 at the key unit of the big Cone chain, Proximity Mill, Greensboro, N. C. This is the first decertification election held in the textile industry in the South.

Agitation by employers for decertification has been fairly widespread in the South. It is expected that the victory at the Proximity Mill will slow up this type of anti-union activity. The following facts on the background of the election were reported by TWUA Exec. Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi.

Herman Cone, head of the chain, has built a big reputation in the industry as a paternalistic type of employer. The day before the election at Greensboro, Cone shut off machines on all three shifts and called all hands to a meeting where he almost tearfully told the crowd that if they voted for the TWUA they would be voting against "friendly" relations with the company.

Although Herman Cone himself and his various relatives, all officers of the Company, have not openly indulged in anti-union propaganda, his superintendents and foremen have exerted all kinds of pressure on individual employes to quit the TWUA. A well-financed outfit with headquarters in Greensboro, calling itself the "Stoogies", engages in elaborate anti-union propaganda, including circulation of the now completely standardized incitations to racial and religious prejudice which almost all Southern employers now use.

The Cones, an orthodox Jewish family, have never protested or taken steps to prohibit the circulation among their employes of literature containing anti-semitic smears directed at TWUA and CIO officials.

New PAC Filmstrip Shows How It's Done

A new sound filmstrip—Election Day is the Pay-Off—which tells local PAC people exactly what to do on election day, has been produced by the National PAC and is being distributed by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Army Will Use ILWU Labor

STRIKING West Coast CIO Longshoremen scored a victory over the Waterfront Employers Association when the Army backtracked on its threat to recruit non-strikers from the streets and accepted the union's offer to supply stevedores through the union hiring hall.

The struck employers association, clinging to its new slogan, "No more business with Harry Bridges and communist party-line leadership," has refused to carry out its contracts with the Army. The union offered to loan military cargoes handled by non-association concerns. By-passing the Waterfront Employers, the Army accepted the suggestion.

Meanwhile, the union is pressing for immediate action in ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges' $750,000 libel suit against the WEA and the Pacific American Shipowners Association.

The suit states that "By referring to plaintiff in the context of said statement . . . it was the purpose and intention of said defendants to publicly impute membership in the said Communist Party to plaintiff herein."

Bridges has been cleared of such charges in two deportation hearings and by the U. S. Supreme Court.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

MIKE! MIKE!

GLAD YOU CAME RIGHT OVER, JIM! THE TAILOR IS JUST DOWN THE BLOCK!

LET'S GO SEE HIM!

THIS IS JIM BARRY, MR. STEETCHER! HE'LL EXPLAIN WHAT THIS IS ALL ABOUT!

GLAD TO MEET YOU, JIM.... READ PLENTY ABOUT YOU. HOPE YOU UNDERSTAND WHY I CAN'T JUST GIVE OUT NAMES AND ADDRESSES WITHOUT....

I UNDERSTAND... AND AN EXPLANATION IS DUE YOU! THEN IT'LL BE UP TO YOU TO DECIDE TO HELP US OR NOT!

FAIR ENOUGH....

POP STORM.... BECAUSE OF HIS EXPERIENCE AND SELF-SACRIFICE AND HONESTY.... IS THE REAL SPARK BEHIND OUR ELECTION CAMPAIGN IN THIS COMMUNITY.... WELL-- HE'S BEEN KIDNAPPED BY CERTAIN UNKNOWN PEOPLE IN ORDER TO CRIPPLE LABOR'S ELECTION CAMPAIGN!

HMMM.... I READ ABOUT IT IN THE PAPERS-- BUT I DIDN'T KNOW THE REASON FOR HIS KIDNAPPING....

THAT'S THE REASON! IN THE FIGHT, MY FRIEND, WOODY WILLIAMS WAS BEATEN UP... BUT HE ACCIDENTALLY TORE OFF A PIECE OF THE LINING FROM THE JACKET OF ONE OF THE KIDNAPPERS....

I UNDERSTAND... THAT PIECE OF LINING HAD THE LAUNDRY SERIAL NUMBER AND THAT'S HOW YOU TRACED IT HERE!

RIGHT! NOW WILL YOU TELL US WHO BELONGS TO THAT SUIT?

YOUNG MAN.... I'M A SMALL BUSINESS.... AND ALMOST ALL MY CUSTOMERS ARE WORKING PEOPLE.... I'VE LEARNED THAT IF THEY HAVE A STRONG UNION AND GOOD WAGES-- MY BUSINESS IS GOOD BECAUSE MY CUSTOMERS CAN AFFORD TO PATRONIZE MY BUSINESS....

SO WHAT'S GOOD FOR LABOR-- IS GOOD FOR ME AND EVERY OTHER SMALL BUSINESS MAN! THAT INCLUDES THE ELECTIONS AND THE MEN WE ELECT! I'LL GIVE YOU THE NAME OF THE MAN WHO LEFT THAT SUIT HERE TO BE CLEANED!

THE MAN'S NAME IS STAN HALLES.... AND HE LIVES AT 192 CORT.... APARTMENT 14! THAT'S ON THE TOP FLOOR....

CIO Fights Louisiana Dixecrats

DOWN in Louisiana and Alabama — unless some changes are made — voters won't be able to mark Truman's name on the November election ballots.

It won't be there, thanks to the Dixiecrats.

The Louisiana legislature, in special session, appeared ready to approve legislation which would permit the Truman-Barkley ticket to appear on the November ballot—but under some party name other than "Democrat."

The New Orleans CIO Council protested the proposal and instructed CIO representatives in Baton Rouge, state capital, to insist that Truman and Barkley be tagged nothing but what they are—regular Democrats.

The maneuver by which the President's name was ordered kept off the ballot was a "political strong-arm display that has stripped the Dixiecrat movement of its sham front," says a statement of the New Orleans CIO Industrial Union Council.

"This action was intended, in effect, to disfranchise thousands of regular party Democrats in the November election. Some, of course, will not attempt the involved 'write-in' routine. Loyal Democrats who do 'write-in' for the party's regular nominees can expect a high percentage of 'spoiled ballots.'

The New Orleans IUC referred to the Dixiecrats as "the same people who cried at Philadelphia that their rights, as a minority, had been swept aside. They had voting rights at the convention; they would deny voting rights at home to those who approve the Philadelphia convention's acts."

REPUBLICANS and Dixiecrats are following the same political pattern, the Council charges, and they have the "same underlying thought and aim—maintenance of the status quo.

"Indeed, the political pattern of the Old Guard Republican and Status Quo Dixiecrat must of necessity have sameness of tune because of sameness of objective. Only the words differ a little.

"It is, therefore, no surprise to find Republicans and Dixiecrats giving to one another indirect aid and comfort.

"Indeed the suspicion grows that, behind all of the smoke, some Dixiecrats intended from the beginning to help, by hypocritical indirection, to elect a Republican president."

Murray Urges Hiring of Handicapped

CIO Pres. Philip Murary has urged all Americans to support Natl. Employ the Physically Handicapped Week, Oct. 3-9. He asked CIO union members to encourage their employers to act and to offer complete cooperation by the union.

"The CIO," said Murray, "is deeply concerned over the discrimination in employment which is traditionally practiced against the aged, the minority groups, and the physically handicapped."

North Carolina PAC For Truman

WITH the taste of recent gubernatorial and senatorial primary victories still fresh in their memories, delegates from CIO unions throughout North Carolina have formed a permanent state Political Action Committee.

The first convention, held in Greensboro on Sept. 12, endorsed Pres. Truman and Sen. Barkley for president and vice president and vehemently denounced both the Dixiecrats and the Wallaceites.

A pledge to consult with unions on all matters affecting labor was given the delegates by Kerr Scott, Democratic candidate for governor and certain winner in the November election. Scott won his nomination with labor support.

"We've heard lying newspapers and subsidized radio commentators telling us to go back," he said. "Back to what? The age of Hoovercrats and 1932, when we were closer to economic collapse than we have ever been."

ASSISTANT Organizational Director R. J. Thomas also attacked misrepresentation by the press, charging that it perpetuates the myth that the high cost of living is due to high wages. "But labor has been the smallest factor in the cost of living rises," he asserted.

Later Thomas told the delegates it was labor's job to see that men elected as Democrats both acted and voted like Democrats.

Every CIO local in the state was urged to set up a political action committee. A call was also issued to each local for financial and physical assistance in the drive against the state's current infantile paralysis epidemic.

The convention named E. L. Sandefur, national CIO representative, as executive director of the State PAC. Other officers are: Howard Parker, TWUA, PAC chairman; Charles Goodwin, UAW, vice chairman, and Emmett Akridge, Steelworkers, recording secretary.

Prior to the formation of a permanent PAC, North Carolina CIO unions functioned politically through the statewide United Labor Political Action Committee, composed of CIO, AFL Railroad Brotherhoods and independent telephone unions. The new PAC is expected to coordinate political efforts of CIO locals more effectively, and CIO participation in the joint committee will be continued.

PAC'S slogan that "a big vote is a good vote" has been substantiated by the Gallup poll.

Polling persons on whether they were going to vote or not and on their presidential preferences, Gallup discovered that among those uncertain or not planning to vote, the greatest number would favor Truman.

The Deweyites are much more determined to get to the polls than the Trumanites. Of those absolutely certain they will vote, 52% favored Dewey; 37% favored Truman. Of those who are uncertain whether they will vote, 46% were for Truman, and 41% prefer Dewey. Among those not planning to cast a ballot, 27% prefer Dewey, 37% favor Truman.

Those are the people PAC means when it says "get out the vote."

Awards Offered Best Anti-Bias Stories

Annual awards totaling $1000 for the news or news magazine stories which do most to further interfaith understanding or combat prejudice were announced last week by the Newspaper Guild of New York, CIO, and the Irving Geist Foundation.

First awards will be made in December 1948 for three news stories, feature stories, editorials, columns, or cartoons published in New York newspapers or in news magazines edited and circulated in New York City. The selection will be made from items which have appeared between Jan. 1 and Nov. 20 of this year.

Irving Geist, who established the Foundation and is making the awards possible, is an East Side (New York) boy who made a fortune in manufacturing. He has been active in many philanthropies.

"Best turnout ever, since it got around we serve steaks on the training table."

N. J. Paperworkers Chalk Up 14½c

One of the largest wage increases won this year in the paper industry has been chalked up by the CIO Paper Workers at three New Jersey paperboard mills.

The new contracts at the Clifton Paperboard Co., the Whippany Paperboard Co., and McEwan Brothers provided a straight 14½c hourly increase. This brought total hourly gains since V-J Day to 91c at Whippany, 61c at Clifton and 58c at McEwan.

Other benefits included an additional holiday, bringing the total to seven; three week's vacation after 10 years, 5 and 10c shift differentials and agreement by the company to discuss a pension plan. A company-paid welfare program providing life and accident insurance and death benefits is already in operation.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, reports that the employes of the Eppinger & Russell plant in Jacksonville, Fla., have voted to be represented by the CIO. Seventy-seven ballots were cast for IUMSWA and 22 for the AFL. Director Gallagher also reports that the workers of the Franklin Smelting & Refining Company, Philadelphia, Pa., voted 100% for a union shop.

The Railroad Division of the IUMSWA resisted the attempts of the AFL to raid its Maintenance of Ways and miscellaneous locals on the Santa Fe Railway. The full report of this election is contained in a news story elsewhere in this issue of the CIO News. The writer would like to point to this significant victory as proof that CIO organization on the railroads is of such great benefit to the employes that it has, in just a few years completely won their loyalty. The writer assigned Frank Deutsch, Howard McNamara, William Lewis, Gobel F. Cravens, Howard Rizer, W. Don Ellinger and A. B. Martin of the CIO Staff to help in this election. Congratulations are due all those who worked on this campaign.

United Packinghouse Workers have won an NLRB election at the Oklahoma City, Okla., plant of Armour & Co., Regional Director Robert McVay reports. Five hundred thirteen workers voted for the CIO and only 200 for the AFL.

The settlement of the wage dispute between the CIO Association of Communication Equipment Workers and the Western Electric Co. was aided by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the writer when they were requested by the union at the eleventh hour to take part in negotiations.

President Murray met with the head of the Western Electric Co. while the writer conferred with ACEW Pres. Ernest Weaver of the ACEW and the negotiating committee.

WOODWORKERS WIN VICTORIES

George Brown, director of Organization of the CIO Woodworkers, reports that an election at U. S. Gypsum, Jackson, Miss., resulted in 163 votes for the IWA and 138 votes against. Director Brown also reports that the employes of the Semans Lumber Company, Marysville, Calif., voted 15 to 1 for a union shop.

Reg. Dir. Loren J. Houser reports that the Newcastle Laundry in Newcastle, Ind., has been added to the ranks of the CIO. H. L. MacNamara, CIO field representative, and Pres. Earl Blackburn of the Newcastle Industrial Union Council, organized the plant. The laundry has been turned over to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Director Houser also reports that the United Paper Workers have won an NLRB election against the AFL in the Sangamon Paper Mills Company in Eaton, Ind. Field Rep. Ted Covey and George McGrew conducted this campaign.

CIO Rep. T. D. duCuennois reports that the UAW-CIO was chosen in an NLRB election as the collective bargaining representative by the workers of the American Brakeblok Division of the American Brake Shoe Corp., Winchester, Va. The UAW-AFL and the IAM received only one vote each in this election.

The writer spent several days last week at the national convention of the CIO Rubber Workers. It was in this industry and during the organization of this union that the CIO had its first great battles with huge corporations in 1936.

The writer took part with this union in signing the first contract with a major rubber company in 1937 after a ten week strike. Today the union has become a great force within the industry, utilized its power for the good of its membership.

The convention was faced with important issues, all of which were handled in a democratic manner with much debate by the delegates on the convention floor.

While in Omaha at the Rubber Workers convention the writer took occasion to meet with representatives of the ACEW, AUTW-CIO (long lines) and a committee from the CWA to discuss the phone workers mutual problems.

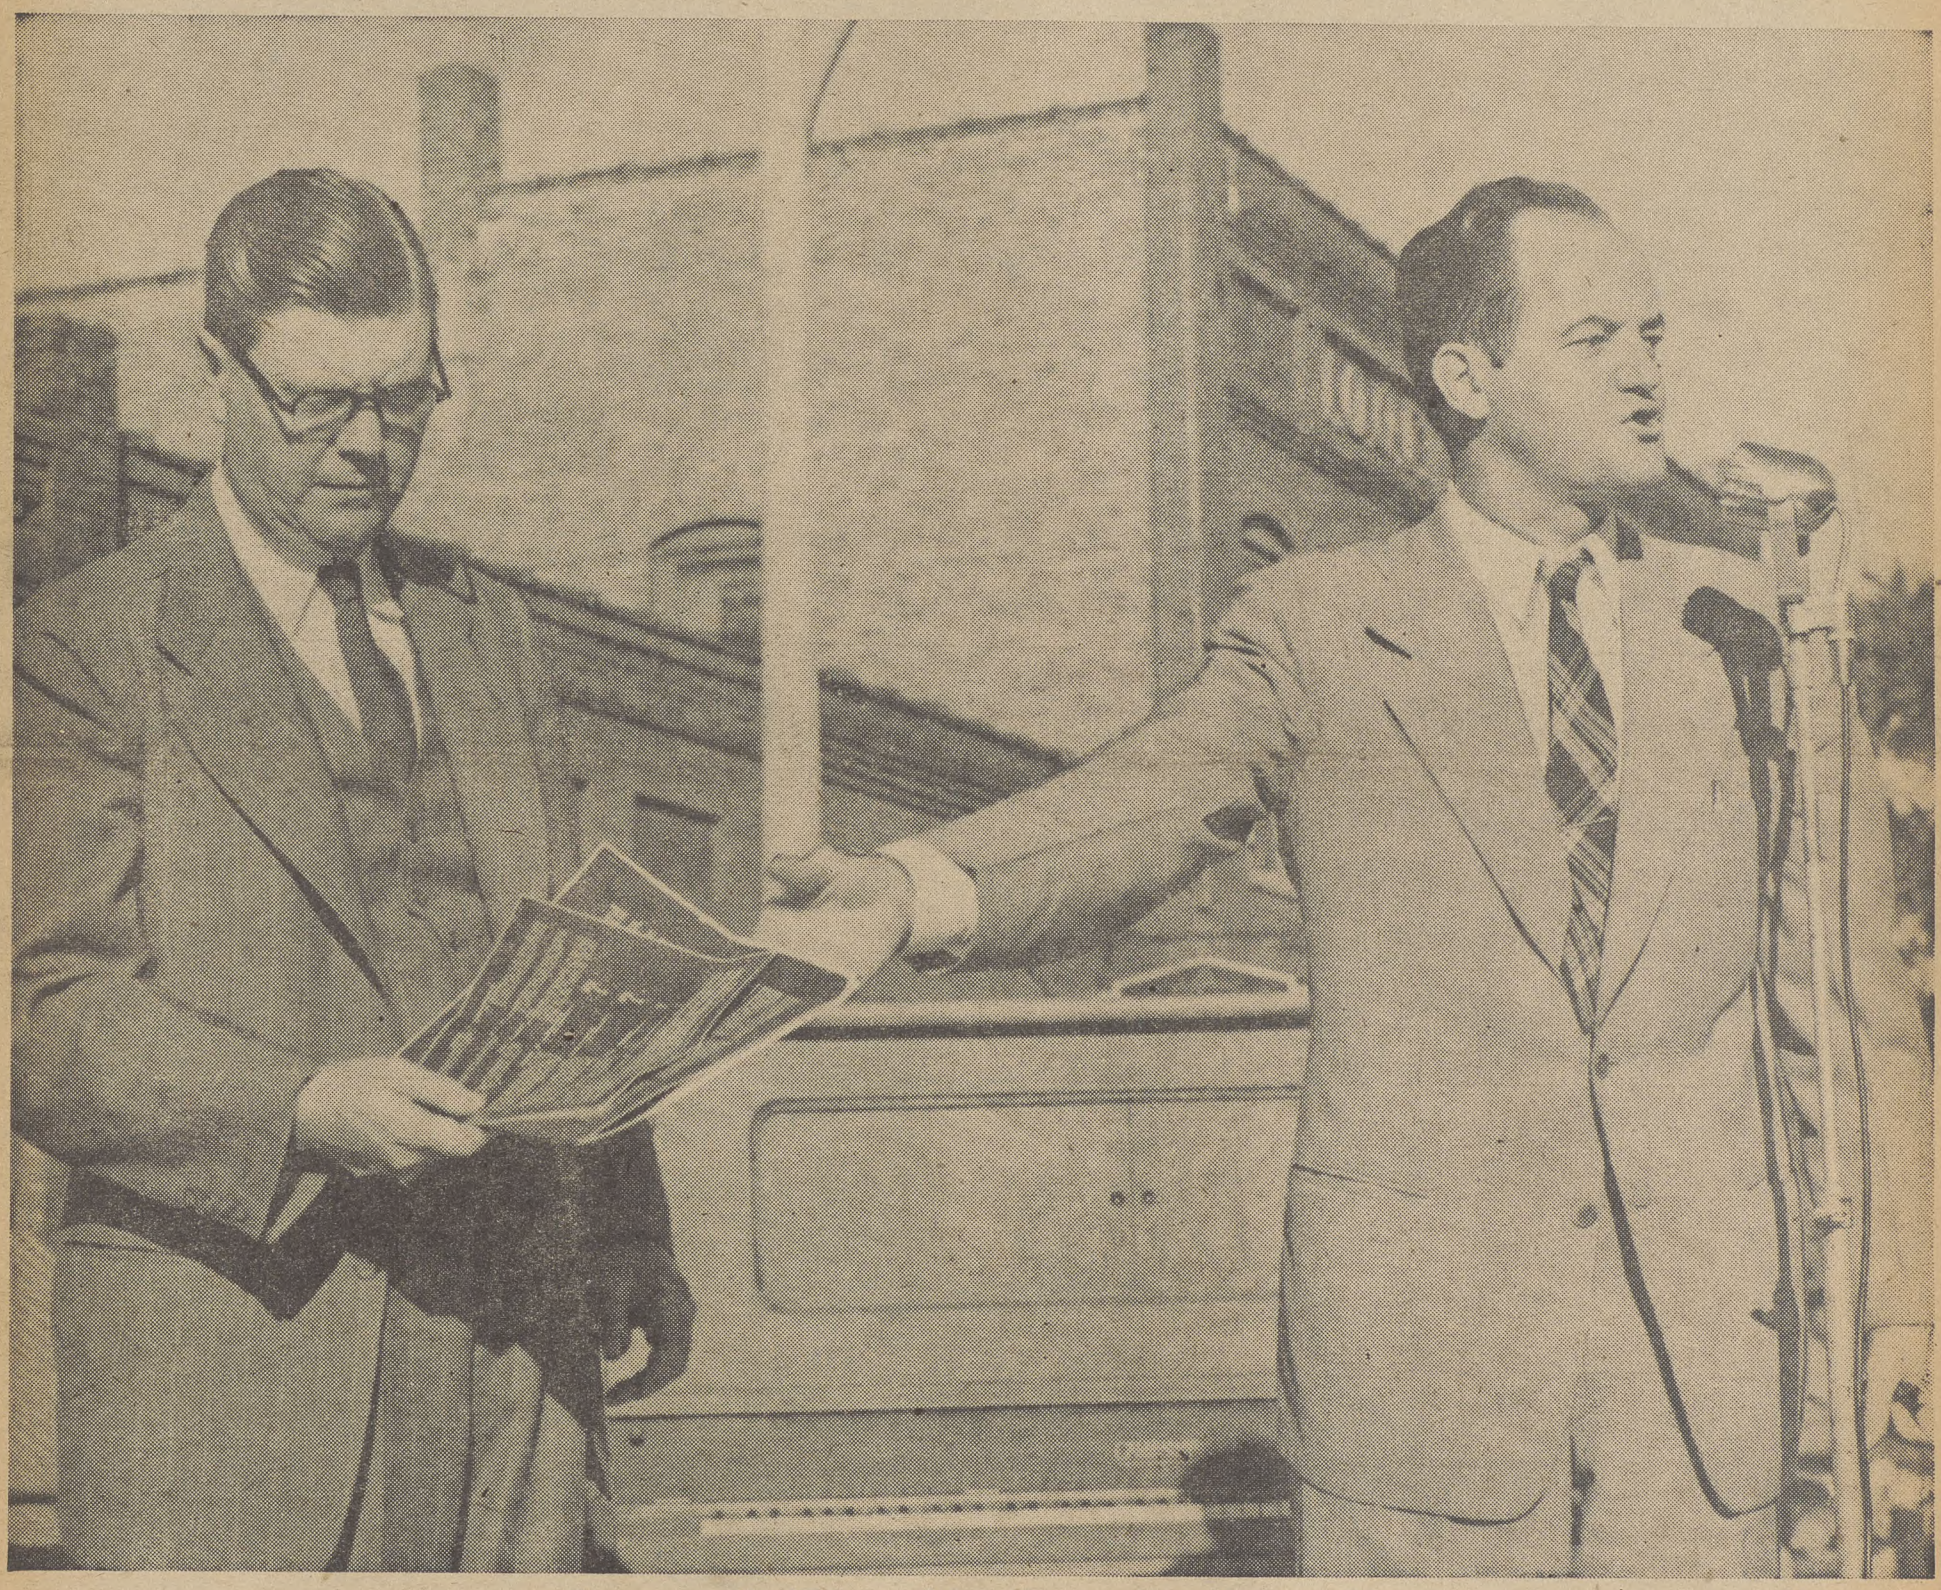
'3d PARTY NO LONGER A FACTOR'



Around The Nation Politically

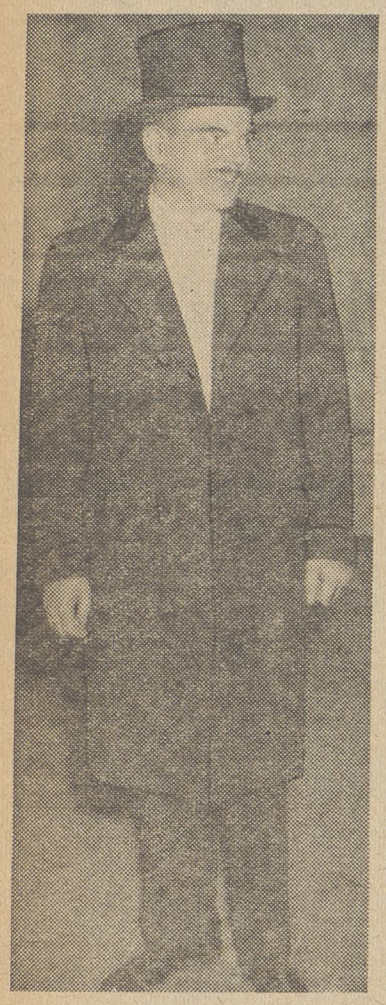
IN MINNESOTA: Hubert Humphrey was making a bangup campaign against Sen. Joseph Ball (R.). Above, Humphrey dramatically offers Mayor Arthur Fensith, of Kenyon, Minn., $100 (and $100 for the Ball Campaign fund) if he can find in the official text a statement Ball claims he made on Jan. 21 concerning co-op taxation. Fensith couldn't find it. See pages 6 and 7.

IN WASHINGTON, D. C.: PAC Dir. Jack Kroll declared that registration so far indicates that the CIO's goal of 60,000,000 voters may well be realized—with a liberal victory as the result. Kroll also declared the third party was no longer a serious factor. See page 8.

IN NEW YORK: Henry Wallace and his campaign manager, C. B. (Beaney) Baldwin, publicly got in a wrangle over indorsements of liberal Democrats. Wallace opposed it; Baldwin was for it. Wallace declares he doesn't know where Chester Bowles or Helen Gahagan Douglas stand on the peace issue. See page 8.

IN ALBANY: The Democratic Party revealed that Thomas E. Dewey had told a VFW delegation that civil service workers were "mediocre" and that the system should be abolished in the state and nationally. He opposes the Civil Service automatic advancement system. See page 2.

Dewey: 'Abolish Civil Service'



GOV. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republicans' Presidential candidate, feels that all civil service employes are "mediocre" and that if he gets his way, "the Present civil service system in the national, state and local governments would not exist."

He made those startling statements in a raging tone while a Veterans of Foreign Wars legislative committee listened in amazement in his office at Albany.

The details are revealed in the current issue of "The Democrat," published by the Democratic National Committee.

Dewey's outburst came when the VFW Committee asked him his position in regard to the promotion of Civil Service employes after 10 years' service.

The meeting, an annual affair at the request of the Governor, took place last February.

THE veterans committee presented a 12-point legislative program. Included were proposals for limiting the activities of the Communists; provisions for off-track betting in the state, and the controversial civil service recommendations.

Each item of the program was considered in turn. When the item concerning civil service was reached, Dewey became enraged.

He stated heatedly that he was very much opposed to automatic promotion for civil service employes after 10 years' service. Turning to Burke, he said: "Burke, you know as well as I do that all civil service employes are mediocre at their best. If I had my way the present civil service system in force in the national, state and local governments would not exist."

Then he shouted that he felt that government employes should be subject to removal like any private employe. He added, "If he isn't smart enough to get another job he should get out."

Dewey continued his tirade despite the shocked attitudes of the legislative comittee. He said, "Anyone who cannot advance himself in 10 years should be fired. If they can't get promoted through an examination, they should get out, but the trouble is these people couldn't make a living in private industry and now they want promotion without taking the examination. I will veto such a bill if it reaches my desk."

A member of the VFW committee pointed out that this attitude was contrary to the civil service system. Dewey declared loudly:

"You'd have me paying those sons of sea cooks for just breathing and it will not happen, not while I'm governor. If I had my way I'd abolish the civil service."

The meeting broke up shortly after this outburst. Lockwood conducted the legislative committee from the Governor's room and asked them to "please not reveal" what the governor had said. "It is my feeling," said adviser Lockwood in a worried tone, "that this conversation should be off the record."

Even Clyde Lewis, Republican member of the legislative committee expressed shock and surprise at Dewey's attitude. "Why," he said, "he talks like a tryant."

Oil Workers Man 500-Mile Picket Line

By RAY DAVIDSON

BROTHER, did you ever man a picket line stretching for 500 miles across the country as the birds travel and a heap farther by land?

That's what CIO's Oil Workers International Union is doing in California these days.

Pickets are marching around the huge refineries in the Long Beach area, along the pipe lines that wind through the hills and central valley, among the derricks dotting the landscape, and at the cluster of refineries in the San Francisco Bay area.

Fifteen thousand Oil Workers are fighting in the toughest battle the oil industry has ever offered as their strike drew to the close of its first month.

It has become apparent that the battle no longer is one of wages, but a survival of the union. Six major companies continue to act as a unit and refuse to move upward from their wage offer of 12½ cents per hour increase.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight, who has been active in the union since 1933 and president since 1940, said that the companies are putting up the toughest fight he has ever encountered in the industry.

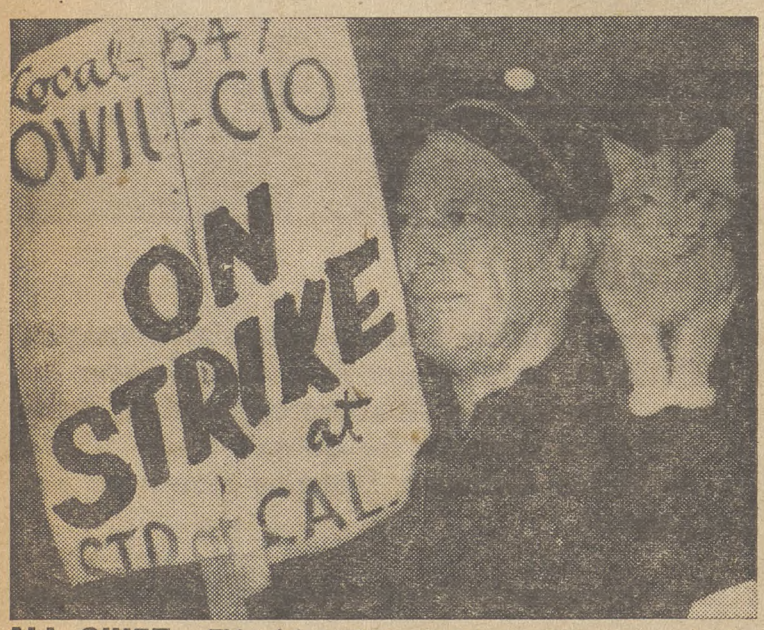
The battle along the 500-mile strike front is now principally a war of nerves. The companies are seeking to break strike morale by circulating rumors and exaggerating the number of scabs in the plants and the amount of production being achieved.

Violence in the strike has virtually disappeared. In most cases, policemen have lessened their scab-escorting activities.

While the oil industry estimates California production of gasoline now at 75% of normal, careful surveys by the union indicate production is only at the rate of 32% of normal, with 20% of this coming from plants not struck.

Motorists report that whatever the production figure is, the product is bad because even the best cars are making a lot of "ping-ping-ping" noises as they burn the stuff the filling stations are offering.

The union is asking 21c an hour increase, a reduction of its original demand of 30c. Company are offering a uniform 12½c.



ALL QUIET: This picture shows that tranquillity has supplanted the turmoil on the picket line of the CIO Oil Workers at the Standard Oil refinery at Richmond, Calif., where a few weeks ago members of other unions were aided by the police in entering the plant. But the strikers are not fooled, because the oil companies are adamant in refusing the strikers' demands.

Suit Aimed at Getting Housing For Negroes

The American Jewish Congress, the National Assoc. for the Advancement of Colored People, and the American Civil Liberties Union last week announced the filing of a brief in the suit the three organizations are sponsoring against Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. to halt discrimination against Negroes at the Stuyvesant Town housing project, New York City.

The brief was filed in the Appellate Division, First Department (Manhattan and The Bronx) on an appeal from a lower court decision which refused to disturb Metropolitan's admitted rule against admitting Negroes to the project. The appeal involves two cases, one by initiated by three rejected Negro applicants and the other by Shad Polier, Vice President of the American Jewish Congress, suing as a taxpayer.

Waterfront Bosses Aided by Hartley

STRUCK West Coast ship and waterfront employers, who have turned down every offer of negotiation, mediation and arbitration to settle the month-old walkout, have seized on a new strike-breaking suggestion advanced by an authority in that field—Rep. Fred A. Hartley.

Hartley, rebuffed by failure of an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction to avert the strike, suggested that Congress be called into a special session to legislate a strike-breaking device.

One of Hartley's fellow Republicans, however, took an entirely different view. Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon urged instead that employers get down to brass tacks and end the shipping tieup through direct negotiations and arbitration. Morse was the first impartial arbitrator in the West Coast maritime industry, appointed in 1934 by President Roosevelt. He served in that capacity for three years.

Meanwhile, the striking unions were busy making proposals for settlement, all of which the employers rejected. Latest such offer came from Vincent J. Malone, president of the independent Marine Firemen's Union.

ASK BENEFITS: CIO Longshoremen and members of other maritime unions circle in front of the San Francisco City Hall protesting the failure to pay them unemployment relief. The Longshoremen have been on strike a month in an effort to make the ship-loading concerns bargain. Other maritime unions are conducting a sympathy strike.

PROBE OF N. Y. CITY CIO ORDERED

A THREE-MAN committee has been selected by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to conduct a hearing on charges against the Greater New York (city) CIO Council and on a request that the council's charter be revoked.

Members of the committee are Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, Pres. Martin Wagner of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and Pres. Joseph Froesch of the Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers.

The hearing will be held at 10 a.m., Oct. 14, in the board room at CIO headquarters in Washington, D. C.

The committee's findings will be reported to the CIO Executive Board Nov. 17 at Portland, Ore., and both groups engaged in the dispute will have an opportunity to appeal to the CIO convention if dissatisfied with the board's ruling.

Murray notified the accusers and the following officers of the city council of the hearing so that they may appear: Pres. James Durkin, Secy.-Treas. Saul Mills, Vice-Presidents Sam Burt, Ewart Guinier, Paul Palazzi, Aaron Schneider, Kenneth Sherbell and Ruth Young.

Hearings are expected to start within 10 days. The committee's findings will be reported to the CIO Executive Board Nov. 17 at Portland, Ore., and both groups engaged in the dispute will have an opportunity to appeal to the CIO convention the following week if dissatisfied with the Board's ruling.

Charges against the city council were made by two groups—a committee from the New York (state) CIO Council and representatives of three CIO unions.

The state council group, composed of Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Workers, Norma Naughton of the Telephone Workers, Jack Rubenstein of the Textile Workers and Jack Altman of the Retail, Wholesale Union, charged the city council with violating the CIO constitution and the rules governing conduct of CIO councils and with interfering with the operation of CIO unions.

Pres. Samuel Wolchok of Retail, Wholesale; Patrick McGrath of Utility Workers' Local 1-2, and Gustave Faber of Transport Workers' Local 100, accused the council of interfering with the operation of their unions.

AMONG charges made by the state council group were:

"Neglecting and failing to secure united action of locals of national and international unions affiliated with the CIO and thereby failing to protect and advance the interests of working people, industrial unionism and collective bargaining;

"Designedly, through disruptive and irresponsible actions, promoting disunity and discord within the ranks of CIO unions and thereby undermining and irreparably injuring the cause of industrial unionism and the interests of the working men and women which the CIO is committed to serve;

"Aiding and abetting, through divisive tactics, those enemies of labor who seek to destroy our trade unions;

"Thwarting national CIO policy, as definitively expressed and enunciated by the CIO national officers and Executive Board, by deliberately embarking on a course of action in a contravention of and contrary thereto, and thereby impairing the power of the CIO to accomplish the progressive and humanitarian objectives which it seeks to achieve;

"Publicly and notoriously arrogating to itself powers properly those of other CIO bodies and affiliates;

"Publicly and maliciously falsifying, slandering, vilifying and libelling the CIO, its affiliates and other CIO bodies and members;

"Failing and neglecting to expel and, in fact, continuing to recognize as delegates to the Council persons who were neither members or officers of CIO unions but who, on the contrary, were and are hostile to the CIO;

"Falsely misrepresenting and reporting the number of CIO members represented and affiliated with said City CIO;

"Sending delegates and making contributions to national organizations not recognized by the CIO;

"Failing to prefer charges against and conniving in the neglect of duty, improper expenditures and contributions of funds, monies and facilities, and malfeasance in office of certain of its officers;

"Improperly expending funds of the Council for purposes other than assisting labor and other organizations friendly to the CIO."

THE state group also charged the City Council—

"Wilfully and overtly interfered with the Transport Workers Union's efforts to achieve an essential cost of living increase for its members.

"Interfered with and impeded the efforts of the Utility Workers Union of America, Region 1, to achieve appropriate wage increases.

"Directly and unauthorizedly interfered as a biased partisan in the internal affairs of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union.

"Despite the creation by the CIO of a state-wide body known as New York State CIO-PAC and the grant of complete responsibility for and control of all political activities, has consistently engaged in political activities in opposition to and interference with the activity and program of New York State CIO-PAC. Further, the City CIO through its secretary, Saul Mills, openly and notoriously attacked New York State CIO-PAC for proceeding in keeping with the established policy of the national CIO."

UAW Says GM Knifed Course

THE program under which teachers for workers' classes were provided by the Univ. of Michigan for four years has been ordered suspended by the university's board of regents pending a "study" of the Service.

Victor Reuther, Auto Workers' education director, said that pressure exerted on the board by General Motors Corp. was responsible for holding up the program. Some months ago GM complained to the regents about the workers' education program, registering charges against one particular class given last April, on the basis that economic material slanted by the CIO to misrepresent business was used.

These charges were shown to be completely unfounded, Reuther said, but the regents used them "as the excuse for holding up the entire service while they 'study' the program." They're still studying it, Reuther declared, and meanwhile "workers will get no service from the University this fall."

Reuther urged all UAW locals in Michigan to protest to the regents, asking them to explain to the workers of Michigan whose taxes are helping maintain the University, why they "have to wait for education service," while thousands of dollars are being spent to provide service "for real estate salesmen, lawyers, doctors and business people of all types."

Iowa Parley Finds More Politics Needed

A more active participation by union members in political affairs is needed to get improvements in the state laws affecting labor, it was brought out at a study conference on compensation laws and plant safety sponsored by the Iowa CIO Council.

The conference, held in Des Moines Sept. 18-19, was attended by 47 CIO men and women from unions throughout Iowa. Secy.-Treas. Kenneth Everhart of the council was in charge.

Sen. Ferguson Accused of Holding

'Swank Parties Paid For By Another'

SEN. ELMER THOMAS (D. Okla.) has threatened to tell the public of "swank parties" held by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R. Mich.) but "paid for by another."

Ferguson is running for re-election against a PAC-indorsed Democratic candidate, the former Congressman Frank Hook.

SEN. HOMER FERGUSON

The threat was in a letter written by Thomas to Ferguson last February but not revealed until last week when Drew Pearson used it in his column.

Thomas wrote the letter after a Senate investigation subcommittee headed by Ferguson began probing charges that Thomas made speeches on the Senate floor designed to influence the cotton market.

It also was charged that Thomas, his wife and his friends had "bet" their money in advance on cotton.

After receiving the letter Ferguson apparently decided to "call off the dogs." Since February little had been heard of the investigation until Pearson printed excerpts from the letter in his column.

The Thomas letter referred to the Chrysler Airtemps Sales Corp. and the Charles R. Beltz Co., Detroit concerns in which members of Ferguson's immediate family are stockholders. The letter said:

"AGAIN I must remind you that you and your committee went on a 'fishing expedition' in an effort to develop evidence to destroy me . . . As stated—inasmuch as I do not have access to the United States Treasury and to investigators and detectives, I will be compelled to defend myself against further alleged charges on the Senate floor. I assure you that I do not want to be driven to making public data in the form of charges against you and your committee.

"Personally it should be of no concern . . . where you have spent your summer vacations, whom with, who paid the bills, or when and how you have entertained your friends here in Washington. That is your private business—but you must remember that I have private business myself. Swanky parties with all that goes along—including the best of drinks including good champagne — all paid for by another—is not good publicity at any time—and is specially bad in a personal campaign year. Luckily, I am not a candidate this year.

"You will no doubt be surprised to know that among my letters and reports, some not signed—that charges have been made that certain wealthy automobile interests, acting through lady members of their inside organizations, have made gifts of valuable coats, dresses and other items to certain members of your family."

Concerning his connection with the Airtemps and Beltz companies, Ferguson said: "All that is a matter of public record in Michigan."

SEN. ELMER THOMAS

Ferguson last week acknowledged receipt of the letter, termed "just plain lies" the insinuation that he held champagne parties at the expense of Detroit companies and the allegation that his family received expensive gifts from them through women connected with the firms.

Chief Counsel William P. Rogers of the Ferguson committee said that in his opinion the committee does not have "jurisdiction to investigate a senator in the conduct of his legislative duties."

Two Unions Are Hit By Atomic Unit

THE Atomic Energy Commission has ordered two contractors to bar two CIO unions from atomic plants.

The two unions are the United Electrical Workers and the United Public Workers. The contractors are the Argonne Laboratory, Chicago, and the new Knolls II Atom Power Laboratory of the General Electric Co.

The order, which accused the two unions of having officers sympathetic to Communism, did not apply to other plants of GE, with which UE has had contractual relations for a number of years.

The commission order, which was supplemented by a similar communication to the NLRB, was signed by Chm. David E. Lilienthal.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray sharply protested in a letter to Lilienthal against the Commission's "blacklisting" of the two unions without even consulting them or "responsible officers of the CIO."

Murray said the CIO "could not accept" the principle upon which the commission took its "unilateral action" against UE and UPW. He said he believed the action was "not within the power of the Commission" and that it was not "in the public interest" to deny workers collective bargaining rights in the manner in which it had been done by the AEC.

He said the commission had gone "far beyond the requirements of security."

Lilienthal criticized GE for failing to act on its own initiative against UE. L. R. Boulware, company vice president, protested, declaring GE has no information about the alleged Communism slant of UE officials other than what appears in the press.

In New York, Lawrence Kammet, public relations director for the Public Workers, declared, "We never did have jurisdiction over any employes of the commission or over anyone working in any plant manufacturing materials in connection with the atomic energy program."

POOR, POOR BUSINESS!

Business and industry are in a terrible financial shape because of their low profits—and if you don't believe it just read the Sept. 25 issue of the NAM News.

It near breaks a man's heart to view the tears which the News sheds because of the situation.

It's downright pitiful—and alarming, too.

Now, for example, says the NAM News:

"In 1947, corporate profits totaled $13 billion, after deduction of taxes and of unspendable inventory appreciation. Like all other dollars, these were of the inflationary variety with considerably less than pre-war buying power. They amounted to 4.1% of sales.

"Dividends payments were $6.9 billion. The remaining $6.1 went part way toward performing the other functions of profit. It was not nearly enough. . .

"How replacement, to say nothing of expansion, is to be financed is a matter of major concern to the whole nation. The present earnings picture is not conducive to attracting new investments, even if heavy personal income taxes weren't siphoning off nearly all of the money which should be available for this purpose. . ."

You'll pardon us, we hope, if at this point we express something stronger than mild skepticism.

But to go on:

"No more serious threat to the national welfare exists at present than the misunderstanding concerning business profits which is being fostered by those who have political and economic axes to grind.

"Misunderstanding as to the profit situation must not be allowed to prevail and responsibility rests upon every businessman to see that the truth is told to the people of his community."

Oh, brother! How can they do it?

Either the NAM News was completely wrong on Sept. 25 or corporations were bankrupt in 1939 when they made $5 billion in profits (after taxes) and just out of the red in 1945 when they rolled in $8.7 billion.

TOM DEWEY IS GREAT SHOWMAN

Except for Franklin D. Roosevelt, who undoubtedly was king of them all, Thomas E. Dewey is the greatest showman who has played a major role on the national political stage for many, many years.

He plays on the emotions and the prejudices of his audiences in much the same manner that a great artist plays on the keys of an organ.

Ah, yes, Mr. Dewey is wonderful—as a showman.

He has demonstrated time and again on his campaign tour that he's superior to President Truman as a public speaker.

Truman is at his best when talking informally with small groups from the platform of a train. Dewey reaches his greatest heights of oratory when he's in a huge hall or stadium with a microphone in front of him.

Dewey has made some fine speeches about unity and Americanism and the need for solving the world's pressing problems.

With such great talents at his command, it seems a shame and a farce that he has traveled so far and spoken so often without discussing any of the really basic issues of the campaign.

You Must Not Say That!

The Wrong Kind of Remark or a Political Speech May Get You in Trouble

By ALLAN L. SWIM

TWO G-men came into my office, presented credentials and started gathering evidence designed to send Philip Murray to jail.

Three members of the CIO News staff were called before a Federal grand jury—and a short time later the jury placed Murray under indictment.

He was arrested, tried and acquitted. The case went to the U. S. Supreme Court, which ruled he had done nothing wrong.

Another blow had been struck at the group of misguided Americans who are trying to kick an important stone out of the foundation upon which democracy rests.

MURRAY was accused of the "terrible crime" of exercising freedom of expression and freedom of the press.

He was arrested and tried because a statement indorsing a congressional candidate was carried in the CIO News.

Murray was fortunate. He headed a powerful organization and he had the nation's press over the barrel. Editors and publishers could not condone the action taken against him without endangering their own freedom.

But how about others who are not so fortunate?

How about the employes of the Federal Government who believe, with considerable justification, that they will be fired if they express liberal thoughts?

How about the scientists who work on "secret" government projects?

THE "Red hysteria" which was generated in Washington and has now spread throughout the nation is enough to make lovers of democracy shudder in their boots.

And why not?

Persecution has been substituted for prosecution. "Subversive" cases of doubtful merit have been tried in the headlines instead of in the courts.

Rumor and unsubstantiated charges have been substituted for evidence. The accused have been denied the right to face their accusers.

Guilt by association has replaced guilt by action.

And there has been a gradual drift away from the good old American idea that men are innocent until proved guilty.

TOO many persons attempt to shrug the whole thing off by assuming that "where there is so much smoke there must be some fire."

Sure there's fire—but imagine what would happen to a fire department that poured tons of water into every building in a block in the hope of smothering a hidden blaze in one tiny basement.

Or try to picture what would happen to the policeman who fired into a crowd and wounded a dozen persons in an attempt to capture an escaping burgler.

Our complaint is not about the desire to put out the fires of subversion and disloyalty. We're opposed to the methods used.

MANY persons have asked me, "How can you—a man who has fought Communism for years—justify your attacks on the House Un-American Activities Committee, which is fighting the Communists?"

The answer is simple. The Reds seek to destroy democracy. The Un-American Activities Committee, either through ignorance or design, has been trampling on the fundamental civil rights upon which democracy rests.

This, in my book, makes the two groups allies — though unwilling and unfriendly ones, to be sure.

THE arrest of Murray, the discharge of government employes on flimsy charges, the wiretapping law-enforcement agencies, the public questioning of witnesses regarding their political beliefs and the effort to keep liberalism out of schools are all part of the same dirty pattern.

It's a pattern which will put the noose around the necks of some who are guilty of subversive activity—and it will hang many who are innocent.

We're not worried about the guilty.

Our concern is for the innocent.

Our fear is that we're heading rapidly toward an era in which citizens opposed to the political party in power cannot speak and write as they wish without suffering heavy reprisal.

Then democracy would be dead.

A POLITICAL INVENTION

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"I dreamed they formed a Congressmen's union!"

Union Men Receive ECA Appointments

Three more U. S. trade union leaders were appointed last week as labor advisors to Economic Cooperation Administration missions in Europe. They are:

Lee R. Smith, 61, since 1924 a vice president of the AFL Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen, and a war-time member of the staff of the War Production Board, who will go to Holland;

Albert L. Wegener, 53, former assistant to the president of the AFL Electrical Workers, who during World War II served as a War Dep't consultant in England and France, who has been appointed ECA labor advisor in Belgium and Luxembourg; and John Gross, 55, former president of the Colorado Federation of Labor, and recently regional director of the U. S. Employment Service, who will work in Norway and Denmark.

Fighting Marine Purchases Book

IT was hell out there in the Pacific and our Marine officer friend—like others in the thick of it—often wished it was over and he could return home.

But there was a war to be won—and the Marine hated those who sought to destroy democracy.

So he gave it all he had—and soon he was back in the U. S.

But he wasn't "home" yet because he was in a hospital—the Bethesda Naval Hospital near Washington.

Time passed and he began recovering. Finally he was permitted to visit downtown Washington.

And it was there that he bought that book.

THE ex-Marine isn't quite sure which book he bought but he recalls the circumstances under which it was purchased.

He saw a store and strolled inside. He browsed around a bit and finally found something he thought would be interesting.

When he started to pay for the book he was asked if he wouldn't like to join the co-operative which operated the store. "You'll get books cheaper that way," he was told.

He liked low-priced books and he liked co-ops, so he put his name on the dotted line.

Later he told a number of persons about the store and its low prices.

FINALLY the Marine recovered, got out of uniform and became an organizer for the CIO in the South.

He was assigned to the membership drive at Oak Ridge and had no difficulty obtaining "security clearance" into the secret atomic enegry project.

As time passed he went from one campaign to another and finally became involved in a nasty strike situation in which violence flared and state police served as strike-breakers.

He, along with a number of others, was arrested. At this point the "law" started trying to prove that in addition to being a strike leader he was a dangerous radical.

Part of the "proof" against him was that he possessed a phonograph record of the song "Talking Union."

THE ex-Marine is still under indictment but he isn't a labor organizer any more.

He quit his job with the CIO and became a school teacher.

He and his wife live in a little cabin out in the woods—in surroundings designed to make a man forget about the hell he went through in the Pacific and the way strike-breaking cops used tear gas and bayonets.

He loves to lean back in a chair propped against the wall of his cabin, smoke his smelly pipe and discuss the affairs of the world.

Eventually the conversation gets around to the "great conspiracy" in which he is alleged to have engaged during that violent strike.

HE tells about buddies of his who were badly beaten by the cops and the way police escorted scabs through the picket line.

Then, with a twinkle in his eye, he talks about efforts to prove he's a dangerous radical and a disloyal citizen.

"I don't believe they'll send me up for 99 years because I had that 'Talking Union' record," he says.

"But that book I bought in Washington may be a different matter. You see, I got it at a bookshop which later was classed by the attorney general as a Communist 'front' organization.

"The way things are, they ought to be able to send me up for life for that."

And if you're listening closely you can detect a note of bitterness in his voice—bitterness almost hidden by humor. —A.L.S.

THE MEDICINE MAN

If You Think Your Vote Doesn't Matter, Read This

ARE you one of the 45 to 50 million Americans who, if past trends continue, will not bother to vote next November? Do you think your one vote is not important and won't really matter among all the millions that will be cast?

If so, you have the doubtful honor of belonging to The Ancient Order of Non-Voters, says Harold Wolff in the article "The Party That Always Wins" which will appear in the November issue of PAGEANT magazine.

"Without fund, without organization, without creed and without effort, they'll sweep the election," the article states. "They always have!"

The 50 million Americans who don't vote, says Wolff, will elect the president, most of Congress, most of the governors, almost every city official from mayor down, and make decisions affecting schools, taxes and other important civic policies.

TAKING the 1944 election as one illustration of the tremendous power of the uncast vote, the article points out that if only one out of every 10 non-voters had voted that year, election returns in 16 states could have been reversed. If one out of every five had voted, the outcome in 13 additional states,—(29 altogether) could have been changed, and if one out of four had cast their ballots, results in 37 states could have been affected.

It was in the Congressional election of 1946, however, says Wolff, that "the non-voters really went to town with less than one-fourth of the people turning out at the polls for this crucial election.

"In what turned out to be a battle of the stay-at-homes, the Democrats dropped over seven million votes from their 1944 Congressional figure; the Republicans won four million fewer ballots. How different would the election have come out if only a few of these people had gone to the polls?

A National Shame

"We have one of the worst voting records of any of the world's democracies," writes Harold Wolff in Pageant magazine. "If recent trends persist," he says, "45 million of our 94 million potential voters will not bother to go to the polls on Nov. 2. Contrast this with 1900, when 75% of the people cared enough to exercise their ballot rights.

"By 1940 the figure had dropped to 63%; by 1944 to 53.8%. In 1946 political abstinence reached an all-time high. There were 10 million more eligible voters than there had been in 1938, but two million fewer votes were cast."

"In 10 Congressional districts, less than 1% of the voters sent candidates to Congress. Thirteen others were elected by less than 2% of the vote, and 26 by less than 3%. Thirty-nine Congressmen in the important 80th Congress were elected by less than a 5,000 majority.

"How important were these Congressmen who were—in effect—sent to Washington by the non-voters? There were enough of them to control the balance of power on every important bill, especially when a presidential veto—as in the Taft-Hartley and income tax laws, for example—called for a two-thirds vote to override the veto.

"These darlings of the do-nothings held important committee assignments and actually controlled at least three important committees, those having to do with veterans' affairs, farm policy and public works expenditures. If you did not vote in 1946, you were an especially potent influence in shaping 1946-48 legislation . . ."

AMERICA'S growing "what-do-I-care attitude," Wolff writes, "is a sad travesty on our global pose as champions of government by the people." Comparing America's voting record—which comprised only 53.8% in the 1944 presidential election—with recent elections in other countries, he says:

"On May 10 in Korea, 90.6% of the eligible voters cast ballots. In the last two Italian elections, 90% went to the polls. Eighty-one per cent voted in the 1946 French election; in Great Britain, 76%; Canada, 74%.

Some countries impose fines for failure to vote, Wolff points out. Australia penalizes political indifference with a fine amounting to about $9.

"We don't want to make people vote," Wolff writes, "or bribe them. But to get our voting record up to those of most other democratic countries, 70 million people would have to turn out at the polls this fall."

Just who are these non-voters? "You'd be surprised," says Wolff.

"Americans of native parentage are less likely to vote than people whose parents were born abroad.

"People in the upper fourth of the economic scale are twice as likely to vote as those in the poorest fourth. College graduates are more apt to vote than those who have completed only grammar school."

But the worst of all offenders when it comes to failure to vote are women.

'Humphrey Was Here' Blankets Minnesota

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

Minnesota has many beautiful lakes—in fact it is known as "The Land of the Ten Thousand Lakes."

Minnesota has 60% of the iron ore of the U. S.

Minnesota had Harold Stassen, who has been given the nod by the House of Morgan and was made president of the University of Pennsylvania.

Whether Minnesota will keep Joe Ball will be decided by the voters of Minnesota come Nov. 2.

On that day, the people of the L'Etoile du Nord (Star of the North) will choose between dour-faced Joe Ball (he tries to make himself look like Abraham Lincoln) and dynamic Hubert H. Humphrey, mayor of Minneapolis.

As this is being written, opinion polls say that Pres. Truman has a good lead in Minnesota and that Humphrey is even farther ahead of Ball.

That may be true, but the Democratic-Farmer Labor campaign headquarters of "Hu" Humphrey doesn't show a single sign of overconfidence. You'd think Humphrey's staff, most of them as young or younger than the 37-year-old candidate, was composed of the greatest worry-warts in the world.

However, that's not all worry, it's a solemn determination that it'll be Humphrey, the Senator-elect, when the votes are counted late on the night of Nov. 2.

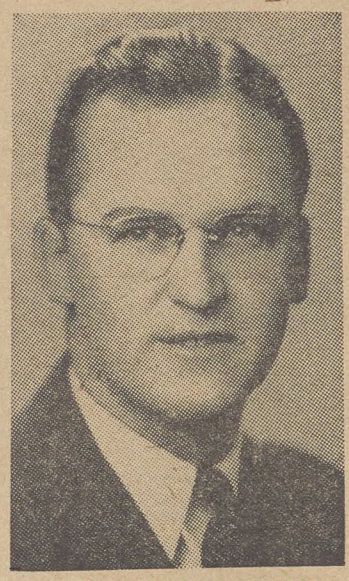
Among the veteran labor political workers on Humphrey's staff is Darrell Smith, who is organizational director

OF course, you know all about this character Ball—and, of course, if you're a reasonable voter, you don't like what you know about the senior Republican Senator from Minnesota.

But let's refresh our memory. Joe Ball was appointed to the Senate (by Stassen) in 1940 to fill the vacancy left by the death of Sen. Ernest Lundeen. Ball's former colleagues on the St. Paul Pioneer and Press (where he was a political writer) were astounded when the press of the nation—and, inexplicably, of Minnesota—portrayed Ball as a young liberal of the traditional Western stripe.

For his colleagues knew that Ball had deserted the Guild just when it was beginning to achieve the gains that have since made the newspaper business a better place to work in. Ball had become company minded just when the aid of every employe was needed.

Then, in the Senate, Ball became the great internationalist. He was part of the B2H2 combination—Ball, Burton, Hatch and Hayden—which introduced the then-startling "one world" resolution.



REP. JOHN BLATNIK

In Strong Campaign

BALL TO HIRE: John Blatnik's favorite campaign crack when he is urging Minnesota voters to back Hubert Humphrey and oust Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.):

"Joe Ball thinks a 40-cent minimum is enough pay for a worker to live on, so let's retire Joe and let him live on that."

Yet, in 1948, Joseph Hurst Ball voted against the Marshall Plan—voted against European aid despite the fact that all around him in Minnesota are thousands of first-generation Americans who are frantic with worry over the state of their relatives who were not fortunate enough to be able to immigrate to America.

SO, what do you know about Hubert Humphrey. Perhaps you heard his stirring civil rights speech to the Democratic convention last June—an address which pulled a seemingly dead convention back on its feet and sent the Democratic party swinging hard into a campaign which, until then, had seemed lost.

And, of course, you heard him on the radio on such programs as Town Meeting of the Air.

But, have you ever seen him campaign? Broth-err, you haven't lived if you've missed that!

Last week I was pretty lucky. I arrived in the Twin Cities just as Hu Humphrey was about to drive to Kenyon, down in the farm country in Goodhue County. He made room for me and off we drove, with Verne Bartholomew at the wheel. (All of the mayor's campaign workers call him just plain "Humphrey," so I did, too.)

At Kenyon, the town's 1500 or more residents, buttressed by former residents and by neighbors from miles around, were having their annual Corn Festival, which always follows the harvesting of the corn crop; Humphrey was the main speaker.

IT was a beautiful sunlit day. Several hundred farmers, their wives and families listened attentively as Humphrey began:

"My name is Hubert Humphrey. I'm a candidate for the U. S. Senate. I won't tell you my opponent's name, because one name is enough for you to remember at one time . . ."

And then he let his opponent have it. He accused Ball of falsifying a statement concerning taxation of co-ops. He declared Candidate Ball was misquoting Senator Ball in campaign literature.

Humphrey offered to pay $100 to anyone who would find any trace of a quotation which Ball said he had made on Jan. 21, 1948, before a farm group. The mayor offered a photostatic copy of the official text of Ball's speech and another photostat of the campaign quotation.

Two volunteers, Mayor Arthur Finseth, of Kenyon, and A. I. Anderson, of Zumbrota, studied the photostatic copies offered by Humphrey and verified the Democrat's statement.

The Minneapolis mayor also accused Ball of voting to reduce funds for soil conservation and of sabotaging price support policies.

Having been born on a farm myself, I was curious about the reaction of farmers to Democrat Humphrey in this predominantly Republican agricultural area.

So, I walked among the crowd and listened to their quiet remarks of "good stuff," "he's got something there," and "say, he's good."

Humphrey also attacked Ball's record on small business—"my father is a small businessman, a druggist."

When he finished, he was given a hearty hand by the audience.

THEN began a typical Humphrey "meet the people" campaign tour. Escorted by Mayor Finseth, he walked up and down the main street of the pretty little town. They stopped in at store after store and Humphrey was introduced to owners and clerks and customers. At one corner, an elderly man came up and said he came from the same town where Humphrey's father lives—Huron, S. D. In every case, Humphrey had a brief personal chat with the person he met.

We then drove to other towns and the same visiting process followed. The same thing happened on the streets of Minneapolis. It happens in every town visited by Humphrey.

In the Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, there is located the Minnesota State CIO office, from which CIO state Secy.-Treas. Rod Jacob

Where He Stands

That means he wants to help continue and expand the strong points of the New Deal program. He wants to keep free enterprise —free of monopoly and abuses.

He believes in decentralized government. For instance, he thinks federal aid money should be spent and largely controlled by the localities for which it is intended.

He is a supporter of the United Nations and the Marshall plan.

He favors restoring expanded rural electrification and soil conservation that the Republican congress cut down.

He opposes attempts to tax co-ops out of business.

His program for effective rent control and curbs on high prices are well known. And he considers the housing shortage one of the top unsolved problems in the nation.

He not only has the facts and figures, but he sees up close—through daily personal contact—what's wrong in government.

"I wouldn't be able to keep my job as mayor very long if I didn't," he says.

PAC ODDS AND ENDS

Although many states are still registering voters, Jack Kroll, PAC director, says these figures have been announced:

State of Washington, 83% registered, lists still open; New Jersey, 72%; Montana, 88%; California, 69%, still open.

No state has shown a decline.

FREE PRESS: When John Blatnik opposed the Mundt-Nixon Bill, the Duluth papers had a field day, accusing him of fellow-traveling, of leftism, etc.

When Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.) announced his opposition to the Mundt-Nixon Bill, the Duluth papers carried nary a line.

G. H. Q.: Both Mayor Humphrey and Sen. Ball have their offices in buildings of defunct newspapers.

(In the DFL primary, Humphrey slaughtered Wallaceite James Shields, 200,850 to 26,295. After the votes were counted, the third party decided it was not worth it to enter a candidate on another ticket against Humphrey.)

All told of the registration plans and spoke glowingly of the cooperation of AFL and Brotherhoods in the drive.

Miller told of the reactions of his wife's brother, just over from England. He felt that the reasons for American apathy on voting day—such as in 1946—was because America had come out of the war unbombed. British, in comparison, knew what they had suffered and united politically behind the Labor government.

All 8th District leaders were bitter at a smear campaign which has been waged against Blatnik, who has the full indorsement of CIO, PAC and the Steelworkers' union. Some of the slanderous attacks have been so low that they infer that Blatnik got his assignment to parachute into Jugoslavia so he could meet with Tito in the interests of the Communist Party.

Blatnik has a devastating answer to attacks on him: (a) he voted for the Marshall Plan, which draws bitterest Communist spleen in this country; (b) in January, he made a speech in which he rejected the third party, saying the Democratic party was the place to stay; (c) he feels that Pres. Truman is the right candidate and that in many ways he is even more liberal than Pres. Roosevelt.

BLATNIK, too, is a hard campaigner. He covers the Range several times a week, between times working hours upon hours in his office at Duluth. In Chisholm, his most ardent campaign workers are his father and mother and some of his former high school students. The father, a caretaker at an ore mine, and the mother, aided by the others, work hours every evening painting campaign signs in their garage.

Blatnik's opponent, Bill Berlin, also a member of the legislature, is, like Blatnik, of Slovene descent. He once stood in the State House and declared that steel company money was back of a drive for a certain bill. In fact, he said, he had been given some himself. That, is the most damaging thing against him, from Labor's viewpoint.

While in the state senate, Blatnik sponsored the Taconite Bill, which revised the tax structure to allow development of takonite in the Range. Takonite is a source of high grade iron, the ore for which is dangerously depleted. As a result of his bill, a $70,000,000 plant is being built for takonite production, which will provide hundreds of jobs.

In the rest of the state, CIO and PAC are supporting a number of other candidates for almost any job you can name.

But, I have taken Humphrey and Blatnik as the best examples of political action in Minnesota.

It is significant that the DFL is not getting careless because of the polls showing it in the lead. A lot of hard work is being done. A lot more will be done between now and Oct. 11, when registration closes. A lot, lot more will be done between then and November to get the vote out.

A campaign sticker says: "Humphrey was here."

He certainly is there.

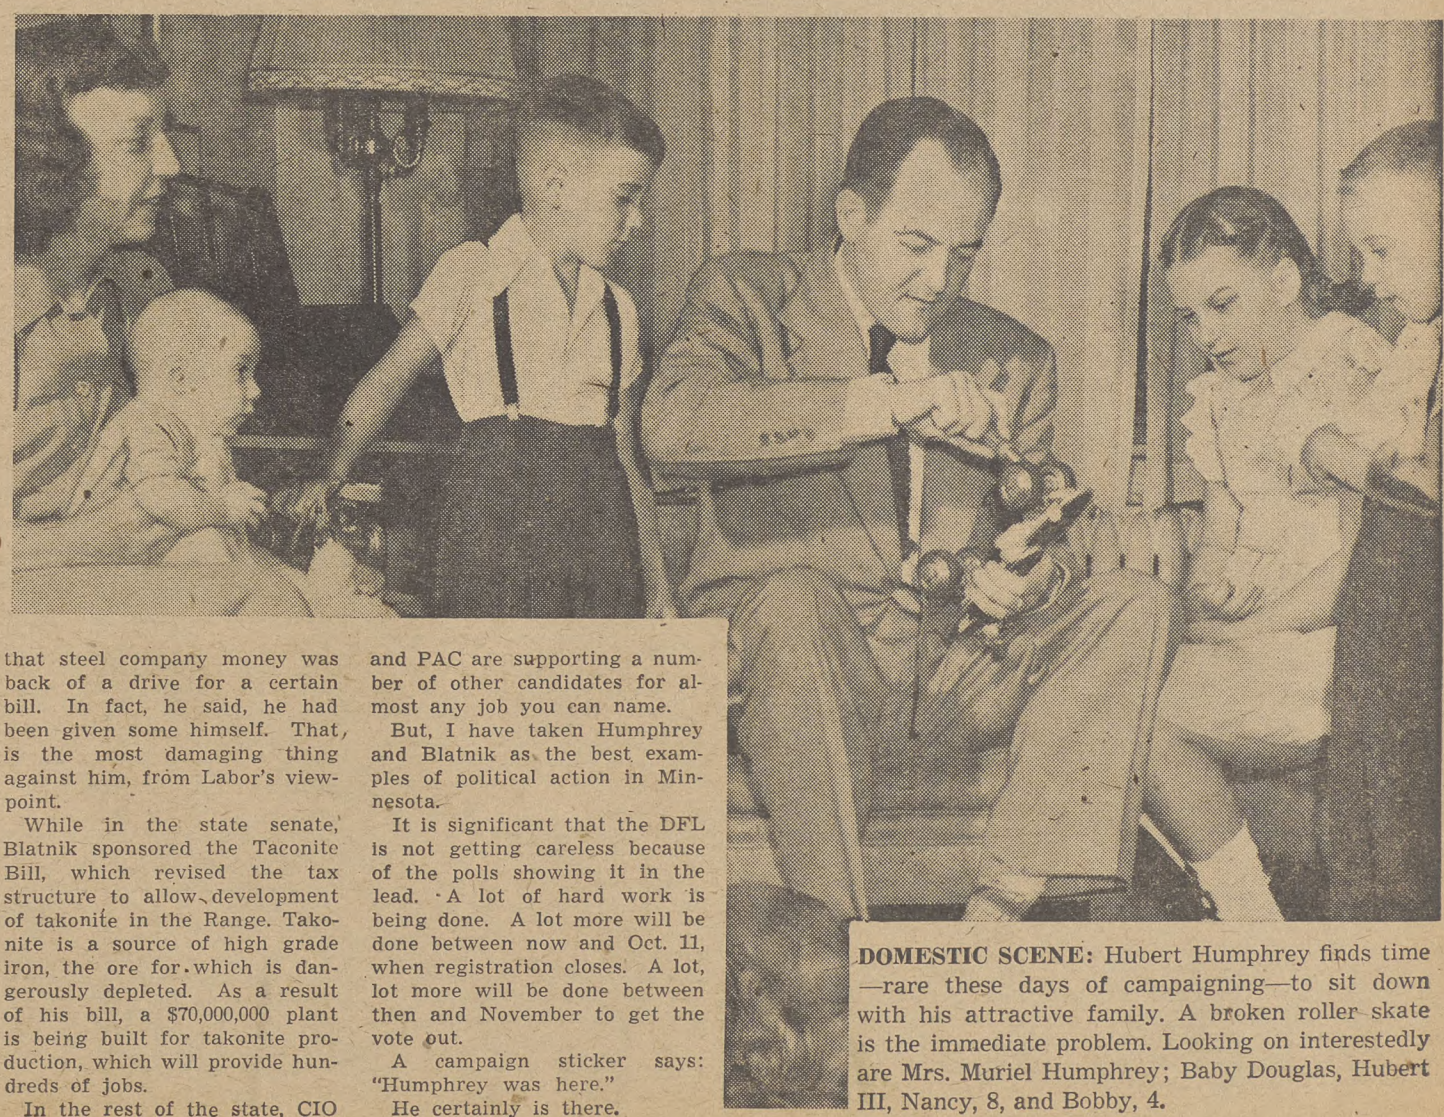
And How!

PAC Dir. Kroll, asked how he likes Pres. Truman's barnstorming campaign, answered:

"I hope he continues that way."

Asked how he likes Gov. Dewey's campaign, he said fervently:

"I hope he continues the same way."



DOMESTIC SCENE: Hubert Humphrey finds time —rare these days of campaigning—to sit down with his attractive family. A broken roller skate is the immediate problem. Looking on interestedly are Mrs. Muriel Humphrey; Baby Douglas, Hubert III, Nancy, 8, and Bobby, 4.

KROLL: REGISTRATION SETS RECORD

By JACK KROLL
Director, CIO-PAC

THE CIO Political Action Committee faces the November election with confidence.

For example: California registration reached 4,632,129, half a million over the 4,141,331 for 1944.

Pennsylvania registration was 4,452,131 when the books closed for the primaries, after which they reopened; the Pennsylvania total probably will be over 5 million, compared with 4,375,665 in 1946.

Registration in West Virginia—where the books are still open—already is 1,113,000, compared with a total of 1,089,030 in 1946. And in Washington State, registration hit an all-time record of 1,255,000, compared with a 1946 total of 1,024,112.

The facts back up the reports from the PAC's own field staff, and other reliable sources, that make us confident we shall achieve our goal of 60 million votes in this election.

Such a turnout is sure to mean success for the policy and the program of the PAC—the election of Pres. Truman and Sen. Barkley, and the more than 100 candidates for the House and Senate indorsed by the PAC.

When 60 million voters go to the polls, we predict with confidence a repudiation of the 80th Congress, a sharp reversal of the reactionary trend of its legislation and a stinging rebuke of Taft, Hartley, Taber, Dewey and all their factions.

AS for the Third Party, we no longer regard it as a factor to be taken seriously. The sound liberal people who at one time might have given voting strength to that movement are no longer behind it. They are working, and they will vote, where their efforts will get results.

We know these prospects do not wholly square with the findings of the public opinion surveys, such as the Gallup Poll. We do not say that is due to anything wrong with the polls; it comes from the fact that their methods cannot adequately reflect the vote of labor, and the great mass of the people. Beside that, the polls are somewhat slow to pick up changes in the trend, like that now sweeping the country.

PACELEBRATION: Here is a group of Denver CIO Council officers and successful primary candidates, celebrating their Colorado ballot victory. Large man in extreme back center is Sen. Edward C. Johnson, (D., Colo.), successful candidate for renomination. Two persons over from him, with bow tie, is Gov. Lee Knous, also renominated. Front row, David Martinez, Auto Workers; Oscar Peterson, Packinghouse; William T. Butler, Rubber; R. D. Hartley, secretary, CIO council, Steel; Michael Livoda, CIO regional director; William T. Hunter, UAW, and John McDonald, indorsed winner of Congressional nomination.

KIDDIES' HOUR: Here, Sen. Johnson (kneeling, center), gets a smile and "good luck" from union members' kids. Livoda and Hartley, who is also vice president of Steel Local 3039, look on approvingly. Johnson, Knous and McDonald had the indorsement of both the Denver and Colorado PACs, as did Rep. John Carroll (D., Colo.), successful in his race for renomination in the 1st District. In 1946, Carroll, Rep. John Blatnik (D., Minn.) and Rep. Harold D. Donohue (D., Mass.) were the only Democrats to reverse the Republican Congressional landslide and capture previously-GOP districts.

COME HOME: Aubrey Williams, one of the founders of the Progressive Party, alarmed at the turn Henry A. Wallace's campaign has taken, has urged Henry to "come home." Henry's reply: "Go home yourself."

Now, boys.

Wallaceites Feudin' And Fussin'

IN California, last week, the Independent Progressive Party (Wallaceite) issued a statement which was a beautiful example of double-talk.

The statement announced that after long soul-searching the IPP decided to withdraw its candidate and back Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, even though "Mrs. Douglas has at no time sought official support from IPP."

Rep. Douglas

Previously, the IPP had decided to call it quits against Rep. Chet Holifield, of the 19th District.

But, just before all this turn-about, it was revealed that an amazing and confusing difference of opinion has developed between Henry A. Wallace and some of the men around him. In other words, someone's singing off-key.

Read this story, by Warren Moscow, which appeared in the New York Times:

Henry A. Wallace brought to light what appeared to be a fundamental difference of opinion between himself and his campaign manager, C. B. Baldwin.

Speaking from the same platform at a dinner here after Baldwin had spoken he placed himself in opposition to a policy of supporting "liberal" Democrats for election, a policy Baldwin had just outlined and defended.

Wallace held that such support worked against the building of the third party for the 1952 campaign, and turning to Baldwin, said:

The words were spoken in sorrowful reproof, and later, in the course of a rambling address, Wallace spoke many kind words about Baldwin. But in his peroration, he repeated that he thought Baldwin's policies were wrong.

THE occasion was a $100 a plate fund-raising dinner of the Businessmen for Wallace, with 400 persons in attendance.

Baldwin told in detail how the Progressive party had offered to support Chester Bowles for Governor in Connecticut, and said it was still hoping to be able to work out support for Rep. Douglas.

Wallace, speaking extemporaneously, declared he did not know where anyone would wind up supporting candidates who were running in two directions at the same time. He declared that the Progressive party was for peace, and that "if Bowles doesn't think that peace is important, I don't know how good he'd be for peace."

Referring to Mrs. Douglas, whom he first accidentally called "Helen Gahagan Dulles," Wallace said he still did not know where she stood on the Truman Doctrine, which he opposes.

Of both Mr. Bowles and Mrs. Douglas he said he assumed they were better than their Republican opponents. He added that many elements in labor wanted Mrs. Douglas in the next Congress, and that she and Chet Holifield had the best records in the last Congress.

HE then told the audience, parenthetically, that he and Mr. Baldwin had never had a serious disagreement, and passed on to other matters.

In his wind-up he returned to the subject, declared that one great mistake Franklin D. Roosevelt had made was not giving enough consideration to the leadership that would follow him, and said he himself did not want the third party to be a one-man movement.

He called for help in getting leadership for the future, and predicted that in 1952 such Democrats as Mrs. Douglas, Holifield and Bowles would find it necessary to go along with a reactionary Democratic party, and that the Progressives interested in building a new party therefore could not afford to support them now.

He called Mr. Truman, just in passing, "the most demagogic candidate for President in our history." He expressed disbelief of a story told the audience, a few minutes before by Baldwin, in which Baldwin quoted the President as saying to a caller that he wished he still had Wallace in the Cabinet, and that, regardless of that, the President felt he was "a hundred times more liberal now than I was before, thanks to Henry's campaign."

Baldwin, leaning across the table, assured Wallace that was what the President said, not necessarily how he felt.

Wallace also claimed credit for the present existence of peace in the world, declaring that his own letter to Prime Minister Stalin had forced renewed meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers. Then he said:

"There were a few men who were seeking to promote a violent outbreak, but we joggled their aim, and they were unable to pull the trigger."

Rep. Hartley Says 40c An Hour Enough

YOU CAN LIVE ON IT BUT—

$832 A Year Won't Keep Family Of Four Decently

By GLORIA CAPLAN

HAVE you tried living on $16 a week lately?

That's $832 a year—not even enough to pay the $1000 "minimum of decency" food bill for a family of four, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

It's $2172 less than a four-member family needs to live decently in New Orleans. It's $2318 less than that family would need in Savannah, Ga. It's $2444 less than it takes a family of four to live decently in Mobile, Ala.

But 16 bucks a week for workers is OK with Rep. Fred Hartley. And even though he doesn't plan to be in Congress next year, he's already planted a germ which may easily spread into a plague which will wipe out the few gains employes working on government contracts won 12 years ago.

Sixteen dollars a week is the present minimum employers in interstate commerce are compelled to pay under the federal Wage-Hour Act. But under the Walsh-Healey Act, employes working on government contracts may do slightly better. The Walsh-Healey Act empowers the Secretary of Labor to set minimum rates of pay for government contractors. That minimum is supposed to be "not less than the minimum wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor to be the prevailing minimum wages for persons employed on similar work . . . in the locality in which the materials . . . are to be manufactured."

Accordingly, from time to time, the Secretary of Labor calls public hearings in order to determine whether the minimum wage on government contracts should be raised.

ONE such hearing was conducted last week on the cotton garment industry, which produces uniforms, etc., for the government. It was when the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers appeared at the hearing to request a rise in the public contracts minimum wage in the industry from 40c to 75c that Rep. Hartley "blew his top."

Immediately he demanded repeal of the Walsh-Healey Act. The Wage-Hour Act, which provides a straight 40c minimum, made the Walsh-Healey Act unnecessary, said the red-haired Congressman.

What really made the Congressman mad peeped out in this statement of his: "In my opinion what they want is to use the Public Contracts Act so as to force up all wages, not only on Government work but on all commercial production as well."

In other words, the government would set a dangerous precedent by upping minimums on its work to the "spectacular" rate of $30 a week.

Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin hit back with the reply: "This Act was passed to prevent the U. S. government from buying supplies from chiseling employers, and to support the manufacturer who wishes to pay decent wages.

"The repeal of the Walsh-Healey law," he continued, "would leave only the Wage-Hour law which now carries a minimum wage of 40c an hour. The 80th Congress refused to increase that wage and apparently Mr. Hartley wishes to hold the worker who is employed on government contracts down to 40c an hour."

In demanding repeal of Walsh-Healey, Hartley was echoing the frantic appeals of the Southern Cotton Garment Mfgrs. Association.

The Association hired Prof. John V. Van Sickle of Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind., to present its case against a higher minimum. And in that testimony may be found a clue to the arguments that may be used in Congress next year—not only against Walsh-Healey, but against any rise in the minimum wage above the present 40c.

GLADYS DICKASON

Amalgamated's research director and vice-president told why the minimum wage should be raised to 75c in cotton garment factories working on U. S. contracts.

The Same Work; Unequal Pay

Spinners:
$1.66 in Lawrence, Mass.
1.04 in Virginia and N. C.

Weavers (worsted):
$1.59 in Lawrence, Mass.
1.20 in Virginia and N. C.

The argument is based almost solely on a defense of a North-South wage differential—a defense that the Bureau of Labor Statistics and unions have repeatedly established as false. But it crops up every time the term "minimum wage" is uttered.

Because it is the Southern worker—less organized and poorly paid—who would be most affected by any change in the minimum rate, employers base their arguments on a defense of that wage differential.

● "A fair wage may be defined as consisting of a bracket or range of rates which tends to be paid to all workers of like skills in the same labor market area."

(Thus, according to Van Sickle, sweat shop wages of pre-New Deal days were "fair" if they were the prevailing rates.)

● The South, in order to attract new industries, must be able to offer cheaper wages and higher profits. "The fact of exceptional profitability does not justify a wage differential in a local labor market higher than is needed to recruit an enlarged work force."

(Thus the more southern workers we have getting rickets and pellagra and tuberculosis on their $16 a week, the better it is for the progress of the region.)

● "The South's industrial workers are not underpaid." Yet, he boasted later, that 29.6% of the Association's plants have a 40c hourly minimum; another 17.6% have a 45c minimum.

● And what's more, said Van Sickle, the union's demand for a 75c minimum "represents as outrageous an attempt at war profiteering as this country has ever witnessed."

(Look who's talking about war profiteering now!)

● If the union wins its demand, says he, it "spells the end of private enterprise and free unions!" —no less.

TO all these dark warnings, Gladys Dickason, ACWA research director, offered a demolishing reply.

Despite general rises in living costs and wages, no change has been made in the Walsh-Healey minimum for the cotton garment industry since 1937, she pointed out.

Since then there have been a lot of changes. For instance, the average hourly earnings for cotton garment workers are currently 88.5c an hour. The effective minimum in all Amalgamated contracts is 82.5c an hour, she said. Since about three-quarters of the employes in the industry are under union contract, these rates set the pattern for non-union shops as well.

Thus the number of persons making less than 75c is so few —and these are mostly concentrated in the South—that a rise to 75c would increase the total wage bill by only 3.1%.

Claims by Van Sickle that the Southern manufacturers' minimum hovered around 40c were hit by Miss Dickason with the argument that many employers give 40c as their minimum even though not a person in the plant is ever paid that. The low figure, she pointed out, permits wages to hit rock bottom when widespread unemployment forces workers to accept that amount.

★ ★ ★

HOW much weight can be attached to the perennial argument that living costs are lower in the South and thus Southern workers shouldn't be paid as much as those in the North?

The BLS family budget study shows that the same minimum standard for a family of four in 1947 cost $3220 a year in Memphis, Tenn., a Southern city, and $3203 in Philadelphia, a Northern city. It takes less to live in Portland, Maine, than it does in Norfolk, Va., or Richmond, Va., or Birmingham, Ala.

Over and over again the BLS has found no such thing as a regional difference in the cost of living. Yet Southern employers are still using the myth as an excuse for depressing wages.

In an article on wage differential in the Sept. 1948 issue of North American Labor magazine, Les Finnegan writes:

"These differentials sometimes range as high as 100% for the same job performed in two different cities," he continues. "Thus a Northern worker may be paid twice as much per hour as a Southern worker doing exactly the same work."

Over the past 40 years the BLS has found that "the relative wage position of the South showed no progressive improvement . . ."

For that reason unions are fighting that inequity with every ounce of strength they possess. When they pound on the principle of "equal pay for equal work," they mean they can't see any reason why a card grinder in a Connecticut cotton textile mill should get $1.25 while a card grinder in Statesville, N. C., receives $1.09.

'RAISE THAT MINIMUM': That's what these three rank-and-file CIO Clothing Workers urged in testimony before a wage determination hearing of the Public Contracts Division, U. S. Dept. of Labor. Minimum on Government clothing contracts is 40c. L. to r., Grace Colaneri, Elizabeth, N. J.; Zella Gordy, Salisbury, Md., and Freda Jo Dale, Waco, Texas.

The Same Work; Unequal Pay

These wage rates in the cotton garment industry underscore the low pay in the South:

Men's and boys' shirts:
$1.05 on the Pacific Coast.
.58 in the Southwest.

Work pants:
$ .99 on the Pacific Coast.
.63 in the Southwest.

Overalls:
$1.00 on the Pacific Coast.
.67 in the Southwest.

Here's Proof That Prices Aren't Lower in Dixie

The box of corn flakes you buy in Georgia costs about the same as a box in New York. Same is true for most items we buy. But it's not true that the same standard of living is cheaper in the South than in the North. Don't believe it? Then take a gander at this BLS budget for a minimum standard of decency in 20 cities.

The figures represent the estimated annual cost of a yearly budget for a family of four, on the basis of prices in June, 1947.

In N. Carolina Town

While NLRB Stalls, Cops Nab Workers

(Note to Messrs. Taft and Hartley: Whenever you boast about how your law has "helped" workers, keep this one little story in mind, won'tcha?)

DOWN in the little town of Elizabethtown, N. C., there are some 300 workers—both white and Negro—who live in company houses, get their food at the company's grocery, and try to make ends meet on the 60c an hour they average.

They work for the Greene Brothers Lumber Co., and after 18 months of futile efforts to get the company to negotiate a contract, they could tell you a thing or two about how the T-H Act is protecting "the right of employes to organize and bargain collectively" (as it says in the Act, page 2).

On April 18, 1947, workers in the mill voted 171 to 87 in an NLRB poll to be represented by the CIO Woodworkers. Since then they have sat across the table from the company's attorney, famed for his union-busting proficiency, and heard him reply flatly "No" to every union proposal, including offers of arbitration or mediation.

When every peaceful effort failed, the workers struck 10 weeks ago. Here's what they have faced since:

- Sixty-nine strikers have been arrested and placed under $500 peace bonds, even though, according to D. L. Culver, CIO representative, "there has been no violence nor any real evidence of danger of violence."
- Twenty-three warrants for "failure to declare taxes" were issued against strikers; none was issued against non-strikers or strike-breakers.
- Greene Brothers sued six strikers to evict them from their homes. All six defendants were Negroes, but, despite the union's request that colored people be allowed to serve on the jury, none was called.
- On at least one occasion the deputy sheriff carried a strike breaker through the picket line in his own automobile.
- When strikers are put in jail on one pretext or another, the union charges, the "public officers take advantage of their detention to induce them to become strike breakers."
- Union strikers making peaceful calls on workers to persuade them not to break the strike are followed by police, although there have been no occasions of violence.
- The company, according to the union, has attempted to negotiate illegal contracts—presumably "yellow dog"—with prospective strike breakers.

Most of these charges have been made by Culver in a letter to the Civil Liberties Division of the U. S. Dept. of Justice, requesting an investigation and "relief."

And here's how the NLRB has been preventing strikes by "protecting the workers' right to organize." The union has filed unfair labor practice charges against the company, but the NLRB hasn't got around to them yet. It's tied up processing employer charges against unions (which get priority).

Meanwhile the pickets are getting some satisfaction out of watching the Greene brothers go through the "humiliating" task of piling lumber each morning due to the "labor shortage."

The strikers' spirits have remained high, because they're determined not to go back to pre-strike, sub-standard conditions.

As one union leaflet put it, after noting the Greene Brothers' elaborate houses, prize cattle and show horses:

"One gets the thought after looking at all this wealth and luxury that it is better to be a prize head of cattle than a worker for the Greene Brothers Lumber Co."

Lee R. Simon Dead

Lee R. Simon, national farm-labor director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, has died in New York City after an illness of two months.

Simon, 30, was active in the CIO Newspaper Guild while on the news staff of the Milwaukee Sentinel and Des Moines Tribune. He was a graduate of New York University.

Charges Against PAC Leader Flop

Attempts by Elyria, Ohio, police to muzzle the CIO-PAC here were upset in the mayor's court, when charges against Ben Golechen, Elyria CIO-PAC chairman, were dismissed.

On the night of his arrest, Golechen, who is also chairman of the Lorain County Joint Labor Political Committee, was using a sound truck to announce a rally for Congressman Huber whose voting record in the 80th Congress has been acclaimed by all labor. He was accused of violating an ordinance prohibiting the use of a sound truck for advertising purposes.

Golechen's attorney moved to dismiss the charge. He said that the ordinance prohibited use of sound trucks for advertising and that according to Webster's dictionary, advertising referred to a commercial venture, and that the ordinance was unconstitutional in the light of a recent Supreme Court ruling.

Douty Gets Leave To Take Job In Japan

Kenneth Douty, Georgia Director for the CIO Textile Workers Union of America, has been given a leave of absence by the union to accept an appointment in Japan as an expert to the Secretary of the Army for a 90-day period.

Union Co-operation Asked

Help Handicapped Get Jobs—Murray

AS CIO Pres. Philip Murray—on the eve of National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week this week—urged every CIO member to do his utmost in getting jobs for disabled persons, the Bureau of Labor Statistics issued a study showing that the handicapped workers are doing a splendid job.

Prepared for the Veterans Administration, the study—issued in a 132-page book—showed that labor and management "are greatly enriched by the contributions of men and women having physical disabilities."

BLS studied 11,000 handicapped workers and 18,000 competing able-bodied employes at similar jobs in 109 plants and found that the differences were fractional "with the balance slightly in favor of the impaired worker group."

(There are six million of the estimated 28 million disabled persons in the nation's labor force.)

MURRAY said that "additional thousands of physically handicapped persons are seeking employment.

"Although we work continuously to remove the causes of accidents in industry, on the highways and in the home, we have barely begun the task of rehabilitating those who are already handicapped and seeing that they are employed at useful, satisfying and decently paid jobs.

"CIO is deeply concerned over the discrimination in employment which is traditionally practiced against the aged, the minority groups, and the physically handicapped. Until permanent and creative occupations are obtained by all Americans, any claim to the achievement of full employment is an empty mockery.

"I urge every member of CIO to interest himself in the welfare of his physically handicapped neighbors. Encourage your employer to act, and offer the complete cooperation of your union. Arose your community to its responsibility. Help in every way to promote the rehabilitation and employment of our physically handicapped citizens, 52 weeks of every year."

Labor And Management Map Parley On Mounting Industrial Mishaps

FOR the first time in history, labor, management and other interested groups met in Washington last week under official government auspices to give attention to the mounting toll of death and injuries in industrial accidents.

The conference was called by President Truman to draft plans for a nation-wide safety conference to be held in Washington next March. Among the 300 delegates assembled for the preliminary conference were 23 delegates from the National CIO and CIO Internationals.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the top Conference's top coordinating committee. Harry Read attended the conference as alternate for Pres. Murray.

William L. Connolly, director of the Bureau of Labor Standards is chairman of the committee as the representative of Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin.

Air Conditioning

Solomon Barkin, CIO Textile Workers research director, last week urged Federal officials and employer groups to adopt recommendations in favor of legislation requiring the air conditioning of textile mills.

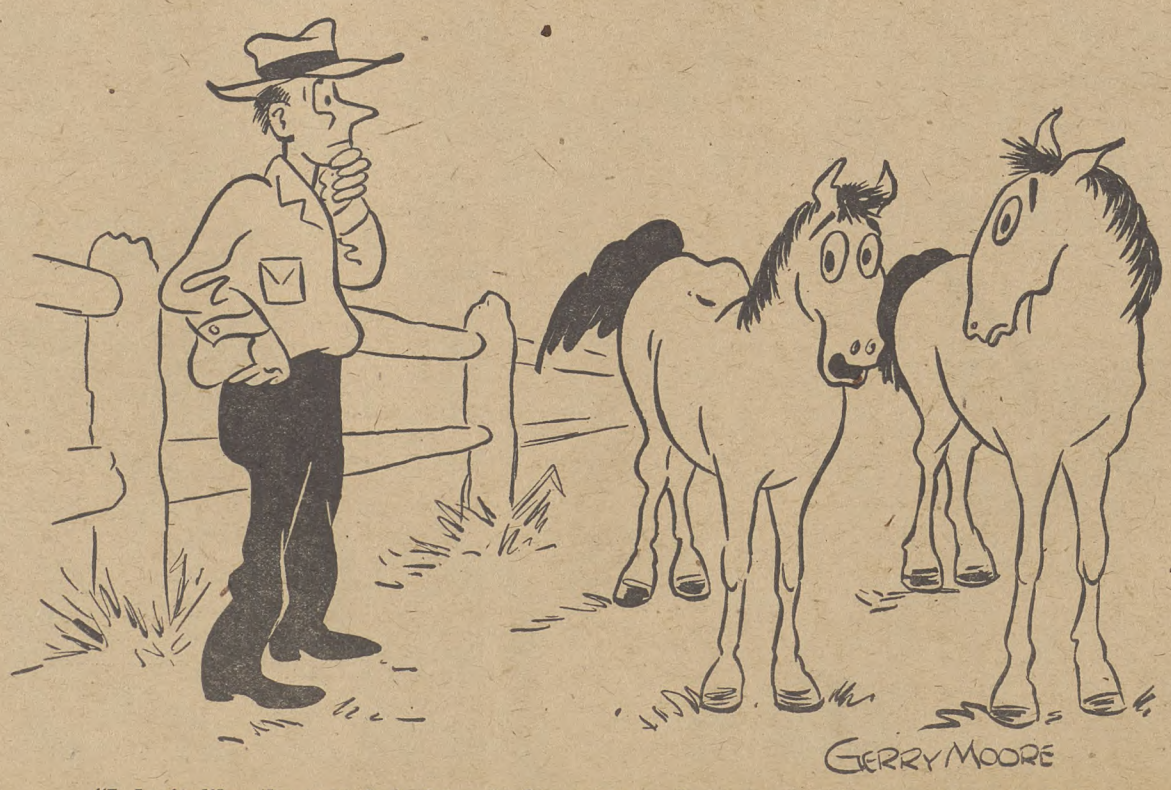
Appearing before the planning meeting for the Conference on Industrial Safety, Barkin gave members of the conference copies of the union's new pamphlet, "Air Conditioning in Tetxile Mills," which is addressed to state legislatures.

"Air Conditioning in Textile Mills" may be obtained from the Research Dept., Textile Workers Union, 99 University Pl., New York 3, N. Y.

Subjects outlined for consideration at the conference next March were divided into seven sections or committees to deal with accident records, research, labor-management cooperation for safety, programs and services, education and other matters.

"The mere enactment of laws and the establishment of codes by the Federal and State governments, will not, in itself, prevent accidents or eliminate the causes of accidents," Connally told the delegates.

"The job has to be done primarily at the shop level . . . Local groups working through the Labor Depts. of the respective states can do the most effectively and permanently. The proper function of the Federal Dept. in this field is to give every possible aid to the State Labor Depts."



"I don't like the way he's been looking at us since meat prices went so high."

ACW Health Center Will Serve 60,000

Free health service for the 60,000 members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the New York City area will be provided at the Sidney Hillman Health Center when the building recently purchased by the union at 14-16 East 16th St., has been remodeled.

The interior of the six-story structure formerly owned by the YWCA, will be completely made over and furnished with the most modern and complete equipment. The Center is expected to begin operations early next year.

A million dollar fund to set up the center was contributed by the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange, joint sponsors with the union. The Board of trustees for the health project is composed of representatives of both the union and the employers.

One in Four Holds Union Card, Says BLS

One out of every four working men and women in the U.S. carries a union card.

All told, 15,600,000 individuals are union members, according to the new Directory of Labor Unions (BLS Bulletin No. 937) published by the Labor Dep't this week.

There are 197 unions organized on an international or national basis, according to the Labor Dep't. lists. However, six of these 197 claim more than 500,000 members each, with several near the million-member mark. And 37 unions can claim more than 100,000 members each.

CIO Membership in Tenn. To Top 100,000

By ED STONE

CIO membership in Tennessee will top the 100,000-mark by the first of the year, or sooner, depending on how fast the NLRB sets up elections in the 57 plants where petitions have been filed.

Before the CIO Southern drive was launched, a little over two years ago, CIO membership in Tennessee was around 60,000 with a large part of it concentrated in Memphis.

Since then "Operation Dixie" has pushed the message of CIO into every county in the state where there is a plant, mill or factory.

Memphis, where Bess E. H. Crump once said CIO would never be permitted to "step a foot," is the scene of most activity.

East Tennessee, now enjoying an industrial boom by reason of TVA power, is fast becoming CIO-minded with drives in progress in Johnson City, Greenville, Morristown, Elizabethtown and Kingsport. The biggest single drive is in Kingsport where the sprawling Tennessee Eastman Co. employes more than 8,500 persons.

WHILE the CIO Organizing Committee has assiduously refrained from political activity, on strict instructions from Natl. Dir. Van A. Bittner, repercussions from the healthy growth of CIO were felt in the recent Democratic primary when CIO-supported candidates for U. S. Senate and Governor were nominated by landslides.

"When people organize into unions and begin thinking collectively about their jobs, it naturally follows that they will think in unison about whom they will support for political office," said Paul R. Christopher, CIO Organizing Committee Director for Tennessee.

Both the old-timers and the new CIO membership fell in step with the CIO-PAC program with the result that the Knoxville Journal recently suggested that perhaps the people of Tennessee are changing from one boss to another—"Boss Christopher" instead of "Boss Crump."

Shoe Workers Back Truman

By GERARD KABLE

DELEGATES from every shoe center in the country convened at the Hotel Bradford in Boston last week for the sixth biennial convention of the CIO Shoeworkers.

One of the most important resolutions called for adherence to National CIO policy and official indorsement by the Shoeworkers of the Truman-Barkley ticket.

Although the resolution gave rise to vigorous debate, opposition was weak. After an eloquent appeal by Pres. Rocco Franceschini, who contended that in the secrecy of the voting booths the vast majority of CIO members would follow CIO policy, the resolution was adopted almost unanimously.

Franceschini pointed out that the third party movement would only boost the chances of the Republican Party.

OTHER resolutions adopted called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, for "the Administration and the Congress to stop playing politics with this problem and institute the necessary action to curb and reduce the high cost of living," for a reduction of the age limit in social security, and for the initiation of a guaranteed annual wage.

The office of national director of organization was abolished. The resolution referred to the office as "ineffective" and "undesirable," pointing out that organizational work had been carried on in all sections by district boards. Dir. Rosenberg, who had resigned from that office, rose in objection to the world's "ineffective" and "undesirable" but declared he was not speaking in opposition to the resolution.

Other resolutions adopted by the convention include an appeal for recognition of Israel. A call for the inclusion of demand for vacations with pay in all future negotiations; for going on record to negotiate further such demands as health plans and pension plans; pledging the union to urge the Government to purchase shoes from American shoe manufacturers for distribution abroad; and calling for adoption, wherever possible, of a policy to shorten the work week with no reduction in wages.

A RESOLUTION calling for repeal of compulsory military training met with strong opposition from the floor. A voice vote on the question at first found the proposition rejected but a second voice vote showed adoption of the controversial resolution.

Several amendments to the constitution were also adopted.

In the keynote speech, delivered by Joseph A. Salerno, president of the Massachusetts CIO, the 80th Congress came in for a thorough going over, with a direct appeal for its overthrow in November. In a series of glaring comparisons, he showed that the 80th Congress had actually ignored the needs of the many to satisfy the needs of the few.

Tilford Dudley of the National CIO-PAC urged more active participation in political action. Dudley expressed the fear that indifference on the part of voters in America may serve to entrench reaction another four years.

Pointing out to the danger to liberalism created by the third party, he declared that reaction will be beaten only if everybody takes an active interest in the coming election.

Bishop John Wright of Boston declared: "Take away the freedom of the workingman and you have taken away everything."

Other principal speakers were Adolph Germer of the National CIO; Francis Carmichael, CIO's New England regional director, and Albert K. Herling, who spoke in behalf of the Boston Labor Committee to Combat Intolerance.

Bars Nazis, Reds From Office

THE Kansas State CIO Council, holding its 8th annual convention in Topeka, voted to bar "followers of fascism, nazism and communism doctrine" from office and recommended that its affiliated locals do likewise.

Reaffirming their support of national CIO policy, the 85 delegates passed resolutions against the Progressive Party and urged increased political activity through PAC. Other resolutions called for a guaranteed annual wage, federal aid to education, repeal of the Taft-Hartley act, price control legislation and a broadened social security program.

Pres. John Green of the CIO Shipbuilding workers, dragged the 80th Congress over the coals for its failure to improve unemployment compensation legislation. He also took state legislatures to task for refusing to provide adequate workmen's compensation.

George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; Philip Weightman and John O'Hara, both national PAC representatives, also addressed the convention.

Council Pres. Willard Murphy and Secy.-Treas. H. J. Yount were returned to office.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

United Paperworkers of America have reported victories in three NLRB representation elections. Workers at the Kalamazoo Stationery Company, Kalamazoo, Michigan, voted 175 for UPA, 23 for AFL and 101 for no union. UPA Area Dir. Nicholas Vrataric and Rep. Elzie Bush were in charge. At the U. S. Corrugated Fibre Box Co., Knox, Penna., the UPA received 44 votes against 10 for no union. Rep. Ross Atwell was in charge. At the General Paper Co., Coatesville, Penna., the UPA received 41 votes against 5 for no union. UPA Rep. William Sheer and Local 416 Pres. Jack Law were in charge.

Martin Gerber, Director of Region 9, UAW, reports that the employes of the Dye Molding Corp., Canastota, N. Y., went UAW by a vote of 121 to 2. The organizational drive was under the direction of sub-Regional Dir. William Francis X. O'Mealia.

Reg. Dir. John B. Easton reports that the workers of the American Container Corp., Huntington, W. Va., went CIO by a vote of 154 for the Chemical Workers to 15 for the AFL Electricians.

'LABOR MONOPOLY' CHARGE IS OLD

The idea of a Congress of national labor unions is taken for granted today and few of us ever give it a second thought, but the last week in September in 1865, 83 years ago, this was a brand new idea. At that time 13 men, representatives of various national and regional unions, met in Louisville, Ky., and issued a call to all labor urging upon them the vital necessity for taking action to establish a single centralized labor movement.

This was done and in Baltimore on August 20, 1866, the National Labor Union was formed. Then began the hue and cry. The press and the industrial and political bosses raved and ranted against this organization as a "labor monopoly" and "labor trust." A great and heavily financed undercover campaign to smash the union through the use of publicity and stool pigeons was started under the direction of Allen Pinkerton. This was Pinkerton's first campaign against labor and through it he rose to fame and fortune.

By 1873 the National Union had been strangled to death and Pinkerton was ready for more spectacular and gory triumph; the destruction of the Miners' National Union and the framing and hanging of the "Molly Maguires."

HARTLEY 'SQUEALS' ON GOP

NEW YORK TIMES, WED

HARTLEY CHIDES GOP AS GO-EASY ON LABOR

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28 (AP)—Representative Fred A. Hartley Jr., Republican, of New Jersey, said today that Republican Congressional leaders had failed to "finish the job" of labor legislation in the last Congress.

He said that after the Taft-Hartley Bill was passed, the leaders decided that "no more legislation to which organized labor could possibly object" would be passed until after the 1948 Presidential election.

The Chairman of the House Labor Committee and co-author of the Taft-Hartley Bill made the statement in his book, "Our New National Labor Policy," to be published tomorrow by Funk & Wagnalls in association with Modern Industry magazine. The book has a foreword by Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio.

"Frankly, I think the United Mine Workers (John L. Lewis' union) could have thrown a picket line around the United States Capitol and the Supreme Court without receiving more than a gentle reprimand from the Republican leaders," he wrote.

"Republican leaders had an election to win; sound legislative principles were cast aside. That's why I'm writing this."

Mr. Hartley is retiring at the end of his present term after twenty years in Congress.

"This is as good a time as any to point out that the Taft-Hartley Act is only a start."

—Rep. Fred A. Hartley, Jr.

SPILLS THE BEANS: Rep. Fred Hartley of New Jersey has demonstrated that a man who isn't seeking re-election sometimes talks freely about things which an active candidate for office doesn't mention. In his new book, "Our New National Labor Policy," which sings the praises of the Taft-Hartley Act, the law's co-author revealed the GOP leadership had decided to "go easy" on labor until after election day. Nevertheless, he insisted workers love his law. Hartley's book discusses some interesting "improvements" planned for T. H.

N. Y. City CIO Plea On Hearing Rejected

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has rejected a request for changes in the procedure established for hearing charges made against the Greater New York (city) CIO Council by a group of New York CIO leaders.

Pres. James Durkin and Secy.-Treas. Saul Mills of the New York City Council requested that the hearing be postponed for 30 days, that it be held in New York instead of Washington, that the personnel of the hearing committee be "changed or increased so as to guarantee a fair hearing" and that those making the charges be required to "provide a bill of particulars."

Murray said in letter to Durkin and Mills that proceedings instituted against the council are in conformity with the CIO constitution and CIO council rules and that there was no basis for their charge of bias and partisanship against the personnel of the hearing committee.

The council was recently charged with violating the CIO constitution and the rules governing the conduct of CIO councils and with interfering with the conduct of three CIO unions.

The committee appointed by Murray to hold hearings on the charges in Washington Oct. 14 is composed of Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, Pres. Martin Wagner of the Chemical Workers and Pres. Joseph Froesch of the Glass Workers. Buckmaster is committee chairman.

Oil Firms Say 'No'

INTENSIFIED company - sponsored back-to-work efforts have resulted in a growing list of injured and arrested CIO Oil Workers in picketline flareups on the West Coast.

The six major struck companies are standing pat on their rejection of the CIO Oil Workers offer to scale its demand down from 21c an hour to 12½c with the remainder to be submitted to arbitration.

An attempt by the Union Oil Co. to lure workers back to the refinery at Oleum, Calif., fell flat. Neither threats of "appropriate action" to be taken against workers who didn't return nor individual telephone offers of as high as $170 a week did the trick. Not a single worker went back.

Meanwhile OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight has demanded federal action to halt "monopolistic" collective bargaining practices by the west coast oil industry.

Knight accused California oil companies of "acting in concert to oppose union wage demands and also uniformly successfully raising gasoline prices in California."

All But Santa

Except for Santa Claus, who had to stay home and work, everybody the kids are interested in was at the CIO Plaything parley. From the makers of Betsy-Wetsy dolls to the engineers who give road tests to Lionel trains, they were all there. Even the people who make dribble glasses and exploding cigars for the larger-size boys and girls wore PJNW badges. And the program they adopted would have Santa's approval—to vote out the Scrooges of the 80th Congress.

COOPERATION: Two-headed calf displayed at Iowa state fair symbolizes co-operation between the Farmers Union and the CIO Packinghouse Workers, who presented the joint exhibition. The exhibit will tour local fairs throughout the state.

Glass Firm Tries To Kid Employes

Are you one of those poor working stiffs who thinks that it's the rich people of the country who live off the fat of the land—on income received from dividends, interest and rent?

Well, you're wrong, says the slick company magazine distributed to employes of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. This handsomely printed organ takes the whole back page to inform its workers that 70% of all dividends, all interest, all rent go to the common people, the "average folks" who average less than $5,000 a year.

Uncle Sam's Bureau of Internal Revenue, says less than three-tenths of the total dividends and interest went to folks earning less than $5,000 a year. The figures are for 1945, the last year for which U. S. Government statistics are available.

BIR also reported that the 15% earning more than $10,000 received 50% of the dividends and interest paid out in 1945.

CIO Asks U. S. Aid

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has called on Admiral W. W. Smith, chairman of the U. S. Maritime Commission, to use the Commission's influence to bring about a resumption of negotiations between West Coast ship operators and striking maritime workers.

Murray said the unions involved had expressed willingness to resume negotiations but that ship operators had refused to do so.

The U. S. Government, the CIO head said in a letter to Admiral Smith, is directly involved in the maritime dispute because of its ownership of vessels tied up by the strike.

He called attention to the direct interest of the Maritime Commission in the situation because of its control of the American President Lines through U. S. Government ownership of 95% of the line's stock.

He said that "I am firmly convinced that the strike can be ended speedily if collective bargaining negotiations are reumed . . . It seems to me that the Maritime Commission should be directly and immediately concerned in bringing this about."

U. S. Ships Carry Half Of ECA Tonnage

During the first five months of Marshall plan operation, April through August, 49% of all cargo financed by the Economic Cooperation Administration was transported in American flag vessels, ECA announced.

When Marshall plan legislation was drawn up last spring, organized labor sought to insure that a certain amount of the cargo would be carried by U. S. ships. The law finally stipulated that as far as practicable 50% of the tonnage would be carried by American owned and manned ships.

Tells of Negro GI

The Civil Liberties Union calls attention to a new book by William Gardner Smith, a 20-year-old war veteran, which tells a sensitive, simply written story in fictional form of a Negro GI's experiences in post-war Germany.

Dewey Loves . . . Dewey!

Dewey: Save on the big bipartisan principles of foreign policy, anti-communism and a few generalities like belief in the future of the West, Dewey has yet to say specifically where he stands on most important domestic issues.

On his swing across the country he has come out for rain, sunshine, honesty, co-operation, efficiency, reorganization, whatever is good for the nation and all such political pap.

Love is sweeping the country,
Waves are hugging the shore,
All the sexes from Maine to Texas,
Have never known such love before.

On such a vague and platitudinous platform, Gov. Dewey apparently is going to win.

Truman: President Truman has said exactly where he stands on every conceivable issue, even at the risk of putting his foot in his mouth.

You may not like his words.

You may not like his ideas.

You may not like the way he has tried to carry out his words and ideas.

But at least he has made known his principles.

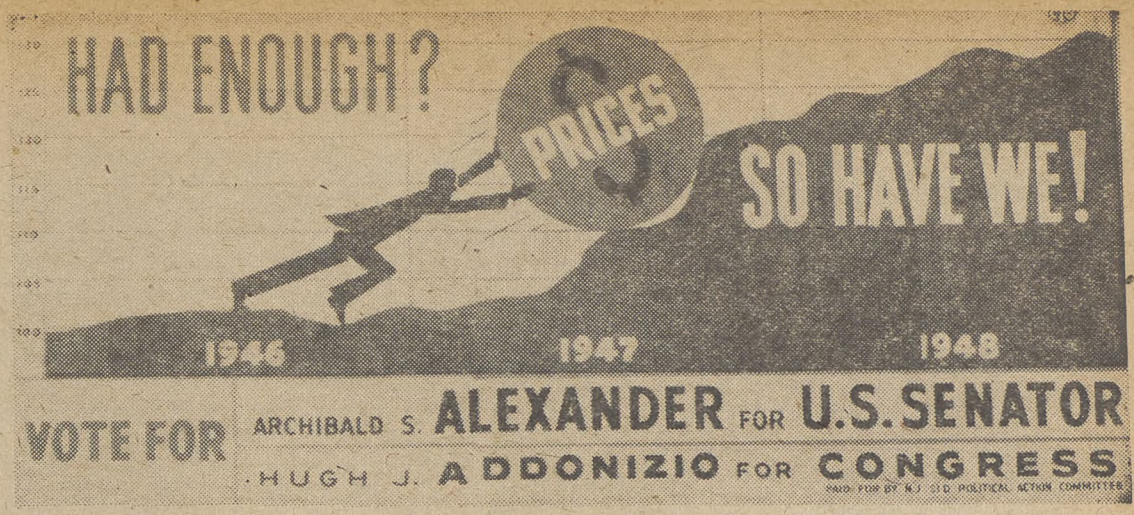
WASHINGTON MEMO (New York Post): Throughout his two-week trip Gov. Dewey gave the 80-odd reporters on his train no opportunity to ask questions which might have been embarrassing in view of his strategy of talking only in lofty generalities.

He held only one press conference during the trip, and that in a railroad club car under circumstances which effectively limited it to a narrow range.

In contrast, when he was running for President in 1944, Dewey held a hotel press conference at every major stop—sometimes two or three a day.



In New Jersey They Don't Like The GOP

Don't Forget State Issues In Campaign

UNION members are being warned not to forget state and local issues during the present campaign.

Thousands of jobs will be filled in November and PAC is trying to make sure that labor gets a fair proportion of those jobs so that the people will be served better than they have by many incumbents.

The Ohio PAC provides an example of how the state issue is being brought to the attention of voters.

Noting that the 97th General Assembly was composed of an overwhelming majority of Republicans, the CIO-PAC breaks down the list this way: Senate, 32 Republicans, four Democrats; House, 123 Republicans, 16 Democrats.

"So," says Ohio PAC, "it is fair to say that the Republicans must take responsibility for the actions of the past Legislature."

1. Refusing adequate benefits to Ohio unemployed workers and at the same time, giving employers a $30 million yearly reduction in unemployment compensation taxes.
2. Riddling Ohio laws protecting working women and children
3. Blocking low-cost housing projects in the state.
4. Trying to cripple Ohio Labor through the Van Aken Bill.
5. Breaking a platform promise to pass FEPC Legislation.

OHIO-PAC has indorsed Charles Sweeney for secretary of state; Joseph T. Ferguson for auditor; Harry V. Armstrong for treasurer; Herbert Duffy for attorney general, Robert B. Sohngen for judge of supreme court and Stephen M. Young for Congressman-At-Large. All are Democrats. In addition, a number of Congressional and local candidates have been backed.

No indorsement was made for Governor. "We vigorously condemn the action of Gov. Herbert in calling out heavily-armed troops against workers . . . we likewise deplore the actions of Frank Lausche, when, during his administration, he used the Governor's office unnecessarily and unfairly in labor disputes." Ohio PAC has indorsed Pres. Truman.

Natl. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll is also Ohio PAC chairman.

'Film Answers Election Queries

"Check list for Election Day," a 16 mm sound movie trailer produced by Natl. CIO-PAC, gives the answer to what should be done on election day.

Visual answers are given to such questions as:

How do you obtain poll watchers?

How do you organize emergency squads to do any necessary jobs?

How do you get old and handicapped persons to the polls?

The trailers can be spliced to any film and is made so that it can be used in any election campaign. It may be purchased from the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Place, N. W. Washington 6 D. C. It sells for $6 without can and reel.

Mr. Crump Don't 'Low No Damyankee Civil Rights

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ED CRUMP, beetle-browed political boss who took a bad beating in the recent Tennessee primary, has tossed his waning influence into the camp of the Dixiecrats.

Shades of the Confederacy! Mister Truman has sold Dixieland short. He's got himself a civil rights program that will whittle states' rights to the bone.

The whole thing is a scheme to get the Northern Negro vote.

That's what Mister Crump said when he announced his support for Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat candidate for President.

REPORTERS who have covered politics in Tennessee recall that Mister Crump is no slouch when it comes to using the Negro vote.

They recall that the aging Memphis politico, acting in a manner quite different from the Talmadge crowd in Georgia, has long been in favor of Negroes voting—if they voted for Crump candidates.

Crump and his boys, unlike Truman, didn't consider a civil rights program necessary to obtain the votes of some of the colored folks in Memphis.

All they needed was some money, some whisky and some trucks.

Reporters and photographers, acting on a tip that crooked voting was in the offing, started out to gather evidence. Here's what they found:

Truckloads of Negroes, rounded up by Crump lieutenants and paid off with cash and drink, were hauled from polling place to polling place.

At each place Crump-selected election officials permitted the "traveling hirelings" to vote for Crump-supported candidates.

Before long some of Mister Crump's cops arrived on the scene and destroyed some of the evidence by the simple method of smashing news cameras and tossing the reporter in charge of the expedition into jail.

The reporter, the cop said, was interfering with the conduct of an election!

MISTER Crump's boys slipped up a few years later. They didn't catch the photographers who took pictures of tombstones which stood above the bodies of men and women who were listed on the registration books as qualified voters.

Mister Crump, who is sure enough burned up about Mister Truman's terrible scheme to "win the Northern Negro vote," didn't let it be known how his organization stands as regards Rep. Estes Kefauver and Gordon Browning, who are running for senator and governor, respectively, on the regular Democratic ticket.

TWUA Welcomes DPs To Canada

A plan to give work and decent lives to some of Europe's displaced persons, worked out by the CIO Textile Workers and the Hamilton Cotton Co., Hamilton, Ont., bore fruit when 40 girls from DP camps arrived in Canada.

They were met by Jack Robinson of TWUA's Hamilton Joint Board, and cotton mill head A. V. Young on their arrival from Frankfurt, Germany.

The 40 happy girls became TWUA members almost the moment they arrived on American shores, by virtue of the union shop contract TWUA has with the Hamilton Cotton Co.

Enough Harvesters

The U. S. has the largest cotton crop in 11 years, Director Robert C. Goodwin of the U. S. Employment Service said, and in some places Mexican nationals are being brought in to help with the harvest. In Maine, where 40,000 potato harvesters are needed, Goodwin said some of the workers will be supplied from Canada. Generally, he said, the U. S. labor supply is adequate to meet the needs of the harvest.

Layoffs Curtailed Canning Output

The steadily increasing productivity rate of workers in canning and preserving plants was interrupted in 1947 by layoffs, figures released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics show.

According to a survey of these plants, BLS found that the output per worker increased 26½% between 1939 and 1946. But a cutback in employment in 1947, the last full year studied, brought an 8% drop in production per worker and a 4% decrease in production per man-hour.

By 1947, the BLS study showed, canning and preserving workers had increased their output per man-hour 10½% over the 1939 level.

Denham Announces Change at NLRB

Preparing for another season of Taft-Hartley labor relations, NLRB Gen. Counsel Robert N. Denham has announced a shakeup in his players in four important posts.

C. Edward Knapp leaves the NLRB field operations division in Washington, D. C., to become regional director in Minneapolis. He replaces John A. Penello, who moves to Baltimore to head the regional office. Ross M. Madden leaves the top job in Baltimore to take over in the Chicago region.

George J. Bott, former chief in the windy city moves to Washington to take the place of Charles M. Brooks, associate general counsel under Denham.

T-H JUST THE BEGINNING

It's nice occasionally to get important information direct from the horse's mouth even if you don't like the horse.

That's why we're indebted to Rep. Fred Hartley, the New Jersey Republican who has just become an author.

We'd long suspected that the GOP intended the Taft-Hartley Act as merely the beginning and not the end of anti-labor legislation. Hartley confirmed this suspicion both in his new book and in the press conference he held to call the book to public attention.

At his press conference Hartley chided the GOP leadership for being so namby-pamby about unions. These leaders (the softies) decided some time ago, Hartley said, not to pass any legislation "to which organized labor might possibly object" until after the November elections.

Hartley develops the same theme in his book:

"Under the Wagner Act the government was committed to advancing the banner of trade unionism . . . The Taft-Hartley Act has a different purpose.

"This is as good a time as any to point out that it (T-H) is only a start."

The GOP, Hartley said, became very politically minded in 1948 and decided not to go any further than the original T-H Act. He put it this way:

"Frankly, I think the United Mine Workers could have thrown a picket line around the U. S. Capitol and the Supreme Court without receiving more than a gentle reprimand from the Republican leaders.

"Republican leaders had an election to win; sound legislative principles were cast aside."

IF GOP WINS, THEN WHAT?

Hartley's statements fall into a neat pattern that the GOP and its big business backers have been drawing for some time—a pattern that should frighten every person who believes in trade unionism and democracy.

What Hartley said, in effect was, "Look, you union guys, we only trained our light artillery on you. If the GOP wins in November the heavy guns will be unlimbered."

He gave some idea of what could be expected—a "right to work" statute, outlawing of industry-wide bargaining and industry-wide strikes, application of anti-trust laws to unions, "clarification" of the ban on political expenditures by unions, and a ban on employer contributions to union welfare funds.

You might say that Hartley didn't know what he was talking about—but, after all, he co-authored the Taft-Hartley Act. He's one of the GOP's two top authorities on union-restricting legislation.

And he can speak freely and openly because he has decided not to run for re-election.

We have a hunch that Hartley's GOP colleagues who are seeking re-election would like to cut Fred's tongue out. And you couldn't blame them much.

He stated publicly that a GOP victory next month would be followed by additional curbs on labor. These curbs, he said, weren't imposed this year because the Republicans feared the political consequences.

Hartley has merely provided another link in the long chain of evidence supporting our frequent charge that the Republicans and their backers seek to make unions weak and ineffective.

Lock That Barn Door Now!

The Time To Get Steamed Up About Voting Is Before—Not After—Election Day

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S Nov. 3, the returns are in, the newspapers tell the story in the headlines—and you've got a sickish feeling in the pit of your tummy.

Tom Dewey has been elected President and the Republicans are solidly in control of the House and Senate.

Suddenly it dawns on you that the Grand Old Party is back in the saddle again—and completely back—for the first time since FDR was elected 16 years ago.

You take a look into the future and you see things you don't like.

YOU tell yourself that the world isn't going to come to an end and that the U. S. isn't going to fold up overnight just because the Republicans won.

But that doesn't keep you from wondering whether we're not heading for a lot of that "beautiful nonsense" which the nation enjoyed just before the bust in '29.

You can see the handwriting on the wall, but you're not quite sure what it says. It looks suspiciously like the stuff Hoover "wrote" during the last boom.

You shrug your shoulders—and then your thoughts turn to so-called social legislation.

MAYBE you can't figure out the connection between the GOP and the economic future of the country, but here's something you can get your teeth into.

You can forget about the new Congress providing a realistic minimum wage guarantee and consider yourself lucky if the present 40-cent minimum isn't eliminated.

Might as well forget, too, about health insurance and improvements in the social security system. You'll be fortunate if the system's coverage isn't reduced.

BY now you're really feeling bad, but you've just begun to add up the score of things to come.

What was it the Republican leaders were quietly saying about the Taft-Hartley Act? Oh, yes, they were going to "improve" it by adding some new anti-union "teeth"—but not until after election day.

Then you recall that employers had a "gentlemen's agreement" not to use T-H to the fullest until after Nov. 2.

It's now dawning on you that Nov. 2 was an important day—a history-making day.

It's a shame that you and your friends didn't find it convenient to vote!

But what the heck? What's a few votes more or less?

THEN you start adding things up—a few votes that weren't cast in your block, a few hundred that weren't cast in your precinct, a few thousand that weren't cast in your district.

You check the election returns and find that a number of candidates—"wrong" ones from your standpoint—were elected by narrow margins.

You mumble something about, "If we had just gotten out the vote in the Third District . . ."

Suddenly you become angry with yourself. You're all steamed up about the election! You're 100% in favor of PAC and doorbell ringing!

Then you feel as silly as the guy who put a big lock on the barn door after his horse was stolen.

White Skeptical of Wallace on Bias

BY WALTER WHITE

Executive Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The issue of human rights has already become one of the most important and explosive issues of the 1948 Presidential campaign.

With respect to Mr. Wallace let it be freely admitted that the stubborn courage exhibited on his recent trip through the South has established a model for other candidates.

Mr. Wallace's record on racial discrimination and segregation while he was Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary of Commerce is almost totally bad so far as performance is concerned.

Not only is there no record of Mr. Wallace acting to end discrimination—there is evidence, some of it detailed by Gardner Jackson in the ATLANTIC MONTHLY, that Mr. Wallace blocked attempts of some subordinates to correct discrimination in those agencies.

The outright theft by white plantation owners of parity checks from Negro tenant farmers under the Agriculture Adjustment Administration is notorious.

C. B. Baldwin, now Wallace's campaign manager, included in grants to white sharecroppers in the South funds to pay poll taxes; he refused the same privilege to Negroes and admitted as much before a Senate subcommittee.

The Farm Security Administration, under Dr. Will W. Alexander, a native of Georgia, repeatedly called Mr. Wallace's attention to the abuses Southern Negro farmers were suffering, but to no avail.

Later when Dr. Alexander resigned, Mr. Wallace, according to Dr. Alexander, said: "Don't you think the New Deal has undertaken to do too much for Negroes?"

While segregation was being eradicated from other government agencies such as Interior under Harold L. Ickes and the U. S. Housing Authority under Nathan Straus, the restaurant at Agriculture remained tightly segregated.

As Secretary of Commerce, appeals were made to Mr. Wallace to clean up employment discrimination in the Bureau of the Census whose racial attitude causes Negroes to call it "Alcatraz on the Potomac." Nothing was done.

Thus the record of performance of the Progressive Party's candidate, is such as to cause one to look with skepticism upon his present speeches.

Steelworkers Back Truman

The CIO Steelworkers' executive board has indorsed the candidacies of Pres. Harry S. Truman for re-election and of Sen. Alben W. Barkley (Ky.) for vice-president. The steel union's action had been expected since Truman and Barkley won the indorsement of the CIO executive board.

He Claims That He Outsmarted Them

Then election time rolls around again and you recall it. You dig back into your mind for all of the little details. Piece by piece you put it together—but there are some pieces missing.

You wonder whether it actually happened and you feel certain time has caused you to substitute a bit of fiction for some of the facts.

But you tell yourself it's a good story, anyhow, and well worth re-telling . . .

THE old-timer, a man who had fought many political and trade union battles, jabbed a cigar into his mouth, took a couple of deep drags, blew smoke toward the ceiling and then began talking.

"Did I ever tell you about the time I won an election almost single-handed because the guys who ran politics in my state tried to take unfair advantage of a group of uneducated miners?

"No? Well it was like this . . ."

He set the stage by telling about his organizing a union in a district in which there were a large number of miners who had been unable to obtain much schooling.

Then, he said, his group started talking about getting into politics.

THE politicos who had been running things were appalled by the idea of union political action, and they decided to do something about it.

So, when the Legislature met they jammed through a voter registration law designed to keep many miners from balloting on election day.

"It was one of the darndest laws you ever saw," the old-timer said. "It had a clause setting up a complicated procedure to be followed by those who could not meet certain educational requirements.

"I sat down one day and figured out that it would take the average miner in my district at least an hour to take the 'test' the law provided even after he had been carefully coached.

"This gave me an idea for outsmarting the guys who had passed the law."

THE unionists decided to run a candidate for Congress at the next election and to take full advantage of the new registration law.

When the campaign opened the old-timer and his cohorts began coaching the miners in the procedure to be followed to become qualified voters.

They checked the new law carefully and found no loopholes. Then they made a careful check of the district to find out how many registration places there would be and where they would be located.

Finally the unionists' scheme was worked out to near-perfection. It just couldn't miss!

"WHEN registration day arrived there was a long line of miners in front of nearly every registration place in the district," the old-timer said.

"One by one—at a rate of about an hour each—the men took the 'test' required under the new law. There were still miners in line when the day ended and the registration books were closed.

"Well, we sent our man to Congress without a bit of trouble!

"You see, what happened was this. The new law required that every voter should be registered on a certain day regardless of whether he had registered before.

"Our boys took up so much of the registering officers' time that most of the opposition group couldn't qualify to vote."

Guild Finds Newsprint Monopoly Threat to Free Press

By SAM EUBANKS

Executive Vice-Pres., CIO Newspaper Guild

Estimates of the gap between world production and world demand for newsprint range from over one million tons to more than two million tons: actual production in 1947 was 7,653,000 tons—1,441,000 tons short of the Newsprint Association of Canada's own estimate of world demand if government import restrictions were lifted.

The total idle newsprint capacity in the world is estimated by NAC at one and three-quarter million tons in 1947 and one and one-half million tons in 1948 and 1949. It is illusory to believe that full utilization of this idle capacity can be expected soon.

CANADA, the world's leading producer of newsprint (almost 75 per cent of world output in 1947), is operating at full capacity for the first time in at least twenty-two years. In the countries where idle capacity stands—England, France, Germany, Finland, Norway, Japan—full utilization is blocked by shortages of pulpwood, fuel, machinery and manpower, and by competing demands for other wood and pulp products. By the time, if ever, this idle capacity can be activated, world demand will be pushed to higher levels by increases in population and literacy.

The immediate need for expanding productive facilities is clear, but the Canadian newsprint industry does not choose to meet this need because the present supply-demand imbalance is highly profitable. It is better business for the mill owners to keep production constantly short of demand because thereby present extortionate pricing policies can be maintained indefinitely.

It is sheer nonsense for the head of the NAC to say that "the present economics of the newsprint business are built upon mill-construction costs of 1930." In 1930 most of the newsprint industry was going into bankruptcy or verging on the brink of insolvency. Currently their record-high profits could easily finance expansion of productive facilities and the immensely profitable operations of the last five years have completely stabilized their financial position.

This is not a private controversy between newspaper publishers and their newsprint suppliers. This is a matter in which the public has a vital stake. The American Newspaper Guild has long been concerned with the newsprint situation, seeing in it a grave threat to the free press everywhere.

IN Europe the press has been almost obliterated by the absence of newsprint. It is generally agreed that newsprint supplies reaching Great Britain and the Continent are insufficient to keep the people of democratic countries informed. For example, the benefits of the European Recovery Program are not being adequately publicized abroad because newspapers have space for only meager reports. They do not have the space because they cannot afford newsprint at its present price level. As a consequence the democracies are seriously disadvantaged in the world conflict with totalitarian ideologies.

In this country the small independent press is steadily being reduced in numbers because of the stringency of newsprint supplies. The expanding newsprint demands of large metropolitan newspapers cannot be fulfilled even though large publishers are operating at a profit level that enables them to absorb newsprint costs 105 per cent greater than in 1935-39.

EVIDENCE compiled in a factual study on the newsprint industry, commissioned this year by the American Newspaper Guild, points to the monopolistic character of the Canadian newsprint industry and the undesirable character of its price and production policies; the dangerous effects on the American press of supine dependence on Canadian newsprint supplies; the practicability of developing additional sources of supply in Alaska and the Southern United States; the feasibility of concerted action by American publishers to solve the newsprint problem.

It is time for constructive action which will insure adequate newsprint supplies fairly distributed at reasonable prices. Having met with Canadian suppliers to no avail, will American newspaper publishers now follow through with intelligent concerted action for a solution of the newsprint problem in the public interest?

A Blunt Refusal Monopoly Says 'No'

Sam Eubanks was prompted to write this article by a news story in the N. Y. Times telling of a meeting of the Canadian newsprint manufacturers and American newspaper publishers where the manufacturers bluntly refused to expand their production facilities. The Times also printed a letter from Eubanks making his position clear.

Rep. Fred Hartley Says:

T-H IS ONLY THE BEGINNING, CHUMS, IF GOP IS WINNER IN NOVEMBER

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE hero of this story is Rep. Fred A. Hartley—20th Century Sir Galahad, gentle, loving messiah of the labor boss-persecuted man.

No—the CIO News hasn't abdicated to the NAM News. We're talking about another publication—the latest of those "How I Fought Off the Dragons and Saved America from Itself," books. It's a book titled "Our New National Labor Policy," by Rep. Hartley, now turned author by the grace of Funk & Wagnalls and Modern Industry Magazine.

It's a history not quite on par with Gibbons' classic "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire." It could well have been titled "The Rise and Fall of American Labor's Right to Organize."

We woudn't be wasting any vauable space on this chaotic collection of contradictions, misrepresentations, self-admiration, anti-union tirades and crocodile tears but for one reason. Though Hartley has ended his political career (he says), the book, like "Mein Kampf," outlines the future course of action against labor recommended by Hartley and likely to be followed by his Republican soul mates.

A Revelation

The book has one other value. Readers who previously had accepted the loud assurances of the law's proponents that they had only the welfare of the worker at heart cannot fail to catch the vindictive spirit, the basic distrust of unionism, the unswerving loyalty to Big (Capital B) Business that promoted the bill's conception.

In the very first chapter Hartley gives himself and his friends away—naively refuting all their public protestations. Labor charged time and again that the law was passed as a vindictive measure against unions and that its purpose was to wipe out the Wagner Act of 1935. T-H opponents vigorously denied both.

So here's Hartley on the subject:

"The Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 (Taft-Hartley) wiped out, in a single enactment, the main legal prop supporting a national labor policy which had existed for nearly 12 years. In many respects it completely reversed long-established policies of the National Labor Relations Board . . .

"Under the Wagner Act the government was committed to advancing the banner of trade unionism. That was the stated purpose of the 1935 statute.

"The Taft-Hartley Act has a different purpose . . .

It's in the Bag!

"No longer was the National Labor Relations Board to devote its time and energies to the promotion of trade unionism."

Amen! Not a union in the country that can't wholeheartedly attest to that.

Throughout the book Author Hartley blasts the Wagner Act as just one of the New Deal social measures which he considered the Republicans' sacred duty to destroy. But in one of his typical contradictions he accurately describes the Wagner Act's purpose, reasons for its enactment and argues that T-H did not emasculate the 1935 law.

Split Personality

Thus, here's Hartley's alter ego:

"So management fought the growing labor movement by fair means and foul. It was all very well to manage your business as you saw fit, but the tactics of far too many managers of American business showed that the managers had forgotten they were dealing with other plain American citizens just like themselves.

"So we got the Wagner Act, in 1935.

"It was said that labor should have the right to organize.

"It said that labor should have the right to bargain collectively."

And that, in the Congressman's own words was the Wagner Act, which he in other passages described as "the basic cause of most labor-management controversy."

One would have thought that even the New Jersey Congressman, with all his professed concern for the freedom of the worker, would have approved such a law. But no. Says he with great pride:

"I ended up with the distinction of being the only member of the House on record as opposing the Wagner Act." He was referring to the final vote on the Wagner Act in 1935.

Vindictiveness, of course, had nothing to do with it (it says here). In fact, Hartley loves labor unions. He says so himself.

Flays Labor Leaders

"This same arrogance (of labor leaders, of course), as it later turned out, enabled us in the Congress to pass the only corrective measure in the field of labor-management legislation that has been enacted for more than a decade," says he.

In other words, because unions had grown strong enough to enforce a good part of their demands, "corrective" measures obviously were needed. And because labor leaders refused to give the Congressmen suggestions as to the best methods of hamstringing unions, they were "arrogant." Hartley and the boys would indeed knock them down a peg.

Not vindictive? Try this one:

"If the Taft-Hartley Act is not adequate to reduce John L. Lewis to manageable proportions, your Congress will enact further legislation to curb or outlaw his arbitrary irresponsible actions."

Or this:

"Many members of both the House and Senate consider an attack by the leaders of organized labor as a tribute to their clear thinking, judgment, and courage. The more violent the slander, the more bitter the language, the prouder most of us are to be on the receiving end."

Or this:

"Out on the West coast, labor unions had grown big, bad, and tough. When they wanted something they got it, or rather, they did until the Taft-Hartley Bill became law."

And on and on and on . . .

Despite his many contradictions, Hartley remains consistent on one point. Always he directs his fire at "labor bosses," a convenient substitute for "labor unions," which he allegedly adores.

Hartley's Thinking

Hartley's mental picture of the labor movement consists of an oppressed mass of dull-witted workers vainly struggling to cast off the yoke of corrupt, Hitlerian "labor bosses," who arbitrarily pull strikes to satisfy their Macchiavellian whims.

Note this:

"In fact, the only individual who could possibly really want a strike is the union leader himself. He needs a strike to establish prestige among his followers, and likewise to make the employer give in a little more easily the next time contract renewal time rolls around."

The fact that very few unions — and no CIO unions to our knowledege—dare embark on so serious a move without first polling the membership never entered the Congressman's red head ('scuse the expression.) Equally oblivious is he to the fact that plain self-interest (even of Hartley's "labor boss") would require the leader first to assure himself of his members' backing. Without it, a strike is lost. As for himself, the labor leader risks losing his job and his union. For this reason alone, self-interest—to say nothing of the union and national welfare—dictates that union leaders recommend a walkout only as a last resort.

"Labor racketeering had become the rule rather than the exception."

(Dr. C. Wright Mills, in his recently-published book "New Men of Power" has this to say on racketing and Communism in labor unions:

("It is said that there are racketeers in the AFL and that the CIO has Communists . . . There are also a few Communists scattered in the AFL, although so far as we know, there are no conventional labor racketeers in the CIO."

(Dr. Mills is a sociology professor at Columbia University, has been widely published in national magazines and has done research for state and federal governments, business corporations and labor unions.)

Workers 'Plight'

How badly the worker has been exploited by his elected leaders is seen in another Hartley nightmare:

"The plight of the laboring man was a real one. The rank-and-file worker meant no more to the leaders of organized labor than the rabble to Louis XVI. The laboring man was merely a pawn in the game . . . "

Therefore: "These labor leaders were not content to use their power for the good of the worker. They had long ago forgotten the real reason why such authority had been given them."

(And that, dear reader, is why we no longer have the privilege of working 60 hours a week in those cozy little sweat shops—because labor leaders forgot "the real reason why.")

By now it should be clear that Mr. Hartley doesn't like labor leaders.

To this there's one exception—AFL Pres. William Green. Unfortunately, Mr. Green broke off the honeymoon—a source of great regret to the Congressman. But Hartley, of the "turn the other cheek" school, holds no grudges. "I have always admired Mr. Green," says he. If the AFL head now blasphemes his old friend all over the newspapers and airwaves, it's because "Mr. Green was ill-advised."

In fact, Hartley boasts about a letter of endorsement he received from Green in 1940. As read into the Congressional Record on April 15, 1947, by Hartley, the letter said in part:

"Every one of the votes he (Hartley) cast while a member of Congress has supported the views of the American Federation of Labor . . . Let us prove to all that we are truly grateful to Congressman Hartley for the fine service he has rendered us by returning him to Congress by an overwhelming vote."

One of those AFL "views" supported by Hartley was a set of Amendments to the Wagner Labor Act written in 1939, as Hartley says, "in large part, by the representatives of the American Federation of Labor."

The AFL's proposals, designed to protect its craft unions against the growth of plantwide or industrial organization of the CIO, formed the nucleus for the Taft-Hartley Act eight years later.

That's Rep. Fred Hartley's opinion.

lave No Respect The Chairman'

When Rep. Hartley became chairman of the House Labor Committee last year, Rep. Mary Norton (D., N. J.) resigned. For ten years she had won nationwide respect as the head of that committee. On April 15, 1947, she was asked on the House floor to give her reason for resigning. She said:

"Frankly, in one sense, I regret that the gentleman has asked me the question because I have never knowingly hurt a member of Congress on either side of the aisle. I have a very great respect and affection for the members I have served with, but I regret to say I have no respect for the present chairman of the Labor Committee. And I could not serve with a chairman for whom I hold no respect.

"My reason for that is that during the 10 years I was chairman of the Labor Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey, who is now chairman of the Labor Committee, and who comes here before you and talks about labor as if he knew something about it, attended exactly six meetings in 10 years. That was my reason for leaving the Committee on Labor."

"Bullheaded," "arrogant," "contemptuous," all were used to describe Bittner. In fact, says Hartley, "If I happened to be an employer faced with Bittner or others like him representing my workers, I would close my business."

If Hartley and his committee did not appreciate Bittner's 40-year struggle for improvement of workers' conditions, Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D., W. Va.), does. Kilgore has known Bittner since the campaign to organize the West Virginia mines.

Said Kilgore in reply to the Hartley blast:

"Mr. Van Bittner is truly a great American. I have had the pleasure of working closely with Mr. Bittner for many years and I well know how much he has done to improve the standard of living of all Americans. An ardent trade unionist, he has been one of the great leaders in the struggle to give every man an opportunity to secure for himself a life embodying dignity and security. Mr. Bittner's work will be remembered long after his petty detractors are forgotten."

Beyond the tirades, the egocentric displays and the contradictions are the outright misrepresentations.

" . . . I have always felt," says Sir Galahad, "the most important single provision in the new law is the right for the employer to sue for recovery of damages from proscribed union activities."

Knows Better

Hartley, of course, knows better than this. He knows that unions have been sueable in every state in the country, and were sueable in Federal Court for their authorized illegal actions or the authorized actions of their "agents."

The T-H Act, therefore, did not give to the employer the right to sue unions. They have always had that right. The T-H Act, however, encouraged damage suits in Federal — not local — courts by permitting unions to be sued for illegal actions of their "agents" — whether committed with or without the union's approval. A union "agent" under the law can mean anyone from a non-union passer-by at a picketing scene to a company stooge. Hartley in another section admits this:

"In either type of suit the union is bound by the acts of its agents, regardless of whether or not the specific actions were approved in advance by the officers of the unions."

To no other group of citizens in the country does such a law apply.

Another misrepresentation, mentioned earlier, bears comment.

"The Wagner Act," the book begins, "which we now recognize as the basic cause of most labor-management controversy, was enacted as a measure to reduce industrial strife."

A sly one there. The Wagner Act, as the Congressman himself stated later, dealt with only one cause of strikes—employers' refusal to bargain.

Other labor-management controversies such as strikes over wages, working conditions, union security, etc., were not the concern of the Wagner Act. In 1935, year of the Wagner's Act adoption, recognition strikes constituted 27.3% of the walkouts. By 1946 these were reduced to 16.3% of the total.

Likewise misleading is a statement insisting, "We went into no area of labor-management relations in which the Wagner Act, as administered, had not already operated."

To mention but a few areas into which T-H stuck its nose: Union security agreements, political beliefs of union officers, damage suits, regulation of welfare funds, decertification elections, etc., etc.

"This is as good a time as any to point out that it (T-H) is only a start. There are several provisions from the original Hartley bill which I am still advocating, and there are other proposals worth further consideration."

Hartley's list of further labor restrictions will bear watching by every union member, because he makes it plain that only the shadow of the 1948 elections prevented Congress from making the law much more severe. Presumably, then, if a Republican majority is returned to Congress in November, these are the measures we can expect:

- Ban on all forms of union security.

(On this Hartley says that Sen. Ball's "argument with which I agreed, was that all forms of compulsory unionism should be outlawed . . . I still agree with Mr. Ball.")

- Ban on industry-wide bargaining.

(Under the guise of the term "monopolistic" strike, Hartley argues that unions should be broken up into disjointed locals. Personally, he says, he prefers craft unions anyway. Under such a provision unions would be sued under the anti-trust laws for a nation-wide strike.)

- Stronger penalties for failure to sign non-Communist affidavits.

- "Clarify"—that is tighten—the ban against political expenditures by unions.

(Earlier Hartley bemoaned the Federal District Court decision which cited the ban on unions' use of their newspapers for political purposes as stifling freedom of the press. Hartley says it ain't so. Such union organs as the CIO News aren't newspapers anyway. "This labor paper," quoth he, "in spite of its name, is not a newspaper in the accepted sense of the word. It is a highly inflammatory, completely biased weekly, with its own ax to grind.")

- "More effective provisions against featherbedding practices."
- Removal of pension plans, welfare funds or insurance programs from the field of compulsory bargaining.

'To Lower Costs'

Publishers of Rep. Hartley's book, "Our New National Labor Policy," are Funk & Wagnalls Co., in association with Modern Industry magazine. It is one of a series of books on management problems published by these two outfits, known as "Modern Industry Books."

Why that magazine should be anxious to publish Hartley's story can be seen in its description of itself:

"For all management men concerned with making and marketing better products at lower cost."

Taft-Hartley, they hope, will help cut down that cost —the labor cost.

Coming Events

After passage of T-H, says Hartley, "Republican leaders of both the House and Senate decided that no more legislation to which labor could possibly object would be passed until after the presidential election of 1948."

And the field of labor restrictions is just a starter. The entire roster of New Deal social legislation, if Hartley is correct, is headed for the guillotine. "I am well aware," he says, "of the political difficulties of eliminating the New Deal social legislation. It cannot be repealed at a single stroke."

Hartley won't be in Congress next year. What his next step will be he hasn't revealed. But this much seems certain: He'll be around somewhere, pulling strings for enactment of a sequel to his "Labor-Mangement (as some good union printer unwittingly but appropriately set the type on one of the book's pages) Act of 1947."

Still Gobbledegook

"A full employment law—for lawyers" was how CIO Pres. Murray described the T-H law before and after its passage.

"Gobbledegook" was what others called it.

Here's what Hartley himself says:

"A good law should be easily understood by everyone concerned. Certainly men trained in the legal profession should have no difficulty in understanding legislation. . .

"But we finally produced a most complex collection of legal words and phrases."

Va. CIO Flays Progs. Dixiecrats, Backs HST

THE largest Virginia CIO convention in the CIO council's eight-year history in the state has unanimously backed the Truman-Barkley Democratic ticket and loosed a blistering attack on the States Rights (Dixiecrat) party.

Repeatedly throughout the three-day convention, the Byrd-Tuck machine and the Progressive Party were blasted.

The 214 Virginians placed themselves squarely behind Pres. Truman's civil rights program and urged legislation against racial and religious discrimination. The convention called for state and federal anti-poll tax laws; fair employment laws; legislation prohibiting discrimination in schools and colleges, transportation or public places.

The delegates moved to step up political activity in every affiliated local, and overwhelmingly rejected a proposal which would have established a "purge list" of Virginia Congressmen who supported the Taft-Hartley bill.

The Truman-Barkley ticket was given a further boost by the appearance of Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.), who warned that "a vote for Dewey is a vote for depression."

The fighting Floridian brought the cheering delegates to their feet when he said: "When the Tafts and Hartleys and all those who stood with them in this ignoble deed are gone and forgotten, the labor movement of America will be stronger and greater and mightier."

CIO membership in the state has increased by 19,777 since the Southern organizing drive began in June, 1946, Ernest B. Pugh, state director of the CIO Organizing Committee, told the convention. Of the 86 NLRB elections in which the CIO participated since 1946, he said, it won 80%.

Philip Clowes, assistant to Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, stressed that the job of CIO's Southern organizers is not political action but organizing. "If we do that," he said, "we will have effective, successful political action."

George Weaver, director of the CIO's Committee to Abolish Discrimination, noted that America "has not been able to exercise moral leadership commensurate with its economic strength.

"Over two-thirds of the peoples of the world are of the so-called darker races," he continued, "and they pull no punches in telling the American representatives that 'we can't trust you. You have probably the finest constitution and set of principles and ideals that man has been able to reduce to writing... but after 270 years you haven't yet learned to practice what you preach.'"

By acclamation delegates returned Council Pres. Charles C. Webber to office for his third term. Lloyd P. Vaughan, incumbent secretary-treasurer and eleven vice-presidents on a slate headed by Webber were elected.

In Minnesota:

Sen. Ball Is Still Worried

They say Sen. Joe Ball (R. Minn.), running for reelection against Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey, of Minneapolis, the Democratic - Farmer - Labor candidate, is looking mighty worried these days.

But, apparently, he began worrying in 1942, when he was elected to his first full term. For, in that vote, Ball got only 356,297 ballots to a total of 402,150 for his Farmer-Labor, Democratic (The DFL was formed later) and independent opponents. This year, there are only two candidates, Ball and Humphrey.

You want to make a political speech — one packed with facts?

CIO-PAC has a booklet that will help you. It's called "Speakers' Book of Facts."

Its 58 pages contain information about prices and profits, housing, Taft-Hartley Act, civil rights, social security and unemployment insurance.

The booklet is designed principally for union officials and PAC leaders.

REDHANDED

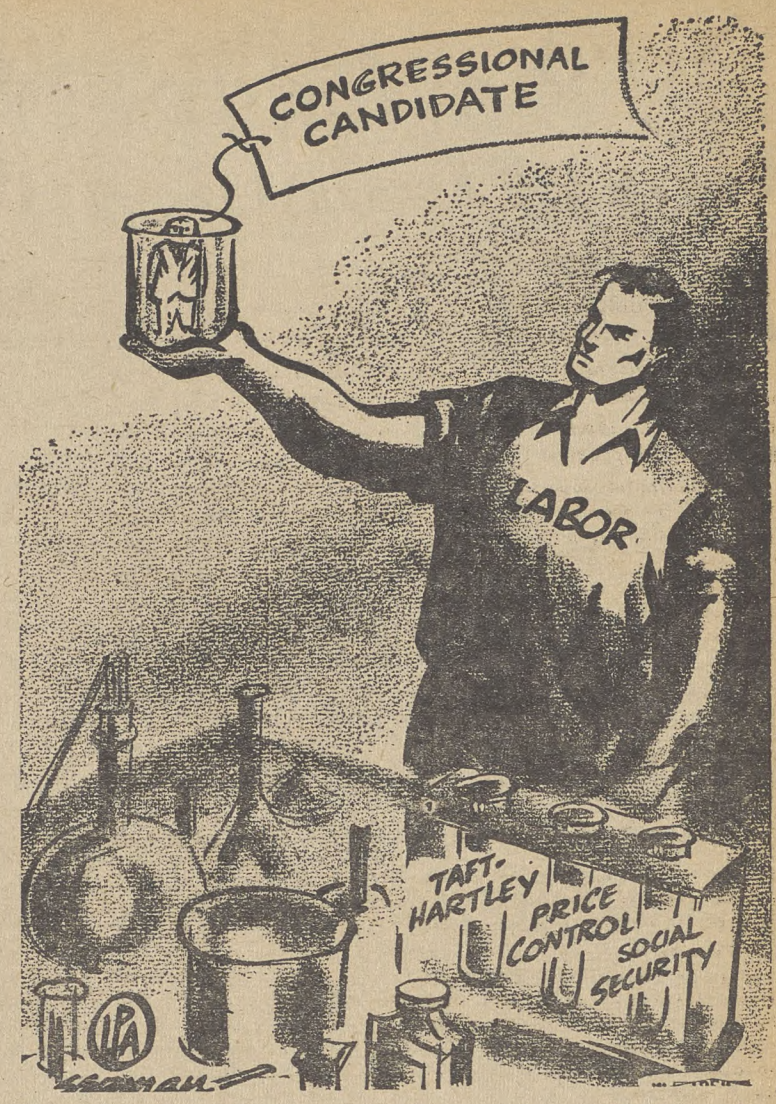
It seems we did a horrible thing when we reprinted an article from "the American bourgeois weekly, Saturday Evening Post," which praised James B. Carey for his work in WFTU.

"They lacked the courage to speak openly against the line of the WFTU," Trud went on, "preferred to deal the blow by the hands of the organ of a monopolistic concern."

Editor's note: (1) Carey has been trying to make WFTU follow the "line" under which it was founded; (2) We or he knew nothing about the Post article until it appeared; (3) So there.

The Acid Test



Union Wars On Accidents

There were over two million industrial accidents last year, resulting in the deaths of over 17,000 workers. Another 1900 were left permanently unable to work, while 90,000 others remained with permanent partial disabilities.

Those figures were cited by John R. Kumpel of the CIO Rubber Workers at the 34th annual convention of the Intl. Association of the Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions in New York City.

To induce accident prevention in the plants, the Rubber Workers have adopted a 10-point program, Kumpel said. It consists, in part, of the following:

Set up safety committee of at least three members of the local union; have management name at least three members to serve on this committee; have weekly inspection trips by the committee once a week.

Hold safety meeting jointly with management once a week. Keep a record of minutes of all safety meetings; have the committee work out an educational program for shop stewards and membership.

Develop a good merit system of award for the department which has fewest accidents; work out a better program on safety suggestions; have the committee acquaint itself with accident-prevention activities of state departments.

Draft a section on safety and health and incorporate it into the union agreement or contract.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci, Utah, reports that an NLRB election held at the Richardson Battery Plant at Ogden, Utah, resulted in 26 votes for the CIO Rubber Workers and four votes for the AFL Teamsters. This is a new plant and it will soon have some 200 workers employed. At an NLRB election among the employes of the Cudahy plant of Salt Lake City, Utah, the results were 68 votes for the CIO Packinghouse Workers and 35 votes for the AFL Meat Cutters Union. It is also reported by Bonacci that at an election held at the American Linen Supply Co., to secure a union shop, the vote was 100 for and 5 against.

An election victory in the U. S. Corrugated Fibre Box Co., of Polk, Penna., was reported by Ralph W. Tillotson, CIO Sub-Regional Director in Erie, Pa. Forty votes were cast for the CIO Paperworkers, 10 votes for no union. Steel Rep. Ross Atwell carried out the organization work and the election.

Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, reports that in a union security election at the American Car & Foundry Company in Wilmington, Del., 128 voted yes, 15 no. The total number eligible to vote was 179. Gallagher also reports that in an election conducted at the Welin David & Boat Works, Local 60, Perth Amboy, N. J., the results were 219 votes for CIO and 213 for AFL. A union security election at the Superior Zinc Corp., Bristol, Pa., resulted in 54 votes for, 9 against. The total number eligible to vote was 72.

IAM RAID THWARTED

Local 267 of the Transport Workers decisively defeated an attempted raid when the employes of the Philadelphia Suburban Transportation Co., Phila., Pa., voted 109 to 55 against the IAM in an NLRB conducted election. TWU Intl. Rep. Joseph R. Marks assisted the officers of Local 267 in their campaign.

George Brown, director of organization of the CIO Woodworkers reports victories in two union shop authorization elections in Washington State: Taylor Brothers Logging Co., Castle Rock, Wash., 60 yes, 2 against; Weyerhaeuser Lumber Co., Longview, Wash., 941 for, 125 against. Director Brown also reports that in an election at the Bond Wood Treating Plant, Louisville, Ky., out of 147 eligible to vote, 102 votes were cast for CIO, 36 for no union.

CIO Reg. Dir., Anthony J. Federoff reports that in a union shop election held at the Schenley Distillery, Pittsburgh, Pa., organized by Local 266, CIO Brewery Workers the vote was 935 yes, 7 no. There were 1129 employes eligible to vote.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone, Connecticut, reports that the Cleaners and Dyers Local Union 364 won a State Labor Relations election at the Cities Service Cleaners in New Haven, Conn. The vote was 15 in favor of union and 2 against.

UNION GROWTH

A recent Bureau of Labor Statistics survey showed that there has been a five-fold increase in labor union membership since 1933. At that time there were nearly three million union members. Today there are more than 15,000,000 union members. This means that one out of four in the total labor force in the Nation is a union member.

It also means that this year organized labor will constitute exactly 26% of the expected turnout at the polls. It is hoped by the writer that all members of the CIO will stand together as a united front in our efforts to re-elect President Truman and support him with a liberal and democratic Congress.

The forward movement of American labor has not been halted by the Slave-Labor 80th Congress. However, it has been warned and knows what to expect from a second 80th Congress. We will go to the polls this November and show that labor doesn't want another 80th Congress or a President who defends such a Congress; we will show it with fifteen million votes.

Committee For Constitutional Government Plea

'Needed: 100,000 Paul Reveres To Save Government From Labor-Boss Control'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

It attacks the democratic principles upon which our government is based and casts slurs upon the integrity of lawmakers in general. It bitterly denounces the Taft-Hartley law—for being too weak.

The pamphlet, written by John W. Scoville and published by the Committee for Constitutional Government, an outfit financed by die-hard labor-haters, is one of a number of anti-union publications peddled by the CCG.

It follows the line laid down by the Natl. Association of Manufacturers in its big newspaper and radio publicity drive—that unions are monopolies.

The pamphlet, which takes the coal strike last spring as its jumping off place, has none of the usual NAM slickness, however. Scoville, carried away by his zeal to brand unions as "monopolistic," lets slip some remarks that betray a startling disloyalty to our democratic form of government.

T-H Called Weak

After attacking the Taft-Hartley law for "still preserving and protecting the labor monopolies" as a weak attempt "to eliminate some of the evils," Scoville writes:

"We may note that the monopolies which are encouraged by government are among groups of large numerical strength and voting power. Perhaps the conscience of the lawmaker, when he ponders the monopoly problem, is blunted by the fact that government is itself a colossal monopoly, with power to deprive the citizen of property, liberty and life.

"The fact that the majority rule in a democracy should not obscure the fact that the majority vote simply determines which group shall be given monopoly power. Invariably the ruling majority will pass laws to benefit the ruling group and to oppress minorities.

Un-American Unit Silent

Neither the House Un-American Activities Committee nor any of the other Congressional Committees which claim they are attempting to rout out subversives have taken the trouble to investigate the Committee for Constitutional Government.

Scoville's latest pamphlet contains a statement that "a copy has gone to all members of Congress for their information."

"Thus, existing laws favor tenants as against landlords; favor employes as against employers; favor the poor as against the rich. Those who clamor for greater equality in wealth and income deny that citizens should have equality in the law . . .

"To expect that a majority of voters will ever demand an impartial government with equal rights for all is probably an Utopian dream."

Having disposed of American democratic ideals in this fashion, Scoville concludes with a vicious attack on unions. Claiming that there is "considerable evidence" to prove that unions, instead of increasing real wages, have really lowered them, he goes on:

Unions Seen as Robbers

"But even if it could be proved that labor unions have increased the real wages of organized workers, this would be no valid defense. We could not defend an association of bank robbers by showing that the association had increased the loot."

A much more ambitious piece by Scoville—a 160-page tract called "Labor Monopolies or Freedom," also distributed by the Committee for Constitutional Government—calls for a return to conditions that existed before passage of the Wagner, Social Security, and Fair Labor Standards acts—and preferably to the days when the Sherman Act was enforced exclusively against labor unions.

One of CCG's stunts is the distribution of a small printed slip designed for "tuck-in" mail, that is, can be stuck into any letter. The heading on this slip reads: "Needed, 100,000 Paul Reveres to Save Your Government From Labor-Boss Control!" It is addressed to "Middle-Class Citizens, Professional Men, Farmers, Stockholders, Industrial Workers," and carries a blank for contributions.

This reads: "To further your non-partisan, non-political, educational work, making clear the dangers arising from labor monopolies' misusing gigantic funds for political campaigns, I hereby subscribe . . ."

Free Literature

Offered free is a copy of "Housewives' Dilemma No. 2," which, says the CCG, "explains the danger of labor-boss rule to middle-classes, professional men, stockholders, farmers, skilled workers."

The Committee for Constitutional Government is a revamped edition of the reactionary Natl. Committee to Uphold the Constitution, founded in 1937 by Frank Gannett, newspaper publisher, who is still one of CCG's biggest "angels," according to Friends of Democracy, non-sectarian, non-profit organization in New York founded to fight anti-democratic influences in the U. S.

"The Committee has many influential connections in the Republican Party, among Southern Democrats, and in Congress," says the FOD. "It has brought pressure group techniques to a point of perfection. In 1946 it spent $470,000 supplied by 25,000 individual subscribers and contributors to distribute 16 million pieces of printed matter to one million 'leadership individuals.'"

One of the affiliates through which the Committee operates, according to FOD, is America's Future, Inc., which syndicates the writings and sponsors the Sunday radio broadcasts of Sam Pettengill, former congressman and one of the nation's outstanding reactionary publicists.

Mich. Univ. Criticized

ACTION of the University of Michigan in suspending its entire workers' education program while it "studies" charges made by General Motors against the program has been sharply criticized by the Natl. CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

"It would be a tragedy of major significance if General Motors is allowed to succeed in its transparent effort to destroy the growing workers' education movement in the U. S.," said Stanley Ruttenberg, department director.

GM leveled an attack against the program at hearings last summer on the Labor Extension Service Bill before the House Subcommittee on Education and recently lodged charges with Michigan University's board of regents.

The board ordered the program suspended while it studied GM's charges. Meanwhile, the fall schedule has been scuttled.

"While organized labor is developing successful labor education services in cooperation with a score of state universities and public support for a Federal Labor Extension Service is growing," Ruttenberg declared, "we cannot sit by while General Motors destroys one of the oldest and most respected pioneer state programs."

NAACP Nominee Is Walter Reuther

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers is one of five persons nominated to fill vacancies on the board of directors of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The nominees are subject to election by the NAACP branches.

Librarians Are Urged To Seek Better Pay

Judge Hubert Delany set off a heated argument when he urged the convention of the New York Library Association at Lake Saranac, N. Y., to "get on the street corners" and fight for higher wages.

"If you let people scare you off from joining unions by being called Communists, then you don't deserve to get any more than you are getting," Judge Delany said. "Librarians should stop being what we call 'respectable.'"

Greece Moving Steadily Toward Recovery--Golden

CLINTON S. Golden, labor adviser to the Economic Cooperation Administration, says Greece is moving steadily toward recovery, and in addition is making a sizeable contribution to Europe's recovery. Golden is a former vice-president of the CIO Steelworkers.

Golden, who spent seven months in Greece as labor adviser to the Greek Mission, says this is all the more remarkable because Greece has been forced to fight a war during the recovery period, a war which is made necessary to bring order to the country.

"The American Mission to Greece, of which I was a member, initiated this recovery and now ECA is making a solid contribution," Golden said. "Currency has been stabilized; inflation halted with a resultant benefit to workers and to the general population.

"Particularly vital in all war-devasted countries has been restoration of transportation facilities. Two important bridges, the great one at Gorgopotamos and the Corinth Canal railway bridge, have been completed. The opening of these bridges will speed up other reconstruction projects in the area."

Interstate and coastwise commerce will be materially aided now that the canal through the isthmus has been opened for traffic, Golden said. During the war the Germans dynamited and blocked it with huge parts of bombed bridges and other debris.

LABOR has had its share in this achievement," Golden said. "One of the many examples of the speed and skill which characterized the building operation is the fact that the 120-ton steel trusses were constructed and joined at the center span in just 12 days. It is interesting to remember that toward the end of the last century, a French company accomplished what Emperor Nero tried to do 19 centuries earlier—cut through the narrow isthmus and open it up to shipping."

Airports are being finished rapidly, and highway paving has been going on at the rate of five miles a day.

"Although Greek attention has been pretty much focused on swift recovery of its industry and commerce," Golden said, "public health and other recovery projects have not been overlooked. For example, up to the end of August, nearly 4,500 villages were sprayed in the malaria-control campaign."

Holland Union Thanks CIO For CARE Packs

The Netherlands Trade Union Federation writes the CIO that the 182 CARE food packages sent for distribution to trade unionists in Holland have been received.

"This generous consignment," writes Pres. E. Kupers, of the Federation, "is for us another manifestation that the CIO is really bringing international relief into practice."

The packages, Kupers writes, are being distributed by the Federation's Women's League to families particularly in need, due to long-continued illness of mother or father.

Act Now To Avoid Bust—CIO

THE CIO Economic Outlook sees "no comfort" in business predictions that inflation will end with a general tapering-off of demand and gentle reduction in prices.

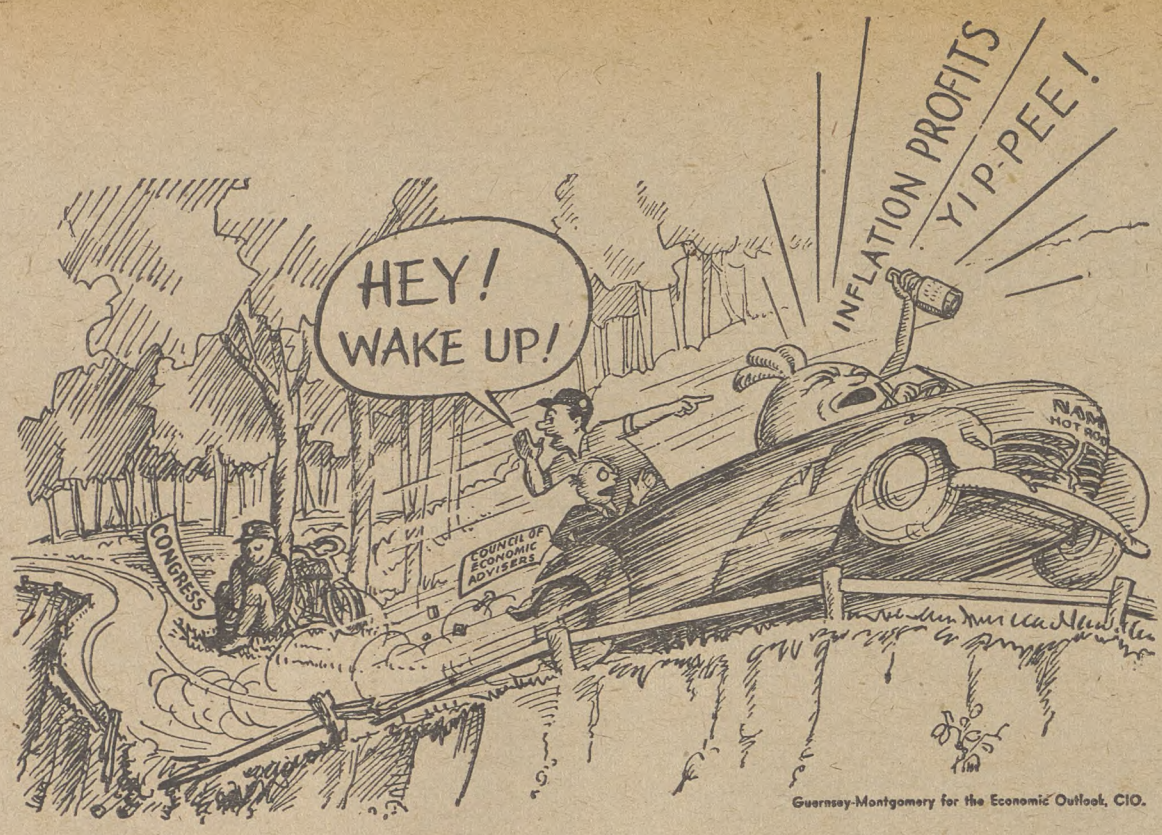
The publication, in a review of the recent report of the Council of Economic Advisers, instead calls for "wise and vigorous government action to prevent depression."

The Outlook's October issue predicts that any reduction in consumer demand will immediately have serious effects on production and jobs.

"With slackening industrial output and rising unemployment, we already will be in the cycle of the next depression," the CIO bulletin warns.

Record postwar expenditures for new factories and equipment, increasing of inventory, foreign aid and rearmament are due to slacken, the Outlook said. That trend makes more important the question: "Where must the money come from to buy up America's growing national product and assure full employment?"

The Outlook endorses the opinion of the Council of Economic Advisers that "in a future expanded economy, consumer income and expenditures will require a larger share in order to assure markets for everything that can be produced."



Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

"BUT the opposite is happening," the Outlook declared. "We are going in the wrong direction.

"While expanded capital investments soon can yield a record flow of consumers' goods, the uncontrolled inflation has been impoverishing millions of American families. Real incomes have been going down. Accumulated savings are being wiped out. Consumer debt is at an all-time high.

"While the great corporations profits of inflation, rising prices are robbing the bulk of American families of the means to consume the goods and services that must be absorbed as our national output increases. Here, then, is the seed germ of the next depression."

Even those who profit from today's inflation will suffer from its after-effects, the Outlook warns. It notes that "the high prices which support today's and the wealthy further enrich themselves from the unearned 'prosperity' are insecurely moored. Without a solid base of expanding consumer purchasing power, the future holds no certainty."

Since 1946, the average family is "poorer" because "its inflated money income is buying less," the Outlook declares. To maintain living standards, "many families of wage and salaried workers have been forced to (1) reduce their savings out of income, (2) spend past savings, and (3) extend their use of consumer credit."

Race Ban Void At Okla. U.

A special three-judge Federal Circuit Court in Oklahoma City has ruled that Oklahoma laws cannot be used to keep a Negro student from attending the Univ. of Oklahoma's graduate school, but further litigation may be necessary to make the declaration effective.

G. W. McLaurin, a retired professor at Langston Univ., Oklahoma, had applied for admission to take graduate work leading to a doctor of philosophy degree, but was barred because of his race and color.

U. S. Circuit Court Judge Alfred P. Murrah decided that "in so far as" the state laws which had been invoked in the case "deny or deprive the plaintiff of admission to the Univ. of Oklahoma for the purpose of pursuing the course he seeks to pursue there, they are unconstitutional and void."

The court, however, refused to grant an injunction which would compel the admission of McLaurin. The latter and the attorneys for the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored people, who represent him, said that if McLaurin is not admitted to the university, they will start further proceedings to enforce the court's declaration of law.

OTHER decisions affecting the rights of Negroes were:

- A U. S. District Court ordered that a "readjustment of salaries" be made after the court found that the Atlanta, Ga., school board had discriminated against Negro teachers.

(Average monthly salaries were listed: high school principals, white, $340, Negro, $240; elementary school principals, white, $254.15, Negro, $167.53; high school teachers, white, $198.45, Negro, $145.65; elementary school teachers, white, $160.19, Negro, $112.38.)

- Refusal of the Texas Supreme Court to hear the case brought by Herman Marion Sweatt to gain admission to the law school of the Univ. of Texas.

NAACP attorneys indicated that if the state Supreme Court again refused to consider the case, it will be headed for the U. S. Supreme Court.

T-H Bars More From Unions

The NLRB in two decisions has deprived several more groups of skilled workers of their right to belong to regular trade unions. The rulings were under the clause of Taft-Hartley which denies collective bargaining rights to foremen.

One case involved engineers working for the Continental Oil Co., members of the CIO Oil Workers. The board said that a number of the engineers, "altho for the most part they work a shift alone," have the power to "hire and fire or effectively recommend hiring and firing." This makes them foremen, the board asserts.

The other case was brought by the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers when Merrill-Stevens Dry Dock & Repair Co. demanded that "leading men" be dropped from the union's bargaining unit. The board held that altho the highly skilled "leading men" who demonstrate work techniques to other workers "have no authority to discipline or discharge men" they can't belong to the union because "the employer relies on their recommendations."

PEEKING OUT

Michigan Supreme Court Upholds Little T-H Act

MICHIGAN workers were hit hard unexpectedly last week when the state supreme court upheld the constitutionality of the Bonine-Tripp act, a little Taft-Hartley law.

The decision "clarified" a Sept. 8 ruling which had held the union-busting measure unconstitutional. At that time the court ruled unconstitutional one clause which placed circuit court judges on compulsory arbitration panels in certain labor disputes. Since the act had no "saving clause" which would have left the rest of the law intact, the entire piece of legislation was apparently killed.

The latest ruling, however, merely reaffirmed the ban on judges serving on compulsory arbitration panels. The rest of the law was permitted to stand as valid.

THE act is patterned after the Taft-Hartley law. But, in addition, there are regulations banning strikes and substituting compulsory arbitration in public utility and hospital disputes, barring mass picketing and requiring a state-conducted strike vote before any strike can be called.

The Bonine-Tripp law permits an employer to insist that the state labor mediation board take a strike vote in his plant if he thinks a union is too weak to meet the requirements for such a vote.

Under the act, every employe of the company, union and non-union, is allowed to vote. A majority of all workers, not just those voting, must approve a strike before it can be called.

Connecticut PAC Backs Bowles

The Connecticut Political Action Committee has indorsed Chester Bowles for governor and the Democratic candidates for Congress. Harold Senior, executive secretary of the committee, said:

"We have endorsed Chester Bowles and the Democratic candidates for Congress because, if elected, they plan to do something about the shortage of low-rent housing, about the high cost of living, about the inadequacy of present old age pensions and other social security allotments, the sales tax, the laws governing minimum wages, the Taft Hartley Law and other matters of immediate and vital concern to the people of this state and the nation."

Our Guess Is--

GALLUP 'WAY OFF ON VOTE GUESS

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

GEORGE Gallup, who lives in the beautiful town of Princeton, N. J., and makes his living polling folks on various and sundry issues, has finally made a cautious prediction on the size of the 1948 Presidential vote.

The registration figures for New York City, which showed a startling decline over the Presidential year of 1944 gave Gallup the basis for his prediction—qualified as it is.

In New York City's rather archaic system of annual registration, the 1948 total is 3,322,000, contrasted with 3,556,377 in '44 and 3,390,460 in 1940, last previous non-war presidential year.

Some more statistics before we get back to Gallup. In 1944 the total vote for all Presidential candidates was 48,025,684. In 1940 the total vote was 49,820,312.

BEARING in mind the 1948 New York City registration and the 1944 Presidential vote, Dr. Gallup deduces:

"If the New York City registration is as good an indication of election interest this year as in past years, a smaller proportion of eligible voters will vote in the coming election than in any Presidential election in the last 100 years.

(It is estimated that there are 94,000,000 persons 21 or over in the U. S.)

It seems very bold of us to take issue with Dr. Gallup, who makes a tidy living out of polls. (He also conducts them for business houses on, for instance, how many people prefer Oaties to Timothies for breakfast.)

But, we think Mr. Gallup's deduction is all wet and that the total voting will be nearer to 60,000,000.

Maybe the people were lulled into a false sense of security by shmoos. Maybe they were not afraid of the Shmoot-Hawley bill returning. Maybe they are not afraid of a Shmooting war.

But, here is why we think Gallup is all wet.

In West Virginia, for instance, 92% of the eligible voters are registered, an all-time high (the Democrats outnumber the Republicans, in registration, by 200,000); In California, 62% of the eligibles registered in 1944; this year it is 69%.

In Pennsylvania, there were as many registered for the 1948 primary as there were for the November vote in 1944, and thousands have registered since; Texas registration, which was 32% of eligibles in '44, now is 40%.

In the State of Washington, 82% of the voters were qualified for the primary, an all-time high.

Figures for New England are not complete, but in Boston, registration has risen from 390,698 and in Worcester it's up to 106,364 from 100,018.

NOW, let's take the State of Ohio, home of Sen. Robert Alphonso Taft (R.) and also of PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. The latter, incidentally, predicts that Ohio will go for Pres. Truman this year, despite the fact Gov. Dewey squeezed through there in 1944 by 12,000 votes (then he had an Ohioan, former Gov. Bricker, as his running-mate.)

In Ohio, Sec.-Treas. William Lavelle, of the State PAC, has made a survey which indicates that registration will hit a record total.

He bases that on registration in the big industrial areas, which closed last week. Here's his study:

County	main city	prev. high	1948
Cuyahoga	Cleveland	645,000	651,810
Franklin	Columbus	169,376	181,711
Hamilton	Cincinnati	333,000	368,929
Lorain	Lorain	34,040	51,028
Lucas	Toledo	149,178	171,966
Mahoning	Youngstown	115,000	135,000
Montgomery	Dayton	169,963	176,000
Stark	Canton	81,707	85,248
Summit	Akron	153,628	166,577

From those figures, Lavelle guesses: "The all-time high registration indicates Ohio's vote in 1948 might pass 3½ million for the first time. The past record, set in 1940, is 3,319,912."

(In 1944, Dewey won in Ohio by only 0.36% of the vote; Taft's victory margin was only 0.059% of the vote. PAC estimates that just two more votes per precinct would have licked Taft.)

OTHER news of political action circles:

THOMAS: O. John Rogge, Wallaceite candidate for surrogate in New York City, hit one of the lows of this political campaign, when he accused Norman Thomas during a radio debate of having Fascist tendencies. Thomas flattened him orally.

HENRY: Even the third party candidate, tired and rather bewildered after delivering almost the same speech hundreds of times, apparently knew that his campaign was a horrible flop. In California, Henry Wallace said the Progressive Party would survive and grow despite the size of its vote, which meant the Progs now expect a low vote.

In other words, the singing party had become a pipsqueak party.

CONNECTICUT: Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, Democratic candidate for the Congressional seat she held from 1944 to 1946, has repudiated third party support in no uncertain terms. The third party had pulled out a candidate who had filed against her.

N'ORLEANS: The Catholic Committee of the South in an official statement denounced the States' Rights Party as one whose motive is " to incite ill will.'

DOUBLE TALK: The Progressive Party of Minnesota, trying to hide its chagrin at its sorry showing in an invasion of the Democrat - Farmer - Labor primary and attempting to conceal its worry at the strength of Hubert Humphrey, announced:

"The Progressive Party cannot assume responsibility for the candidacy and program of Humphrey nor does it, on the other hand, restrain individuals and groups who support our program from voting for Humphrey if they see reasons for so doing."

NEW JERSEY: Archibald S. Alexander, PAC-indorsed Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator, who previously favored repeal of certain portions of the Taft-Hartley Law, has come out for "outright repeal with immediate substitution of a law which would preserve the rights of labor with fairness to management.'

His opponent, Robert C. Hendrickson (R.) has plumped for some T-H changes. They include: giving the Secretary of Labor—rather than the President—power to invoke T-H "national emergency' anti-strike provisions (that's heresy, Robert; the GOP has just about taken away every power of the Labor Secretary); allow non-Communist locals to qualify for NLRB facilities even if their international officers have not signed non-Communist affidavits; permit preferential hiring of union members; recognize the value of the union hiring hall; clarification of T-H provisions on the secondary boycott. However, he felt the first year of T-H had justified its "broad purposes."

Kentucky: Pres. T. Murphy, of Steelworkers' Local 3845, Louisville, announced that between 80 and 85% of his members have registered.

And So, To Bed!

WE don't recall just who it was who first said that politics make strange bedfellows. But he certainly had something there!

In the present campaign, the bedfellows are getting stranger and stranger. First, the New York Times, in a starry-eyed editorial, came out for Gov. Dewey.

"The Mr. Dewey of 1948, whom we now support, has both a firmer grip of foreign policy and a more active part in making it than the Mr. Dewey of 1940 or 1944," rhapsodized the Times. And what was wrong with Mr. Dewey in 1940? "He was, at the time, 38 years old." And what was wrong in 1944, when the Times backed FDR? Dewey's "mandate was weak."

Domestically, the Times is Dewey-eyed. "Even the extreme right wing of the Republican Party now knows that such Roosevelt measures as Social Security and the Fair Labor Standards Act, the SEC and the TVA are here to stay." (Editor's note: If you are a betting man, Mr. Times Publisher Sulzberger, how about a little wager on that last statement? Or perhaps you were in a state of coma during the 80th Congress.)

A day after the Times did its mental flipflop, Col. Robert Rutherford McCormick called in his best Chicago Tribune editorial writer and ordered him to write a whiz-bang. He did, too.

Printed in scab varitype, the editorial can best be evaluated in this sentence: "We are for him (CIO editor's note: Dewey, natch) because, borrowing one of Westbrook Pegler's better phrases, we consider him the least worse of the candidates."

3d Party No Factor, Georgia CIO Ignores It

By TOM NOWELL

THE Progressive Party is such an inconsequential factor in Georgia politics that the Georgio CIO Council convention at its ninth annual convention did not even bother to pass a resolution denouncing it, council officers said.

The convention called on the National Democratic Committee to expel the Dixiecrats in Congress from the party and thus revoke their seniority and other privileges derived from their party affiliation.

Other resolutions condemned the North-South pay differential, the T-H act and the use of injunctions against unions under that law.

One of the speakers, Irving Abramson, Natl. CIO representative, said that Pres. Truman has been seeking to realize CIO objectives and that Henry Wallace and his communist associates are a "greater threat than the delegates may realize."

Abramson was introduced by Charles H. Gillman, who was unanimously reelected to his ninth term as council president.

Others reelected were L. A. Gossett, secretary-treasurer, and R. E. Starnes and G. R. Hathaway, vice presidents. O. A. Nikula of the American Union of Telephone Workers, a comparative newcomer in CIO ranks, ran a surprisingly good race for vice president in his first try for state office.

A bright future for the organization of Georgia industry under CIO banners was seen by Gillman in his report to the convention.

"Despite the many obstacles we have had to overcome," he said, "the representatives of the organizing drives and the representatives of international unions have done a splendid job in organizing new plants. Fine work has been done in many instances, especially in South Georgia where people have not been satisfied by merely joining a union.

"They have formed committees and helped others to get unions. I believe that within the next few years, South Georgia will be as well organized as the northern sections of our state."

Progress for the state PAC was also predicted by the Georgia PAC Chairman, G. R. Hathaway, who announced intentions to build on mistakes made in the past. Hathaway said, "Heretofore, political action has just been something to embark upon a few months prior to election. We are quite positive that every one now realizes that political action is something that must be carried on throughout the year on a daily basis just as our organization activities are.

Other speakers were Henderson Lanham, Congressman from the seventh district and the only member of the Georgia congressional delegation to vote against the Taft-Hartley law; Joseph Rabun, who was backed by the CIO in the recent gubernatorial race, and Anthony Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils.

Sen. Wagner To Get Murray Award

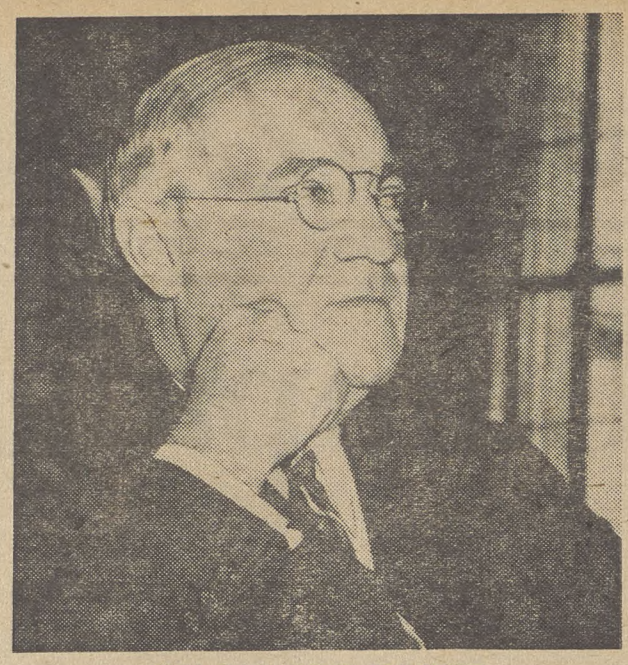
CHAMPION of social legislation, Sen. Robert F. Wagner (N. Y.) has been unanimously selected as the recipient of the Philip Murray award of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

President Truman will be the chief speaker at the award dinner, to be held Thursday, Oct. 28, at 6 p.m. at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray also will speak. Other speakers on the program, which will be carried over a state-wide radio network and will be televized, will include Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

Leo Perlis, national director of NCSC, said that the award will be in the form of a scroll and a check for $10,000, which will establish the Robert F. Wagner Scholarship for students in the field of labor and social service.

The award, established to honor a citizen who does an outstanding job, was awarded last year to Gen. Omar Bradley, then head of the Veterans Administration.



SEN. ROBERT F. WAGNER
Spearheaded New Deal

Although the Senator from New York is best known as the author of the Wagner Act—Labor's Magna Charta—he introduced much of the New Deal social legislation. He was author of the Railroad Retirement Act, the Social Security Law and the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Wagner was co-author of a federal anti-lynching bill, the compulsory health insurance bill and the long-term housing bill. During the period from 1905 to 1918, when he served in the New York Assembly and Senate, he was author of a child labor law and was chairman of the committee probing the disastrous Triangle Shirt Co. fire.

He was acting lieutenant governor of New York in 1914, and from 1919 to 1926 was a justice of the New York Supreme Court. While serving on the bench he ruled in favor of Emergency Rent Law—later upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court—and sustained the right of unions to obtain injunctions against employers.

He resigned from the court to run for the U. S. Senate, where he is serving his third term.

Dewey 'For' T-H And Workers, Too

By GLORIA CAPLAN

NEW YORK'S little governor has finally taken a firm stand.

He's for the Taft-Hartley Law.

He's in favor of workers.

He's even gone so far as to coin a new word—"wrongest."

Well?

Not once during his half-hour labor address did Dewey call the Taft-Hartley Act by the name by which it is known to unionists—simply as the Taft-Hartley Act.

He used the long "formalj" term—Labor-Management Relations Act.

Pres. Truman's veto of the T-H bill, he assured a Pittsburgh, Pa., audience, was the "wrongest, most incompetent, most inaccurate document ever put out of the White House in 160 years."

Taunted by Pres. Truman's dare to "come out and fight" instead of hiding behind "high-level platitudes," Dewey made a batch of promises to workers that sounded like a list of Democratic bills the Republicans killed in the 80th Congress.

Dewey said he was "determined to achieve":

- Firm supports under wages. "The present minimum wage (40c an hour) set by law is far too low and it will be raised."

(Democratic attempts to raise the minimum have been smothered by the GOP in Congress for the past three years)

- Increased social security benefits for more people.

(The Republican 80th Congress lopped 750,000 people off the social security eligibility list and refused to increase benefits).

- A strengthened Labor Dept., equal in cabinet status to the Commerce and Agriculture Departments.

Said Pres. Truman in his Philadelphia acceptance speech: "I tried to strengthen the Labor Dept. . . . They (the Republicans) have simply torn it up. There is one bureau left that is functioning, and they cut the appropriation on it so it can hardly function.")

- An end to "special interest" legislation whether for labor or business.

- "We will break the log jam in housing, so that decent houses may be provided at reasonable cost for our people."

- "We will make sure that soaring prices do not steal food and clothing and other necessities from American families."

- Remove fears of a boom and bust business cycle.

(Presumably by not talking about it. Dewey blasted Truman for telling the Russians just what they wanted to hear in supporting "an infamous falsehood that America is going to have a bust.")

- Press forward in solving the problems of race relations.

(Though committed to civil rights legislation and with enough votes to pass it, Republicans in the 80th Congress stayed clear of FEPC, anti-poll tax and anti-lynching bills.)

- Strive to make the world a world at peace in which human rights and freedoms will flourish.

(Referring to our bi-partisan foreign policy, Truman in Minnesota described Dewey as a "recent convert" who now comes along saying "Me too, but I can do it better!")

Move Over Strom; Here Comes Bob!

Guess who's the latest "states' rights" fan?

None other than Republican Sen. Robert A. Taft.

Attempting to corral votes for Republicans in St. Petersburg, Fla., Taft promised the South it could expect to get freedom of enterprise, sound government and the principles of States' rights from the Republicans.

Move over, Gov. Thurmond!

'If, If, If,' Chant Oil Moguls

By RAY DAVIDSON

"IF the union will accept the 12½ cent raises we offered before the strike, we will re-employ such strikers as we see fit when we see fit in the order we see fit and in the positions we see fit."

That is the position of major West Coast oil companies as the 14,000-man strike ends its sixth week.

In other words as the CIO Oil Workers see it, the companies now demand that the union sacrifice union principles to an extent that would be worse than outright surrender.

But surrender is not in the books for oil strikers. Members now feel the companies are out to kill the union and morale is improving.

Although companies have been able to resume production of some crude oil, refineries remain 88% out of operation. Companies are using skeleton crews to produce low grade gasoline to salve the public, but are not refining any of the many other profitable products of petroleum.

The union and many thousands of its members have been named defendants in damage suits totaling far above 15 million dollars. More than 150 strikers have been arrested on various charges. Several score were cited for contempt of court in connection with picketing injunctions slapped on in every plant.

A superior court judge in Los Angeles announced in open court that he would find all defendants guilty when brought to trial on civil contempt charges and assess them maximum fines, jail sentences. Under California law, believe it or not, there is no trial by jury and no appeal from the judge's ruling in civil contempt cases.

California newspapers have launched a campaign of "scare headlines" by greatly magnifying minor incidents and refusing to print the union's story.

Audience Hampers N. Y. City CIO Probe

HEARINGS on charges brought against the Greater New York City CIO Council were held last week before a special panel of three Executive Board members named by Pres. Philip Murray.

They heard witnessses from a number of unions in New York who had asked that CIO lift the Council's charter. The three-man panel will report to Pres. Murray and to the CIO Executive Board when it meets at Portland, Ore., on Nov. 17, just before the convention.

Presiding as "judges" at the hearing were L. S. Buckmaster, head of the Rubber union; Joseph Froesch, head of the Glass Workers; and Martin Wagner, president of the Gas. Coke and Chemical Workers. John Brophy, CIO industrial union councils director, attended the hearings.

Details of the hearing were not revealed, but Buckmaster told a crowded press conference that there had been temporary trouble with a "number of people" who entered the hearing room. The group—about 20 in number—was comprised of members and officials of local union affiliated with the council.

Buckmaster said the group, which had indicated it wishes to testify in support of the council, might have been allowed to remain in the hearing room "if they had conducted themselves properly."

"But they made so much noise, asked for points of orders, complaints and objections that orderly handling of the hearing was impossible," Buckmaster said. "There were half a dozen of them up shouting at the same time."

WHEN the hearing reconvened later in the office of Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood—and without the vocal group on hand—proceedings moved in more normal fashion, Buckmaster said.

Only incident occurred when one fur union official insisted on interrupting other speakers. He was asked to permit speakers to finish their remarks and when he persisted, he was urged to leave the hearing room. But when the hearing resumed, quiet had been restored and all interested parties were present.

Buckmaster vigorously denied charges made by Council spokesmen that the hearing was either a "star chamber proceeding or a kangaroo court." He said that it was a "regular trade union procedure, similar to thousands conducted all the time throughout the country."

Charges against the council were filed late in September with Pres. Murray by representatives of the New York State CIO Council and three international unions. They charged that the city CIO body often violated the CIO constitution and rules.

THEIR complaint said the city council had followed a course of "disruptive and irresponsible actions" which had "thwarted" national CIO policy and aided foes of labor, and that it had interferred with the affairs of at least three national unions and the CIO Political Action Committee.

Council Pres. James Durkin—who heads the Office Workers Union—and Sec.-Treas. Saul Mills denied the charges as "full of wild generalities" and attacked the character of the hearings as removing any possibility of a "fair hearing."

Their statement said the case was based on the council's refusal to accept "political dictation," and they asked for a bill of particulars against the council.

The Council has been the center of conflict in New York for several months, following its decision not to support the Marshall Plan and its failure to adhere to national CIO policy against the Third Party. In recent months numerous of its affiliated unions have withdrawn.

NLRB Only 10,000 Cases Behind!

The NLRB is getting there—slowly. It has a backlog of only 10,000 cases now.

During August, the Board announced, it received about 3500 new cases and settled 1416 more than were filed.

How GOP "Woos" Labor

The following, sent out by the Republican State Central Committee of Oregon, needs no comment from the CIO News:

Strictly Confidential

Dear Friend:

We are trying to get down to grass roots in our appeal to Union Labor.

A statewide survey indicates this is the group to be most apprehensive about, and that they are the people from whom the Democrats are apt to get their largest vote.

To this end, we earnestly ask your help and cooperation in the following effort to get Unionized Labor votes:

We ask from you in strict confidence, and at your earliest convenience, the names of from two to ten of your employees, with home addresses if available.

We will promptly write such workmen in a plain envelope, without revealing source of the name.

This letter will be carefully worded, and call attention to benefits that he, himself, will derive from electing Gov. Dewey and a new administration. It will be non-patronizing and non-high-pressure.

We will urge this workman to speak for our cause and candidates discreetly among his fellow workmen, calling attention to the arguments we enclose, and, if opportunity offers, to put out the cards and leaflets which we will send him in another plain envelope.

WE are of course aiming at the following type of your employes, and hope you can send us the names and home addresses of a few of them: Employes who have been with you for some time; people of the conservative or at least non-radical type; preferably home owners; men who have some prestige or some measure of leadership among their fellow workmen.

Because time is getting short for such a comprehensive state-wide plan, we ask that if possible, you return these names (using enclosed self-addressed envelope) at your earliest convenience.

Every effort will be made to avoid any possible back-firing. We will handle it with scrupulous confidence; our letters to the workers will be discreet and calculated to avoid enmity and wrangling.

Should one accidentally get to the wrong man, no harm will have been done. We are as anxious as anyone to avoid anything boomeranging onto the "front office."

With an earnest hope for your immediate cooperation, and with thanks for anything you may feel you can do in this regard.

Sincerely,

Dewey and Warren Commmittee

By Ralph D. Moores.

'We Must Not Lose November Election By Default'

WHILE Tom Dewey was showing his contempt for working people by calling a locomotive engineer a "lunatic," labor was striving mightily to show at the polls what it thought of Tom Dewey.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in behalf of CIO's drive to get out the vote, sent this message to leaders all over the land:

"The nation-wide upsurge in registration is indicative of the magnificent work done by the CIO. We must—repeat must—finish the job on Election Day.

"It is imperative that every member of the CIO fulfill his duty as a citizen. Participation in the election of our government executives and representatives is the most important duty of citizenship.

"I request that detailed plans for such participation be made immediately. Plans should include provisions for insuring the maximum vote as well as activities at the polls. I request that you send to Jack Kroll, CIO PAC, by October 21, an outline of your activities in this respect.

"We cannot and must not allow this election to go by default. I am confident that if the people of America participate in this election, the people of America will win."

Switch

For instance, in Texas, one Drew C. Nichols withdrew as the Progs' candidate for U. S. Senator and came out for another party.

Was it the Democrats? No. Was it the Republicans? No. Was it the Dixiecrats? No. Give up? It was the Socialists—bitter left opponents of the Wallace Party.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ Listen To Murray Oct. 25

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will make his first big radio political speech of the 1948 election next week.

THE DATE: Monday, October 25.

THE TIME: 7:15 P.M. eastern time; 6:15 P.M. central time; 9:15 P.M. mountain time; 8:15 P.M. pacific time.

THE STATIONS: 99 stations of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Time for the broadcast, which will be carried on all 99 stations at the hour listed above, was bought by the CIO Political Action Committee.

Among the 99 stations carrying the program are WCBS, New York; WADC, Akron; WCAO, Baltimore; WGR, Buffalo; WBBM. Chicago; WKRC, Cincinnati; WGAR, Cleveland; WJR, Detroit; KMBC, Kansas City; WCAU, Philadelphia; WJAS, Pittsburgh; KMOX, St. Louis, WISN, Milwaukee; WAPI, Birmingham, Ala.; WAGA, Atlanta; WIAC, Nashville; WCCO, Minneapolis;Ss,SEHTRAI ver; KQW, San Francisco, KIRO, Seattle; KNX, Los Angeles.

KROLL, like all of labor, was deeply impressed by Pres. Truman's fighting speech at St. Paul, which highlighted the labor issue. Wired Kroll to Truman:

"Want to let you know the tremendous thrill I received from your magnificent speech. It topped even the Akron speech, which seemed unsurpassable.

"I am convinced more than ever before that your courageous defense of the New Deal against those who would tear it down is rallying the people of the country to your side."

In Detroit, the CIO Auto Workers, scoffing at Henry A. Wallace's claim to be the real friend of labor, recalled that two years ago, in the New Republic, Wallace had advocated denial of the right to strike to all public workers.

The Americans for Democratic Action, analyzing the political left side of the political scene, predicted that Wallace would poll less than 2,000,000 votes. (At one time, the Wallaceites were claiming they'd take 15,000,000. Last week, C. B. Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager, predicted cautiously that it would be "millions.")

Even in Vermont—so rock-ribbed Republican that it was the subject of the famous "as Maine goes, so goes Vermont," gag in 1936—PAC was putting on a hard campaign.

The organization was revamped by CIO. Unions participating are Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Retail-Wholesale, Stone Workers; Textile, Furniture and Electrical unions; Steelworkers and Rubber Workers. CIO-PAC's policy was approved unanimously.

THE Pennsylvania PAC, in urging votes for the national Democratic ticket, denounced the record of the state's GOP-controlled Legislature.

On workmen's compensation, it pointed out that Pennsylvania pays only for 300 weeks on death, 31 other states pay longer, nine of them during the entire widowhood. On permanent total disability, Pennsylvania pays only for 500 weeks, 25 states pay longer, 16 for life. Pennsylvania pays $20 maximum; 23 states pay up to $39.20.

"Why is Pennsylvania so fearfully behind?" asks Penna.-PAC. "Because profiteering on the workers' broken bodies and misery are casualty insurance companies, especially the Grundy Republican Manufacturers' Association."

Joseph Grundy is so powerful in the Republican party that he dictated to Tom Dewey that he must appo nt Rep. Hugh Scott (R., Pa.), a devoted yes-man for Grundy, as Republican National Chairman.

Correction

The CIO News was in error last week when it said that the Michigan Supreme Court had upheld the constitutionality of the Bonine-Tripp, the Wolverine state's little Taft-Hartley law.

The court re-affirmed an earlier ruling which held unconstitutional a provision of the law placing circuit court judges on compulsory arbitration panels in certain labor disputes. But the court did not rule on the constitutionality of the entire law. Several test cases are moving toward the supreme court.

The Solution

U. S. News recently interviewed George Gallup, the pollster, on the current campaign. One question and answer:

"Q. How high is the percentage of voters in Australia?

"A. Oh, I think it is about 95%. They are very tough about it in Australia and most of them do vote.

"I have often thought that compulsory voting here might be one way to give the Democrats a tremendous advantage. If everyone in the country voted it would be hard to elect Republicans."

PURPOSEFUL DRIFTWOOD: These campaign signs for Rep. John A. Blatnik, PAC-supported Democrat who is seeking re-election to Congress from the 8th District of Minnesota, are being made from driftwood. DAMNING THE NEW DEAL

It's fashionable in some circles these days to speak of the New Deal as if it were a flea-bitten mongrel.

You know how it is: A couple of guys who have become big shots since the end of the war get together to solve the world's problems.

One of them, a pompous jerk who got rich selling over-priced, under-built houses to GIs, says, "Things are in a hell of a mess, aren't they? What we need is some new blood in Washington."

"Yes, sir," says his grey-market auto selling companion, "we gotta see that the New Deal is killed off this time."

And chances are 10 to one that neither has more than a vague idea of what he's denouncing.

Or it works another way:

A couple of fellows who began hating the New Deal when it was born got together to drool over what may happen to it if the GOP wins complete control of the government.

"Ah, then we'll be back in the good, old days," says the other.

And yet both would be horrified if those "good, old days" returned.

REALLY IS CONFUSING

If you relly want to have some fun and cause some confusion, tackle one of the noisy "down with the New Deal" boys with barbed questions—and make him give you "yes" or "no" answers without a lot of quibbling.

Ask him first if he'd like to do away with the "socialistic New Deal agency" known as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation—the outfit that insures bank deposits.

Then shoot him a fast one about the New Deal soil conservation program—the "socialistic experiment" which has been saving our valuable topsoil.

If he's in the real estate business, ask him how he'd like to get rid of the New Deal agencies that stimulated home building and financing.

If he runs his factory with cheap TVA power, question him about abolishing the Tennessee Valley Authority.

If he operates a farm, suggest that the New Deal parity program be ditched—and then duck!

If he once lost his shirt by purchasing worthless stock, ask him about the New Dealish Securities and Exchange Commission.

If he or his close relatives work for salaries, ask him, "How about getting rid of social security?"

SOME WOULD KILL IT OFF

There, of course, are some people who would eliminate everything that the New Deal accomplished—just like there are people who steal from blind beggars and beat their grandmothers merely for the pure joy of being mean.

These are the incurables—and you can't blame them for voting for the GOP and Dixiecrat reactionaries.

Right now we're not as concerned with them as we are with by "down with the New Deal" talk when it comes from those who damn the New Deal without reason and those who damn it without meaning what they say.

Let us wind this up by pointing out we're particularly irked by "down with the New Deal" talk when it comes from——

1. Some comfortably fixed farmer who was bailed out of bankruptcy by the New Deal.

2. Some guy who would have starved had it not been for the WPA.

T-H? Ah, It's Wonderful!

Well, Anyhow, That's What the Script of Dewey's Labor-Wooing Speech Says

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S been a great strain on us—waiting for the little man from Albany to come out in favor of motherhood and in opposition to sin.

Dewey is a methodical man, so we have a right to expect him to complete the cycle he started when he gave his indorsement to rain, sunshine, honesty, co-operation, efficiency and reorganization.

Those are all nice, safe subjects and even Hank Wallace would have trouble sticking his foot in his mouth when discussing them. And Hank is a chronic victim of political "foot-in-mouth" disease.

This being so, it is doubly significant that Dewey should choose to break his dull routine by attempting in one beautifully delivered radio broadcast to rewrite labor history and sell unions the idea that the Taft-Hartley Act is a wonderful law.

DEWEY selected industrial Pittsburgh as the spot from which to woo labor with all the ardor of a young political swain who is in love—in love with the idea of Dewey in the White House.

Early in his speech he said he was in favor of labor. He called labor "one of the greatest assets a free society can have."

He added that he was convinced that "the orderly process of collective bargaining will always be in the interest of our people."

So far so good.

Then Dewey went off on a tangent.

He declared that the Wagner Act was "a fine beginning" but that it had degenerated into a government - controlled political weapon used to gather votes and protect Communists.

AT this point Dewey carefully explained that "over the protests of the present Administration" the Wagner Act was brought up to date by passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

He admitted that T-H may not be perfect, and then he said:

"But it does insure that collective bargaining is encouraged and that the wage-earner has an inalienable right to quit his job."

"It is most unfortunate for our unity as a nation that the passage of . . (the T-H Act) . . . was deliberately used by this Administration to stir up dissension and confusion.

"A strictly political veto message from the White House raised grave fears among wage-earners which the moving finger of history has already exposed as baseless propaganda."

DEWEY spoke for nearly 30 minutes and not once during that period did he so much as mention the fact that every responsible union official in the nation is strongly opposed to T-H.

He didn't even indicate that repeal of T-H is one of the major objectives of the entire labor movement.

The horrible, horrible Truman crowd administered the Wagner Act so badly that it became necessary to enact T-H.

Everybody loves T-H except the Truman Administration.

And if Dewey is elected the nation will have a government under which "labor and all our people can cease their fears about laws being used to disunite them."

DEWEY, already departed for the evening from his rain-sunshine-honesty-efficiency theme, wound up his labor-wooing session by promising, with reservations, to deliver many of the things the Republican-dominated 80th Congress opposed.

In vague terms, he promised something would be done about minimum wages, social security, housing, high prices, civil liberties, the boom-and-bust business cycle, special interest legislation, the Labor Department and the Conciliation Service.

And as the little man from Albany closed his speech on a note of "unity" we got the distinct impression that even he didn't believe what his speechwriters had written for him.

'Dewey Dangles Bait To Labor'---N. Y. Star

DEWEY'S promises to improve the lot of the workers do not square with his championship of the Taft-Hartley Act and the record of the 80th Congress, the New York Star declared in an editorial last week. Excerpts from the editorial follow:

Mr. Dewey's stirring defense of the Taft-Hartley Act hardly squares with the glowing promises he holds out to labor if he is elected President next November. Mr. Dewey says the law is not perfect—a classic in understatement—but that it has encouraged collective bargaining, that it assures a man his inalienable right to quit his job—a Deweyism meaning, we suppose, the right to strike. He also pays tribute to the 60-day cooling off period required under the law, the requirement that unions file financial statements, and the non-Communist oath provision, and goes on to say strikes have decreased since the enactment of the law.

The Taft-Hartley law often keeps a union busier negotiating with the law itself than bargaining with an employer. Ask the Chicago printers, ask the men out at Univis plant in Dayton, Mr. Dewey. The number of challenges to which the law subjects a union already established in a plant opens the way for recalcitrant employers to keep unions in a court for days, weeks and months.

The law's favoritism to strike breaking is another reason why, perhaps, there have been fewer strikes. Even in these boom times, the stoutest union man is going to think twice about striking for more money, for shorter hours, for other improved working conditions, if he knows he's going to wind up never going back to his job. All an employer has to do during a strike is to load his shop with strikebreakers, and call for an election. The union man out on the picket line suddenly finds he has no vote, but the non-union strikebreaker has.

Mr. Dewey dangles a fine vote-catching bait to labor. He says the present wage law minimum is far too low and will be raised. By whom, Mr. Dewey? The same Republican party that refused to do it during the 80th Congress? Mr. Dewey says social security will be widened. By whom, Mr. Dewey? Those same Republicans who hacked it down during the 80th Congress?

Mr. Dewey says the Labor Department will be restored to a functioning equality with other cabinet departments, that the housing jam will be broken, mediation and conciliation will be improved, anti-trust laws will be strengthened and monopoly curbed, prices now stealing food from the people's mouths will be checked, the problem of race discrimination will be solved and civil rights restored. By whom, Mr. Dewey?

"Don't Be Fooled, Joe!"

Doc Asked For It And He Got It!

IT was one of those knock-down-drag-out radio forum programs on which the angry participants completely ignored the moderator's advice to "keep calm and don't shout."

It had started as a mild, mannerly discussion of health insurance and "prepaid" medical care.

The two doctors on the program followed the customary American Medical Association line—"let the doctors handle the nation's health problems and keep the government out of it."

The CIO representative and a social welfare worker argued that adequate medical care was not being provided hundreds of thousands of Americans because of its high cost. They claimed the doctors were not solving this problem.

THE program moved along smoothly and then somebody mentioned the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill, which the CIO supported.

It was like tossing a skunk into a meeting of perfume manufacturers, insofar as the doctors were concerned.

Alternately, they damned the WMD measure as "socialized medicine" and declared in no uncertain tones that it was no good.

The CIO representative, who had read the lengthy bill carefully, told the doctors they didn't know what they were talking about.

One of them accused the CIO man of being "more interested in Socialism than in the nation's health."

The CIO man called the doctor a liar (using a somewhat softer term).

THE moderator, apparently forgetting his job was to maintain order and keep the argument on a gentlemanly plane, sat with his mouth slightly ajar as the words flew back and forth.

One doctor told the unionist he didn't know anything about the medical profession and that he was "talking through his hat."

The unionist replied that one of his uncles was a well known physician "who follows the practice of feeling a patient's wallet before he feels his pulse."

"Well, then he's the rule and not the exception!" shouted the doctor, getting his sentence badly mixed up.

"Maybe he is," replied the unionist. "I wouldn't dare make such a charge against doctors as a group."

AT this point the doctors calmed down a bit and resorted to the tactic of asking questions they thought the CIO man would be unable to answer.

"Now, do you REALLY know of anybody who was refused medical care or got into serious financial difficulties because of doctors?" one of them asked.

"Doctor, I certainly do—and I think this is the proper place to tell you about what happened to a fellow I know very well."

An attempt was made to interrupt the CIO man but he kept right on talking.

"THIS fellow move to town five or six years ago and got a job that didn't pay him much," the CIO man said.

"His wife became ill suddenly and he took her to one of the best known doctors in town. He said she'd have to have an operation—and right away.

"This fellow borrowed $100 at a bank, but that wasn't enough. The doctor said he could arrange the remaining financing through a fellow he knew.

"Well, the young man went to an office, signed some papers, got his money—and found out three weeks later he'd been sent by the doctor to a loan shark.

"Doc, you ought to remember this case—because I was the fellow and you were the surgeon!" A. L. S.

Keep Wages Up To Keep Prosperity---Murray

ORGANIZED labor's ability to achieve strong purchasing power in the future will be a great factor in preventing a depression.

That's what CIO Pres. Philip Murray says in an article in the Oct. 15 issue of Magazine Digest, which follows, in part:

What does our immediate future hold for us? Another crash and depression, like 1929-1933? Will the present boom collapse into mass unemployment, shutdown factories, breadlines, the dumping of milk, the killing of baby pigs, and the ploughing under of crops?

And where does organized labor fit into the picture? What part can it play in preventing such an occurrence?

There is no single answer to these questions, for there is no panacea for depression. But labor at this time does possess one powerful weapon to fight off "boom and bust."

This is the ability of labor, through the considerable amount of money its total wages represents, to maintain public purchasing power, the ability to buy what labor needs and what business needs to sell.

This means that, in the months and years ahead, organized labor's ability to keep wages at a high purchasing level will be perhaps the biggest single factor in preventing a downward spiral.

High wages keep purchasing power up.

We learned then (during last depression), and know with certainty now, that depression can be staved off only if the consumer is able to buy back the goods which the country produces. We in the labor movement are trying to put that principle into effect right now, and have been since the war ended.

As the productive capacity of our peacetime economy expands, the families of America must earn the means to buy back the increasing volume of goods they produce. We know this: in the "prosperous" twenties, production and profits went up, without an increase in wages, and the worst depression the world has ever known resulted. It must not happen again.

When business jacks up the car with increased production and profits, we put some bricks underneath it; then if it does fall, it doesn't go down very far. It has a solid wage base to rest on, considerably above its original level.

When business would like to jack up the car without the use of blocks, it is only inviting trouble. That's what it did in the twenties, in pushing up production and profits without any firm supports in the form of expanding purchasing power.

Again, let us look at the record to see what business has been doing since V-J Day. Here are four factors:

First, American corporations more than doubled their profits during the war years from the levels of 1936 to 1939. They rose to an average of 9.6 billion dollars, after taxes, for each of the five war years.

Second, Big Business successfully lobbied for the repeal of the Excess Profits Tax in 1946 which has given it a 6 billion dollar prize each year since.

Third, in 1945, when working hours were cut and labor faced wage losses of more than 20 per cent, a wage increase from swollen corporation profits was refused. Instead, it was added to by business to prices, completely without justification.

Fourth, when the business-dominated Congress killed OPA and all other inflation controls in 1946, the deluge of unlimited price increases began in earnest.

Result: the profits of American corporations, after taxes, increased to 12.5 billion dollars in 1946, 18.1 billion in 1947, and probably 20 billion in 1948.

And what does labor say? It says: those blocks are staying right there. Wage cutting cannot serve the welfare of the American people. Prices can be cut. Keep wages high.

At this point, the businessman may counter with the argument that if he is to keep his plant going and his workers employed, then his prices and costs must be cut to stimulate the demand for his products.

Our answer to this argument is that the healthy way to do this (and our economic history will bear this out) is through increased technological efficiency and not through wage cuts. The productivity of labor has a 50-year record of continuous increase. The American standard of living does not rise with wage cuts; it goes up as volume production and efficiency reduce costs and make price cuts possible. (Since OPA ended, American business has forgotten this fact.)

All Will Benefit

We may not be able to stop a panic on Wall Street but we can certainly stop the worst ravages of the depression. Not only organized labor will benefit. A firm base for the union wage scale will also support the wages of workers in unorganized industry. It will help the farmers; men and women who can continue to buy bread and meat will help maintain farm prices. Moreover, in the long run it will benefit the businessman by maintaining the demand for his products.

'VOTE NO ON 5, 6 AND 7' IS BAY STATE'S SONG

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

TURN on your radio these days in Massachusetts and chances are 10 to 1 you will hear Vaughn Monroe crooning "Racing With the Moon," his theme song.

Then, some young ladies will harmonize: "When you vote, vote NO on Number 5, when you vote, vote NO on Number 6, when you vote, vote NO on Number 7—Vote NO on the Labor Referenda!"

All that is part of the campaign of the Massachusetts United Labor Committee—AFL, CIO, independents, aided by the Americans for Democratic Action and the American Veterans' Committee — to defeat three questions which will appear on the ballot Nov. 2.

No. 5—Outlaw all forms of union security, far beyond even the Taft-Hartley Law.

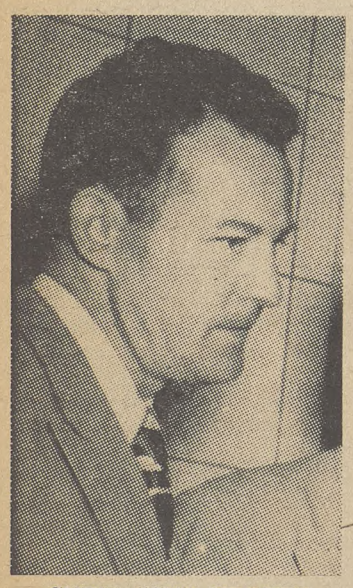
No. 6—Make it compulsory to conduct strike votes by secret ballot. One of its most objectionable features is that a majority of the members working in a plant, and not a majority of those voting, would be required to make a strike call valid.

(This is in sharp contrast to Massachusetts' town meeting system, where an issue is decided by a majority of those present and voting and not by a majority of the town's voters.)

No 7.—Would set up complicated machinery for election of union officers, limiting terms of office to one year.

(Massachusetts state legislators are elected every two years.)

Massachusetts labor is aroused to the threat of these referenda. A registration drive was conducted in every district. Labor's efforts are conceded to be a major factor in the achieving of the highest registration the state has ever had. The indications are that this year's registration will be 300,000 above 1944.



CYRIL "CY" O'BRIEN

Won his bachelor of arts degree at Boston College; helped organize UOPWA local at an insurance company, was fired for union activity, took master's degree in education at Boston Teachers' College, joined Textile Workers' staff in 1944.

The labor referenda, plus another referendum question on birth control, are expected to bring out a large vote Nov. 2. Since Boston's predominantly Catholic population has historically voted Democratic, this is expected to enhance the chances of the Truman-Barkley ticket to carry the state.

The eyes of industrialists all over America are obviously and anxiously on Massachusetts. The Bay State is the first industrial state to attempt to impose a complete ban on union security. (The 12 states which have complete bans are all agricultural.)

If it happens in Massachusetts, brother, Lord help the rest of us.

Huh!

A Boston cab driver, asked what he thought of Gov. Robert F. Bradford, Republican candidate for re-election, declared:

"He's no better than his party."

Leominster Registration Record Set

IN June, the CIO, AFL and ADA met and signed a pledge for a full campaign against the anti-labor referenda. Signatories:

CIO: Joseph Salerno, state president; J. William Belanger, secretary-treasurer; Albert Clifton, legislative agent; and Cyril O'Brien, executive director, State PAC.

AFL: John J. Monte, president, State Federation; Kenneth Kelley, secretary-treasurer and legislative agent; Ernest Johnson, state director for the Citizens League for Political Education, and Philip Kramer, Garment Workers' Union.

ADA: Harvard Prof. Arthur Schlesinger, Sr., state ADA chairman; Reginald H. Zalles, executive director, and Mrs. Arthur G. Rotch, former president, State League of Women Voters and ADA vice-chairman.

O'Brien, Johnston and Schlesinger were chosen as co-heads of the campaign.

The AVC joined the campaign shortly afterwards.

Harry Russell, of the AFL and Al Clifton, CIO, are in charge of organizing get-out-the-vote groups throughout the state. In Boston, that work is under the co-direction of Durham Miller of the CIO Gas, Coke union, who is O'Brien's assistant, and of Richard Buck, of the AFL Laborers' Union. A total of 395 precincts are in Boston, with 1800 in the entire state. It is planned to have at least 8,000 active workers throughout the state.

DESPITE so much concentration on the referenda, labor is not allowing the election of officers to be neglected.

Indorsements have been given to Paul Dever, former attorney general, against incumbent Republican Gov. Robert F. Bradford; to John I. Fitzgerald against incumbent Republican U. S. Sen. Leverett Saltonstall; and to a number of Congressional candidates, including the five Democratic incumbents—Reps. John McCormack and Joseph Kennedy (both unopposed) and Harold Donohue, Thomas J. Lane and Philip J. Philbin, and to Foster Furcaloe, who is opposing incumbent Republican Rep. Charles R. Clason in the 2d District.

Local PACs have indorsed a number of candidates for various legislative and town offices.

But, the whole campaign is revolving about "5, 6 and 7."

The Massachusetts Citizens' Union got the three questions on the ballot after it had taken a round thumping in the State Legislature.

Of No. 5, Labor says:

It outlaws every form of union security—union shop, closed shop and even maintenance of membership. No. 5 makes it a crime for a union to write a union security contract even if the employer is willing and every employe is a member of the union. It encourages anti-union groups to break a union, eliminate seniority, cut wages and fire indiscriminately.

It promotes "free riding," restores the evils of the open shop, which caused so much unrest in the olden days of the Bay State.

Worse of all, No. 5 would destroy the industrial peace which has been almost 100% in Massachusetts.

"It is especially the provision which would ban the 'union shop', as embodied in the words 'to retain'. For whatever view may be held about the 'closed shop'—it is the considered opinion of this committee that the 'union shop' is a necessary part in the orderly conduct of modern business.

"It has the support of the majority of those who work and of those who give employment. To outlaw the union shop would in the opinion of the committee be detrimental to the public interest and to the best interests of both labor and management."

The State Senate rejected No. 5 by 36 to 0. The House voted it down 203 to 5.

OF No. 6 (strike votes), Labor says:

It provokes strike votes and strikes over every grievance. It requires a majority of eligible voters instead of votes cast as in all other democratic elctions. Labor points out that every American state and national election is determined by a majority of those voting and not of those eligible to vote.

New Voters Set Record At Fitchburg

(In many American communities, less than half of the voters cast ballots in elections. Yet, under the time-honored American system, those who get the top vote take office.)

No. 6 makes it a crime to strike without going through the procedure. It injects the State Labor Relations Board into every union dispute. It counts a union member's vote for the company and against the union, if he is absent, ill or unable to attend the election.

The House rejected this issue, 110 to 95. In the Senate, the rejection was by 18 to 14.

REFERENDUM No. 7 regulates only one voluntary association — the union. It enmeshes union election machinery with red tape. It prevents union members from electing delegates who in turn would select officers of city and state organizations—such as CIO councils—as is done in Republican and Democratic state and national conventions and in many veteran, fraternal and other social organizations.

It makes it a crime to elect officers by any other method than prescribed in the law. It insists on annual elections, no matter what the cost to the union.

Barnes Law

The Massachusetts Barnes Law, passed by referendum in 1944, was adopted by a vote of 750,000 to 300,000. More than 600,000 voters failed to vote either way on the referendum.

The Barnes Law provides for an elaborate system of union financial statements, expensive and almost impossible for the average member to understand.

Petrillo Aids

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, relaxed his union's ban on recordings to allow the Massachusetts United Labor Committee to make special recordings against the referenda.

THE TRUTH: This is united labor's reputatio you saw on page 1. The model for the page 1 p to be a professional model and not a Fore R Yard worker. The three men are the president maker of the strike motion and an eyewitne

This measure lost in the House 126 to 82 and in the Senate, 20 to 13.

It is interesting to note that the present Massachusetts House and Senate are controlled by the Republican majority.

WHAT do the citizens of Massachusetts think of these referenda?

Let's quote a few:

E. J. Parrish, vice president, Cluett-Peabody (Arrow shirts): "Cluett-Peabody and the union (Amalgamated Clothing Workers) have enjoyed productive and cooperative relations for many years . . . I do not feel that the legisla terests of good tions."

Rt. Rev. Norman B. Nash, Massachusetts Protestant Episcopal bishop: "The three bills enact unnecessary and unwise interference."

POLITICAL LEADERS

Secy. of Labor Tobin: "The advance of labor will not only have been wiped out but will recede to a position even inferior to that existing in 1933. I take a firm and unequivocal position in opposition to the three."

Dever (former Attorney General): "I urge all voters to vote NO on 5, 6 and 7 . . . they undermine collective bargaining."

THE CIO-AFL groups are working in closest harmony in this campaign. I attended a meeting at which plans for getting out the vote were discussed. There was not a single argument over who would handle what territory.

All that everybody present wanted was to get the strongest possible leadership in an area. Sometimes it was AFL, sometimes CIO, in some places Brotherhoods. Where there was a small union membership, but a possible liberal vote, the ADA or AVC was given charge.

What are the chances of the Democrats in Massachusetts this November? Well, I talked this over at great length with a number of reporters from daily newspapers. There were two adverse factors noted: an early swell towards Dewey, which apparently is now receding; the unknown Wallace vote, which is also receding.

On the other hand, the Democrats are carrying on a vigorous campaign and are believed to be making heavy inroads. There is also the activity of labor and the birth control referendum.

As one reporter put it, "don't count Truman out yet, I think he'll win." Most gave him a 50-50 chance. One was positive Dewey would carry the state.

As to the Congressional races, only Democrat with a serious fight on his hands is Donohue, who won by only 1200 in 1946 in one of three cases where the vote went against the trend of Republicans ousting incumbent Republicans. Donohue, however, is rated as a pretty certain winner.

Best chance of ousting a Republican seems to be in the 2d District where Clason won by about 3200 in '46.

Anyway, "when you vote, vote NO on Number 5, when you vote, vote NO on Number 6, when you vote, vote NO on Number 7, vote against the Labor Referenda!"

Yes, Siree!

In union shop elections since Taft - Hartley, Massachusetts workers have voted 98.7% yes.

Minute Men

The American Veterans' Committee of Massachusetts is staging Minute Men rallies against the anti-labor referenda.

Truman: GOP For Labor But Wants More Curbs

President Truman in an address last week at St. Paul, Minn., said he has discovered where the Republicans stand on major issues. He listed them thus:

"They approve of the American farmer—but they are willing to help him go broke.

"They stand four-square for the American home—but not for housing.

"They are strong for labor—but they are stronger for restricting its rights.

"They favor a minimum wage—the smaller the minimum the better.

"They indorse educational opportunity for all—but they won't spend money for teachers or schools.

"They think modern medical care and hospitals are fine—for people who can afford them.

"They approve of social security benefits—so much so that they took them away from almost a million people.

"They believe in international trade—so much so that they crippled our reciprocal trade program, and killed our international wheat agreement.

"They favor the admission of displaced persons—but only within shameful racial and religious limitations.

"They consider electric power a great blessing—but only when the private power companies get their rake-off.

"They say that TVA is wonderful—but we ought never to try it again.

"They condemn 'cruelly high prices'—but fight to the death every effort to bring them down.

"They think the American standard of living is a fine thing—as long as it doesn't spread to all the people.

"And they admire the Government of the United States so much that they would like to buy it.

CIO Drives For More Victories In Georgia

By TOM NOWELL

WITH 68 victories bringing more than 20,000 Georgians into the CIO since the Southern organizing drive began, the CIO Organizing Committee now has 24 petitions for elections within the state on file with the NLRB, Georgia CIO Dir. Charles H. Gillman reports.

In addition, there are approximately 8000 textile workers in Macon and 12,000 textile workers in Columbus "under heavy campaign activity," Gillman said.

"'Campaign Dixie' has not localized its Georgia activities," Gillman said, "but has spread out into all sections of the State. South Georgia, admittedly the hardest to crack, has come through with victories for the CIO in Savannah, Albany, Columbus, and the timber sections of Cuthbert and Buena Vista.

"Two Georgia cities have become practically 100% CIO towns during the two years of the Southern organizing campaign. These are Dalton, where the union has been highly successful even to the extent of electing one of its membership to the City Council, and Cedartown, where a local union man has also been elected to the town's governing board. There is little or nothing left to organize in Dalton; in Cedartown one mill remains unorganized, but a NLRB hearing is expected to set a date for an election next week.

"The Macon area, under the leadership of R. E. Starnes, subregional director, is now awaiting an election in the new giant plant of the Armstrong Cork Co. This election, requested several months ago, should break the ice for the CIO in Macon. The campaign for Armstrong was spearheaded by Starnes and an able staff of Southern drive organizers, and has been given the unstinted help of J. P. Taylor and Ray Nixon, of the United Rubber Workers.

"The textile scene in Macon has been brightened by recent decisions of the NLRB in favor of the Textile Workers Union, which was forced to charge several mills with unfair labor practices. In the case of the Macon Textile Co. the union was forced to request the board to halt the election.

"In South Georgia, the campaign has been especially successful among woodworkers in the heavily timbered sections. More than 2500 lumber workers have been organized, and, in one instance when a strike semed lost, the union could not talk the men into returning to work without victory. Such high morale was gratifying to all in the Southern labor movement.

"This drive was begun under the direction of Emil Luter, then sub-regional director of the Columbus area, now an international representative with the International Woodworkers of America.

"CIO progress in Georgia has been steady and operated on an even keel. There has been no 'flash in the pan' activity, but rather a moderately speeded, and thorough organizing job. There has been intensive anti-union activity, but only three cases of actual assault on CIO organizers. Clyde Brock, Leo Smith, and Bill Gupton were the three who suffered personal attack, but in each case the violence reflected in the union's favor."

Woodworkers Quash Revolt Of Canadian Secessionists

THE secession of British Columbia affiliates was halted last week by the twelfth annual convention of the CIO Woodworkers at Portland, Oreg.

In a move to protect the property and contracts of members, top officials of the IWA were directed to take over the affairs of the union in the Canadian area where "rebel" leaders attempted to secede and set up a dual organization for wood workers.

Two resolutions brought to the floor by the Canadian delegation vigorously attacked Harold Pritchett, one-time international president, and his cohorts, asserted the offices they held in the District Council and other posts to have been vacated by their actions and called on the international officers to move in, pending election of new district and local officers.

FADLING

One of the resolutions declared Pritchett and his associates have "by their words, deeds, and acts resigned from membership and office in the IWA and affiliated locals," asserted the vast majority of workers in British Columbia desire to remain with the IWA and called on the organization to take necessary steps to make it possible for them to carry on with its ranks.

FOR more than two hours, delegates paraded to the "mikes" to denounce Pritchett, Ernie Dalskog and others who are officers of a new "rump" organization — Woodworkers Industrial Union of Canada.

But one dissenting vote was recorded on one of the resolutions, and the other was unanimously indorsed.

The convention heard charges from officers of the union and from members of the investigating committee that some $153,000 of union cash had not been properly accounted for.

Applause rang out at times as delegates called on the convention to get rid of the "traitors and rebels" as well as take steps that might bring about recovery of funds and records.

Andy Smith, who introduced the resolutions, told the delegates that time is of the essence in having them adopted in order that court action, already under way, not be hampered.

PRES. JAMES FADLING has instituted court action in British Columbia to freeze the funds of the British Columbia Council. The court has ordered all monies and properties of the District Council be turned over to the IWA but officers of the "rump" organization are reported to have locked themselves into the old IWA offices.

Pres. Harvey Nelson of the Columbia River District Council brought cheers when he told the Canadian delegation "we are with you all the way." Introduction of a minority report on a resolution indorsing the Marshall Plan touched off verbal fireworks.

Delegates backing the resolution paraded to the microphones to hurl charges of "filibuster," "Communist," and "low-down politics the like of which has never been seen in any of our conventions before."

Whereas the resolution brought in by a majority of the Resolutions Committee praised the European Recovery measure as "noble and farsighted," the minority looked on it as entirely something else.

"A plan to split Europe into two armed camps, rebuild the German war machine and carry out the Wall Street Drive" were some of the things the minority saw in "the junking of the FDR Program for that of the Truman-Vandenberg bipartisan administration and 80th Congress."

A delegate jumped to a "mike" as soon as the lengthy minority report had been concluded and inquired "does this mean we have to bow down whenever we see Joe Stalin's mustache?"

There was similar debate on a prior resolution, subject of which was union officers and representatives to cross international border line without discrimination. A motion to refer the subject measure back to the Committee finally prevailed.

OTHER resolutions adopted, mostly, without debate, included:

- A call for the Government to re-establish proper control of rents and to extend federal rent controls beyond time limits now set.
- Advocated passage of anti-poll tax legislation at next session of Congress.
- Favored extension of Social Security to those not now protected. Called for increasing the minimum wage to 75c an hour and extension of Fair Labor Standards Act to now-excluded groups as well as repeal of "infamous Portal-to-Portal Act."
- Urged enactment of legislation requiring congressional and legislative committees to give witnesses the right to question their accusers and be represented by counsel if they desire.
- Denounced "the unprincipled drive to cripple the Department of Labor" and pledged support to a program for consolidation of all Government activities dealing with workers' interests into an enlarged department, including, under a unified administration, the Federal Security Agency.
- Called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law.
- Demanded legislation for a long range federally-directed and financed housing program "equal or superior to the proposed Wyatt Program."
- Called upon Congress to enact legislation guaranteeing full civil liberties.
- Asked legislation for multiple use control and development of Columbia River and major tributaries as well as tighter controls over real estate developments to keep them from flood danger. The Government was asked to refinance the loss suffered by residents in the lower Columbia River area in the spring floods.

A slate of eight delegates has been named to represent the IWA at the National CIO Convention at Portland, Ore., next month. They are: Andy Smith; James E. Daling, Portland; Harvey Nelson, Portland; Eugene Miller, Roseburg, Ore.; Vernon Dimler, Aberdeen, Wash.; Earl Nimtz, Spokane, Wash.; Joe Clark, Susanville, Calif. and W. E. Boston, Crossett, Ark.

GE is Found Guilty Of Anti-Trust Charge

The General Electric Co., two affiliates and three officers were convicted of violating the Sherman anti-trust law in Federal Court in New York City Oct. 8. Specifically, the defendants were found guilty of conspiring to monopolize trade and commerce in this country and with foreign nations in hard metal compositions and products between 1927 and 1940.

Convicted under a 1941 indictment, the corporations are liable to $25,000 fines. The individuals, including Walter Stearns, manager of trade relations and special contracts at the GE Schenectady plant, face similar fines and possible 5-year prison terms.

LABOR'S SCHOLARS: These four trade unionists, l. to r., Irwin J. Suall, AFL Seafarers Int'l Union; Warren Red Novitch, CIO Auto Workers; Esther L. Demeo, CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; and Ernest A. Calloway, CIO Transport Service Employes, have begun study at Ruskin College, Oxford. Dr. Harold Taylor president of Sarah Lawrence College, has suggested a two-way "Rhodes Scholarship" for study in England by trade-union members from the U. S. By such a plan, says Taylor, "we will help develop a better informed trade union leadership in America."

Indiana CIO Spurns GOP, Backs Demos

POLITICAL action stole the show at the Indiana State CIO convention, where 525 delegates enthusiastically invited the Republicans to go jump in the lake and pledged their efforts to Democratic candidates, both state and national.

The three-day meeting in South Bend continued the purge of left-wingers begun last year, adopting a constitutional amendment banning from office any person who is "a member, consistent supporter, or who actively participates in the activities of the Communist Party or of any fascist, totalitarian or other subversive organization."

Following adoption of the amendment, the Council's three top officers—Pres. Neal W. Edwards, Vice Pres. Nell Riddle and Secy.-Treas. Claude Bechtell—were re-elected by acclamation.

Another constitutional amendment reduced the executive board from 22 to 12 members.

A steady barrage of attacks was levelled at the Republican-controlled 80th Congress by guest speakers, delegates and resolutions. One speaker, State Sen. Charles E. Fleming, now Democratic nominee for secretary of state, kindled such enthusiasm that delegates lined up after his address to contribute personally to his campaign.

Indiana PAC Dir. Bartley Brown launched the attack on the state's Republican Congressmen by asserting that "Indiana has a chance to send seven good Congressmen to Washington this year instead of the two (Democrats) now in office."

FRANK Annunzio, Illinois PAC secretary-treasurer, put both the GOP and the Progressive Party through the wringer. He said that a huge turnout of voters in November would be necessary to defeat Congressmen and Senators "who represent special interest groups."

The importance of a big vote was also stressed by Emil Mazey, CIO Auto Workers secretary-treasurer, who told delegates that "if we can mobilize the potential power of 15 million voters in the labor movement, there is nothing we cannot accomplish."

The national CIO office was represented by Councils Dir. John Brophy and George L-P Weaver, director of the Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

"The attempt to push up wages is only a rear guard action," Brophy stated. "We must have a Congress that will face the price situation."

Weaver characterized Henry Wallace as "insincere," since he had failed to apply the civil rights principles he now espouses to his administration when he was in the government.

4 CIO MEN TRAINED AS ECA EUROPEAN AIDES

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THEIR heads crammed full of information about the Marshall Plan and their pockets bulging with printed matter given them last week at the ECA's five-day training course in Washington, four CIO men recently appointed to labor advisers' overseas staff were all ready to sail for Paris.

Scheduled to leave Oct. 22 on the Queen Elizabeth are:

Michael Harris, former regional director of the Steelworkers in Philadelphia, Pa., appointed as a labor adviser to The Economic Co - operation Administration's French mission in Paris.

John Hutchinson, member of the American Newspaper Guild on leave from the San Francisco News, appointed assistant to Harry Martin, labor information director now on the staff of ECA's Special Representative Averill Harriman in Paris.

James Toughill, Newspaper Guild member, Philadelphia, who went through the long strike against the Record in 1946-47, assigned to Martin's staff in Paris, as a labor information specialist.

Richard Kelly, International representative of the Auto Workers, Detroit, also assigned as a labor information specialist to Martin's staff in Paris.

No Relief Agency

One of the points stressed throughout the ECA course is printed at the top of a large chart standing in front of the class room. It reads: "We are not distributing relief. We are not engaging in procurement."

ECA SCHOOL: Four CIO men newly appointed to ECA's overseas staff, listen between lectures to Ted Silvey, executive assistant to Labor Advisers at ECA headquarters in Washington. Scene is the classroom at the State Dept.'s Foreign Service Institute where the ECA training course was held. L. to r., standing, Michael Harris, Richard Kelly; seated, John Hutchinson (left) and James Toughill. All will sail for Europe this week.

THE four CIO'ers were in Washington last week to attend the overseas training program being conducted jointly by the State Dept.'s Foreign Service Institute and the ECA. Robert F. Hale, in charge of the Institute's School of Basic Officer Training is director of the program.

All ECA overseas appointees from typists and secretaries to technical experts, advisers and top executives take the course before leaving for their jobs abroad. The program started in July and is expected to run through November or as long as overseas appointees keep coming through.

So far some 300 men and women assigned to ECA Overseas Service or working at key jobs in Washington have taken the course which is held each week, Monday through Friday. It is expected that about 200 more will take the course before the program concludes.

Talks by ECA division directors and other specialists in the various fields covered and in some cases State Dept. personnel—are given at a series of 22 conferences which conclude with questions and discussion.

One of the speakers is Ted F. Silvey of the CIO, now executive assistant to the chief labor advisers, Clinton Golden and B. M. Jewell who give weekly talks on labor's role in European recovery.

"The ultimate success of the ECA program lies with the workers in the various European countries," Silvey said in last week's talk. "These workers have confidence in the unions to which they belong. We want them to learn through their unions the truth about American labor's support of ECA."

THE overall aim of the training course is to give concentrated information about ECA's basic objectives, essential policies and programs, organization at home and abroad, its relation to other U. S. and international agencies, foreign peoples and governments.

Main objectives of the ECA program as outlined in a chart used in the course:

- Facilitate and stimulate trade within Europe and by Europe.
- Promote industrial and agricultural production in participating countries.
- Assist in restoration of maintenance of sound currencies, budgets and finances.
- Encourage American investments in Europe through guaranties of convertibility of local currencies into dollars.
- See that commodities are exported to participating countries in preference to non-participating countries.
- Make available American technical experience and advice in management and production.
- Negotiate for retention in Germany of certain plants scheduled for removal as reparations.
- Establish a special ECA mission in each of the participating countries to develop recovery plans and folow through on end use.

Plan Changed

Economic Cooperation Administrator, has announced that Victor Reuther, educational director of the CIO Auto Workers, will go to England with the joint Anglo-American Production Council.

Reuther will take the place of President L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers who has notified Hoffman that pressure of duties here will make it impossible for him to attend. Council meetings will begin in London Oct. 25.

Follow Policy or Quit, CCL Warns Communists

By JACK WILLIAMS

DELEGATES to the eighth annual convention of the Canadian Congress of Labor at Toronto served notice last week on a dwindling Communist faction that they must adhere to Congress policy if they wish to remain with the CCL.

Pres. A. R. Mosher sounded the note in his opening address when he said:

"Nothing that can be done in Canada and in other democratic countries to awaken the people to the menace of Communism should be overlooked. The labor unions particularly should free themselves from Communist leadership. Realize that Communists are loyal in the first instance to Russia rather than to their own countries, and that in case of war, they form centres of treason and sabotage."

Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy said: "The job of this Congress is to clean the Communists out of it and put it back on a trade union basis. Until we do that, we can't do the job that belongs to us."

Conroy was speaking in favor of a resolution, which he called a move "to separate the sheep from the goats." The resolution called on all Congress unions to devote their full strength to the preservation of a free trade union movement aimed at a better society free from any totalitarian philosophy, Communist or Fascist.

THE convention, attended by more than 840 delegates, was one of the largest in CCL history. Previous executive board action suspending the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers was upheld and an appeal was referred to the incoming executive board. The suspension followed an article in the Mine-Mill publication, "The Union," attacking Mosher.

First major split on political lines came on a foreign policy resolution introduced early in the session. The resolution in its preamble gave strong support to The Marshall Plan and continued:

"1 We condemn the totalitarian activities in Soviet Russia and its satellite nations. We protest most vigorously the incarceration in Buchenwald and other concentration camps of leading European trade unionists and democrats because they will not submit to Communist destruction of the free labor movement.

"2 We condemn most vigorously the inhuman and aggressive blockade of Berlin, the only purpose of which can be the systematic starvation of its citizens in the interests of Russian military expansion.

"3 We greet the formation of the Western Europe democratic defense alliance, and we urge that Canada should indicate its readiness to participate in an Atlantic defense conference against spreading totalitarianism.

"4 We re-affirm our formerly expressed policy on the matter, and again, in strong and urgent language, call upon the United Nations to put its House in order and become an effective and militant enforcement agency for the peace of the world, as against those whose activities constitute a menace to it."

The resolution was carried by a 10-1 vote.

CONROY, a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions Executive Committee, commented: "The WFTU, if it is to continue to function as a world body, must immediately define the function and structure of trade unions in all countries, whether they be capitalistic or Communistic.

"Trade unions should be free in all nations; they should be neither appendages to nor prisoners of the state. Trade union delegates should be free to go to world gatherings, and tell the facts of the trade union situation —the story about wages, working conditions, and other related matters in their countries.

"I am not convinced that this freedom for trade unions and trade union delegates exists in a number of countries. Their lack of freedom was reflected in the debate on many issues. The delegates from the Western countries usually interspersed their comments with praise for good things that had been accomplished by their governments, but where they were dealing with unsatisfactory conditions, they did not hesitate to criticize their governments.

"For example, I criticized the situation in Prince Edward Island and other parts of Canada where unfavorable legislation had been enacted. The CIO delegates from the United States also criticized their government on various matters. Yet, at no time did we listen to anything but a repetition of the glorification of Communist governments in all their aspects in the countries where such governments exist.

"It is my considered opinion, therefore, that there must be, in these days of revolution, a revolutionary change in the position of trade unions in Communist countries. They must be free to criticize and challenge the state, as we are in this country. Without that revolutionary change, the WFTU will become a farce, since it will exist only for the purpose of changing conditions in the capitalistic countries, and will not be a world-body at all."

The delegates in their five-day convention dealt with a variety of topics covered by some 250 resolutions. Action of the Canadian Government in removing price controls and subsidies and allowing living costs to soar was roundly condemned. Speakers pointed out that while living standards of Canadian workers were being slashed through high prices, corporations were gathering in the largest profits in their history. The convention called for the re-imposition of price controls.

Other resolutions demanded a comprehensive government housing program and improved social legislation, including health insurance and increased old age pensions.

'Bama CIOers Want Truman On Ballot

Alabama CIO leaders have asked Gov. James E. Folsom to call a special session of the state legislature to consider putting Pres. Truman on the ballot in Alabama.

The delegation represented 14,000 rubber, textile and steelworkers. E. K. Bowers, president of CIO Rubber Workers Local 12 in Gadsden, said the group wants to be able to vote for Truman—"preferably as the Democratic presidential candidate—but as an independent if necessary."

Midwest Education Meet Nov. 13 in Milwaukee

The union's responsibility in forwarding democracy in the world scene today will be the keynote at the Midwest Workers' Education Conference to be held Nov. 13-14 at the Eagle's Club, Milwaukee, Wis. The conference is sponsored by the American Labor Education Service, headquarters at 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. Eleanor Coit is director.

In Europe

Marshall Asks Aid Of Unions

"YOU don't get production without well-organized trade unions."

That quotation doesn't come from a union official or from a politician looking for votes.

It was made by Secretary of State George C. Marshall, addressing a group of 40 European union leaders in Paris.

Most of the unionists were members of the labor conference formed last March to support and promote the European Recovery Program. In a 45-minute off-the-cuff address, Secy. Marshall emphasized the major role which unions must play if ERP is to be successful.

"What we are fighting for is not just peace, but a type of peace in which an individual or a trade union is free to meet as it pleases and to say what it pleases," Marshall declared. "This is about as far from a police state as you can get."

The Secretary reminded the labor group that unions, perhaps more than any other group, are dependent on the freedoms of assembly, speech and opportunity. "Your very life depends on these freedoms," he said.

Marshall said that Europe was in a state of general disintegration early in 1947 as a result of the breakdown of the Moscow conferences, and that this threatened the stability of the entire world.

The proposal for the recovery program, made in June 1947, brought dramatic action from the European nations, Marshall said, and that "great, historic progress" has resulted.

U. S. Unions' Aid Seen As Marshall Plan 'Ad'

Support of U. S. unions for the Marshall Plan has been among its most effective advertising in Europe.

The statement was made by Clinton S. Golden, former steel union vice-president and now a principal labor adviser to Paul Hoffman, head of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Speaking at Roosevelt College in Chicago, Golden said:

"The most effective answer to such a charge (that the Marshall Plan is simply American imperialism in action) is the support and participation of the American labor movement in the European Recovery Program.

"That support comes from all three major branches of organized labor: the CIO, the AFL and the railroad brotherhoods.

I know from personal knowledge obtained from my recent visits that this united support of American labor behind the Marshall Plan has been a crucial factor in quieting the fears of European trade unions that Americans aid might involve the loss of European sovereignity.

"The support of American labor has, therefore, served as the most effective counter-thrust to Communist charges of American imperialism."

"Doesn't this remind you of the price spiral, Professor?"

Dr. Sward Says

'Ford Cut A Sorry Figure In History'

A farmer's son who bitterly hated the dreary routine of day-after-day chores but loved to tinker with machinery decided one day to leave the farm and go to the city to see if he couldn't improve his lot.

This beginning might fit the life story of millions of young men in this country, living and dead. In this case it refers to the career of Henry Ford, who rose to great heights of power and wealth as the "Flivver King" of America.

What did Henry Ford have that was lacking in the millions of other unknown young men who began life as he did? How did he hit the jackpot that made him a multi-millionaire? Was he a mechanical wizard? What forces joined to give him the fame and money few others have equaled? Did he use his fame and fortune to help his fellow citizens? Was he really a "great man"? How did he treat his workers?

Keith Sward, in his book "The Legend of Henry Ford," discusses these and other questions in a well-documented and fascinating study of the life and times of the Flivver King which is worthwhile reading for union members.

Dr. Sward, who is known to many CIO'ers, has a thorough understanding of and sympathy for the labor movement. (In the early years of the CIO he edited, for a short time, an Allegheny Valley edition of The CIO News.)

Sward's intimate knowledge of the aims and struggles of unionism and his direct contacts with rank and file workers and their problems give his book, particularly the section dealing with Ford's fight against the United Auto Workers, a depth and direction lacking in the usual purely academic approach.

Dr. Sward, a clinical psychologist who has taught at the University of Minnesota and Western Reserve, put in years of work on the Ford study. He spent several years doing research, another on field work in Detroit, and two more writing the book.

The product of these years of work is a rich and penetrating study of an industrialist who held the livelihood of millions of workers in his hands, and whose behavior and actions affecting the welfare of them and their families were marked by startling contradictions, whims and sometimes seemingly blind, stupid pigheadedness.

The book's most important implication from a union point of view is that it leads to the logical conclusion that a strong labor movement is the only practical means in our present society of protecting the rights of workers from being trampled on by ruthless, power-drunk industrialists who look on their employes only as cogs in the machinery of production.

Milk Production Up, So Are Prices

"In August 1948, dairy farmers in the New York area produced more milk than in August 1947. Consumers, however. drank less milk," the magazine of Consumers Union said, asking: "With supply up and demand down, what happened to prices?"

And the answer: "Despite the well-known law of supply and demand, consumers had to pay more for their milk; the price was 3½ cents a quart higher in August of 1948."

ADVERTISING COUNCIL PROCLAIMS:

Better Life is Aim of U. S. System

WHAT makes the American economic system tick and how can it be made to function better and for the benefit of more people?

Those are the two top questions the Advertising Council will seek to answer in its new economic education campaign.

The campaign, Council officers say, is the first widespread one in history built around the idea that America needs greater productivity and that the benefits of such productivity must be shared equitably by those responsible for it.

"Greater productivity," these officials say, is not just a fancy phrase to disguise a new speed-up scheme for workers. They say they're trying to sell the idea that greater production be achieved through wiser use of machines, power, techniques and human skills.

Two of the 10 basic points of the campaign deal with subjects of especial interest to unionists.

One point makes a flat indorsement of "free collective bargaining—the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively with employers."

THE other basic point of the officers states:

". . . American experience has proven that it is in the long-run interest of all; (a) to pay labor progressively higher wages in relation to prices; (b) to do this by progressively increasing productivity per man-hour through the application of constantly greater mechanifiation, power, efficiency and skill in the processes of production and distribution; and (c) to reduce hours of labor and improve real income while increasing the volume of production and distribution."

One of the objectives of the campaign is to "show that economic freedom and political freedom are dependent upon each other."

The ads, radio programs and posters which will be used in the campaign were approved by a Public Policy Committee composed of representatives of a wide section of American life. Organized labor has three representatives, including Editor Allan L. Swim of the CIO News, on this committee.

COUNCIL officials say their campaign ads are unique because they contain no special pleading for any one group, because they admit the American system has its faults and because they slap strongly at Communism although the word "Communism" is seldom mentioned.

"This campaign will not please the extremists in either industry or labor but we believe it will do a good job of explaining our economic system and provide the nation with solid middle-of-the-road suggestions for making the economy work better," one Council leader said.

The Council directed the advertising campaigns in connection with war bond sales and recruitment of women into the armed services and is now conducting nationwide safety, "better education" and "improved foreign trade" campaigns.

Unlike Caesar's Wife

Un-American Group Is Not Above Suspicion

THE House UnAmerican Activities Committee has been charged with publishing propaganda "without authority" of the Congress.

Rep. Arthur Klein (D., N. Y.), voicing complaints that the Committee had gone beyond its authorized functions, said the Thomas group has been functioning "for many months, even years, as a valued tool of the Republican National Committee."

Klein asked Rep. Karl LeCompte of the Committee on House Administration to refuse to sign vouchers for the UnAmerican Committee's unauthorized printing.

He said that the Committee publications, about communism and religion, will run to 100,000 copies, and that permission of the entire House is necessary for such a printing job.

"I am particularly disturbed by the irregularity and impropriety of the actions taken by the Committee on UnAmerican Activities, because this comimttee, laboring in a delicate field of human freedoms and national security, should be like Caesar's wife—above suspicion," Klein declared.

Dewey Civil Service Slap Substantiated

MINUTES of the Brooklyn council of the Veterans of Foreign Wars prove that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey did term Civil Service employes "mediocre" and that he did state he would "abolish" the civil service system in government if he had his way.

Dewey's remarks expressing his views on Civil Service were first reported in the Democrat, official publication of the Democratic National Committee. Republican party officials presented second-hand denials for their silent candidate.

The Democratic National Committee last week made public a copy of an official report made to the Brooklyn council of the VFW on March 15, shortly after the meeting in Albany where Dewey made his statements.

The report was made to Daniel J. O'Neil, then Kings County Commander of the VFW, by his representative at the legislative meeting with Governor Dewey, Major James J. Mackin, Chairman of the Americanism Committee and the Brooklyn council legislative committee.

Mackin's report casts considerable light on the attitude of the Republican candidate for the office of the presidency on many subjects. The paragraph of the report bearing directly on the matter of Civil Service reads as follows:

". . . When he reached the bill sponsored by the Civil Service employes association and indorsed by the VFW, he flew into a rage and gave the Civil Service a severe tongue lashing. This bill provided for an increment or automatic increase for a state Civil Service employe who had 10 years of satisfactory service and who had reached the highest grade for his class of work.

"The Governor says, 'I'd never sign a thing like that. This would pay the son-of-a-sea-cook for breathing. Not while I'm Governor.'

"At that point everybody present chimed in and said a kind word for the Civil Service employes, whereby he turned around with a broad grin and said all Civil Service is mediocre.

"I explained that such employes were essential, but he stated that if they could not make good in 10 years they should get out. Finally, he stated in the course of conversation, that if he had his way he would abolish the entire Civil Service system.

"This made everybody present very angry and after the meeting there was considerable comment on his tyrannical attitude towards Civil Service employes."

Government Textile Pay Floor Raised

Under the Walsh-Healey public contracts law, the Secretary of Labor has authority to set minimum wage rates on government contracts. Prior to increasing the minimum, the department conducted hearings at which CIO Textile Workers Research Dir. Sol Barkin urged raising the floor to 87 cents.

Red Flag Waver

Labor really loves the T-H law, according to Rep. Hartley. Only labor leaders attack it because they're power crazy.

But at a cocktail party thrown for him at the swank 21 Club in New York City by the publisher of his book "The New National Labor Policy," Hartley forgot that line in his confusion.

Asked whether he planned to take a job as labor relations consultant for private industry, he exclaimed:

"Me a labor relations consultant! Wouldn't that be like waving a red flag at a bull?"

Steps Toward Longshore Settlement Reported

SOME progress toward settlement of the West Coast maritime strike was reported by CIO Organizing Director Allan S. Haywood after separate conferences with company and union representatives.

Haywood was sent to the west coast by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to try to get shipowners around a bargaining table with the striking unions. He said shippers wanted "further assurance" that national CIO officials would guarantee performance of any contract which might be negotiated. The national CIO, he said, had given that type of guarantee before in other instances.

At the same time the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union announced its willingness to hold a secret ballot election for a rank-and-file committee to meet with the Waterfront Employers Assn. The WEA has refused to negotiate with ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges on grounds that he has failed to sign the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit.

Meanwhile Bridges challenged the WEA to put him under oath in the $275,000 libel suit he has filed against shipowners. "They can place me under oath now and ask me any question they want, whether I'm a Communist or follow the party line or have sabotaged waterfront work. They can ask me and I have to answer," he said.

Bridges revealed that shipowners plan to go to court Oct. 20 and ask for a delay in the trial. This stalling, he added, is "proof that all the public statements are mere hogwash to obscure the real program of unionbusting."

Former Local Officer

Held In Reuther Shooting

DETROIT police are holding a former local union official on a charge of shooting of CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther.

The accused, Carl Bolton has a 20-year criminal record, which began when he was sentenced to prison for armed robbery before he was 19, police said. Bolton is a former vice president of the Ford Highland Park local.

BOLTON

A hearing this week will determine whether Bolton will stand trial. In any event, he will first face a charge of robbing the union's Pontiac cooperative store of $600. He was being held on this charge when police claimed to have run across evidence connecting him with the shooting.

If convicted of the shooting, he would face a maximum sentence of life imprisonment. No possible motive for the crime was advanced by authorities.

The UAW convention proceedings show that Bolton was a delegate to international conventions, voting for Reuther for vice president in the 1944 convention and against Reuther in 1946.

Reuther was shot through a window of his home.

ACA Fails To Indorse Candidate

DELEGATES to the ninth national convention of the CIO Communications Association in New York City backed their international executive board in voting to boycott the Natl. Labor Relations Board and, while praising the Progressive Party, refused to endorse any presidential candidate.

The resolution continuing the union's policy of not filing non-Communist affidavits or financial statements under the Taft-Hartley law left the way open for a change of policy, however. The executive board was empowered to take any action, including submission of the issue to referendum "in the event of any new legal or other substantial change in the situation."

"Nothing but harm to our membership can result from permitting our union to become engaged in the murderous procedures of the Taft-Hartley Board," the resolution stated.

The presidential election resolution noted that the Progressive Party "is challenging what has heretofore been considered by the Democratic and Republican parties as their exclusive right to represent the citizens of the United States."

Urging ACA members to make their choice "on the basis of full and open discussion of the issues," the statement went on to "assert the right of our members and officers to support, advocate and work for the Progressive Party, or any other political party."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Martin Gerber, director of UAW-CIO Region 9, reports that employes of Schuette-Koerting Co., Philadelphia, voted 205 to 107 to be represented by the UAW-CIO.

Ralph W. Tillotson, CIO regional director in Erie, Pa., reports that the Textile Workers Union of America has won an election among the employes of the Horne Silk Mills, Titusville, Pa., by a vote of 74 to 6.

Thomas J. Gallagher, organization director of Shipbuilders Union, reports victories in three union security elections: National Gypsum, Dover, N. J., 121 to 3; Pennsylvania Smelting and Refining Co., Philadelphia, 41 to 8; Ajax Electric Co., Philadelphia, 24 to 0.

Donald Henderson, president of FTA-CIO, reports that Local 78 of that Union successfully resisted a raiding attempt by the AFL Teamsters in California and Arizona.

The UAW has filed a petition with the NLRB for a representation election among the 400 office workers at the Lincoln plant of the Ford Motor Co. This is the first move in a UAW campaign to bring all the approximately 10,000 Ford office workers into the union.

Ninety-six years ago this week unions began their first venture into the field of research and education for the benefit of their memberships. This effort was made before there were any national unions and before any state Labor Departments, the U. S. Labor Department or the Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics had been established.

Officers of the Philadelphia Journeymen Printers Association and the Philadelphia locals of Tobacco Workers, Cabinet Makers, Shipyard Workers and Cordwinders and Bootmakers conceived this far-seeing development. It was established as a cooperative and was known as the Labor Statistical Bureau.

The program of this new labor weapon aimed to render a service to unions throughout the nation in the study and compilation of wage rates and working and living conditions; the preparation and printing of labor pamphlets and literature for organizing and educational purposes; research and preparation of material for use in the legislative programs by unions; and the preparation and printing of labor papers and periodicals.

Today there is no national union which does not have its own research and educational department to fulfill these needs. It is important, however, that we should always keep in mind that the labor movement as it exists today did not happen all at once and appear on the national scene full-grown. It was the product of fearless and prophetic leaders and of the unselfish sacrifices and undying loyalty of millions of workers in every industry who had accepted the vision of labor and were willing to fight for it.

HARRY S. TRUMAN THOMAS E. DEWEY

Where Truman Stands--

- He's for a war on inflation.
- He's for strong civil liberties.
- He's for Taft-Hartley repeal.
- He's for greater Social Security.
- He's for ERP and a just peace.

Where Dewey Stands--

- He's for Big Business.
- He says he's for ERP, but—
- He's backing isolationist senators.
- He's for Taft-Hartley.
- He would scrap the New Deal.

Who Is This Man Dewey?

Is he suited to hold the office of President? What is his record on inflation? What is his record on civil liberties? What is his record on governmental projects like TVA and MVA? What is his record on civil service? What is his record on labor? What is his record on foreign affairs? Is he a stooge for Big Business? Why does he urge the reelection of such isolationists as Curley Brooks, of such open tools of industry as Joe Ball? He says he is for the Marshall Plan, but what has been his past record. See Pages 6, 7 & 8 to find out.

GET OUT VOTE-A RECORD VOTE MEANS VICTORY

T-H Ruling Bans Mass Picketing

By GLORIA CAPLAN

ADD peaceful mass picketing to your fast-growing list of Taft-Hartley "Thou Shalt Nots."

This drastic ruling was made by Irving Rogosin, an NLRB trial examiner in Chicago. It grew out of a case involving the CIO Electrical workers and the Cory Corp., Chicago manufacturer of coffee brewers, electric and gas stoves and other products.

Drawing the T-H ban on "coercion" to the extreme, Rogosin decided that "force of numbers alone, even where picketing is conducted peacefully, has an intimidatory and coercive effect on employes otherwise willing to cross a picket line. Picketing of such character exceeds the bounds of peaceful persuasion and is not privileged or protected as free speech."

If the interpretation is upheld by the NLRB and by the courts, employers will have been handed an almost fool-proof strike-breaking formula.

THIS is how it would work:

Unions have traditionally employed the mass picket line as their main defense against strike-breakers. With mass picketing outlawed, strike-breakers would be virtually free to swarm into the plant. Once enough men were on the job, the employer would call for a representation election. Strikers replaced by strike-breakers would be barred from voting under T-H. The anti-union replacements would vote the union out, the strikers, denied a voice in the decision, would lose their unions, their strike and their jobs.

Rogosin's ruling referred specifically to a Taft-Hartley protest demonstration staged Nov. 21, 1947, by 1500 to 2000 UE and other CIO members near the Cory plant. The strike, which began Nov. 1, was then in progress, and had been riddled with T-H almost daily—beginning with the company's refusal to bargain until the union filed non-communist affidavits.

THE demonstration began some distance away from the plant when participants rallied to hear UE officials and Secy. Michael Mann of the Chicago CIO Council describe the various T-H weapons so far employed against the strikers.

As they then paraded toward the struck plant, where anti-picketing injunctions were in effect, police began to haul marchers off to jail. More than 182 were arrested.

Rogosin ruled that while the procession's purpose "may have been to demonstrate in protest, its necessary effect was to prevent ingress and egress at the plant by sheer force of numbers."

The UE local had held a contract with the company for six years prior to Taft-Hartley.

'The Law As Written'

AN apologetic NLRB has now hammered the last nail in the T-H doctrine that strikebreakers determine union status in a struck plant.

Shamefacedly the board members explained, "It is our duty to administer the law as written, not to pass upon the wisdom of its provisions."

The ruling was based on Section 9 (c) (3) of the Law, which says "employes on strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall not be eligible to vote."

Section 9 (c) (3) doesn't "limit" the right to strike, the Board said. It just "discourages its exercise in some situations."

'It's A Poor Rule That Doesn't . . .'

Commenting on the $20,000 fine levied on the union of clerks at Oppenheim-Collins Store, New York City, for violating an injunction against picketing the store, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch said:

" . . . Under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the most important of all the laws to make organized capital behave itself, the maximum penalty a corporation must pay for conspiring to fix prices is $5000 on each count on which it is convicted. The real giants of corporationdom cannot even feel so light a slap on the wrist.

"If stiff fines are used to impress organized labor with the value of observing the law, the fines on organized capital should be stiffened to accomplish the same purpose."

Wage Round Up

Packing Union Wins Reinstatement of 24

A four-cents hourly wage increase offered the CIO Packinghouse Workers by Swift & Co. was passed on to local unions for acceptance or rejection without recommendation by the union negotiators, UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein said.

Negotiations were conducted under a wage reopening. The union may still reopen its contract for further wage talks before the contract expires in August 1949.

In Kansas City the union won reinstatement of 24 Armour employes discharged for strike activities. Ordered reinstated by Arbitrator Harold Gilden, 12 of the workers will receive back pay retroactive to May 24. Seven were refused back pay, but given their seniority rights by the arbitrator. Another five were refused reinstatement.

Elsewhere in CIO:

● Eighteen weeks of strike ended for 550 CIO Fur & Leather Workers at Worcester, Mass., with gains of 10c an hour, 5c of which is retroactive to the strike's beginning; two additional paid holidays; four hours reporting time pay and a one-year contract.

● New York CIO Brewery Workers, charging a speedup, walked out Oct. 14, cutting the city's beer deliveries down by two-thirds. The union's international representatives termed the walkout "irresponsible," urged the men to return to work.

● CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers in the Salinas-Watsonville (California) area beat back raiding attempts of the AFL Teamsters in an NLRB election.

TWUA Pension Fund Trustees Named

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has announced appointment of three union trustees to administer the newly-established pension fund for workers in 300 dye shops in the New York metropolitan area.

They are William Pollock, TWUA secretary-treasurer; William Gordon of Brooklyn, TWUA vice president and assistant dyeing division director, and Charles Lazzio of Paterson, N. J., president of TWUA Local 1733.

The pension fund was started in September with employer contributions of $1 a month for each worker, but no payments from the fund can be made until June 1, 1950. The money will be set aside in the meantime as a reserve while trustees study possible pension plans. Employers also will name three trustees.

Two Tell Court Of Reuther Death Plot

Two witnesses testified in a Michigan court that Carl Bolton, a former CIO Auto Worker minor official, offered them $15,000 to kill Union Pres. Walter Reuther.

Four days before the union head was shot at his home, John Miller testified, Bolton spoke of "rubbing out Walter Reuther." A day before the shooting, he said, Bolton came to his house, picked up two shotguns he had left there and said, "I'm going out and get myself a * * * Commie."

Kenneth Bannon, head of the Union's Ford division, also was scheduled for similar treatment, Miller said.

Both Miller and the other witness, John Pantella, are former auto workers and are awaiting sentence on a burglary conviction.

Bolton is being held for trial.

Undercut By Independent

Long Lines Union Gains 9½c Increase

WAGE increases ranging between $1 to $7 weekly have been won by the long lines telephone union affiliated with the CIO Telephone Organizing Committee.

J. J. Moran, president of the American Union of Telephone Workers, said the company offer, soon to be voted on by the membership, will put a yearly total of $4¼ million more in the 23,000 long lines employes' pay envelopes.

On an hourly basis the increase averages about 9½c, ranging from an average 8c for clerical workers to an average 12c for plant employes.

Moran described the offer as far above any gained this year by independent unions in the industry. It was not as good as it might have been, he said, due to the acceptance by a number of independent telephone unions of much lower wage offers and three-year contracts. "These agreements undercut our bargaining position," Moran said.

"The Communications Workers of America (independent) introduced into the telephone industry three-year contracts, which limited bargaining to twice in the three-year period. Evidently a mistake was made because they have exhausted their first reopening without being able to conclude a satisfactory settlement."

THE AUTW increase was negotiated under a 30-day wage reopening clause in the contract, which expires in March 1950. When the contract went into effect in May this year, plant employes — 30% of the bargaining unit—were given fringe benefits amounting to about 2½c an hour. Coupled with the new increase, their gains for the year will have amounted to 14½c.

Moran noted that the total annual increase exceeds by about $750,000 the amount won by the union after a six-weeks strike in 1947. The CIO was not then in the telephone field.

Commissioner Orders Santo Deported

A major round in his fight to remain in this country was lost recently by John Santo, Transport Workers Union organizer, when the Immigration Commissioner ordered him deported as a Communist.

The charge was based on Santo's allegedly violating his status as a student from Hungary by obtaining employment and circulating literature dedicated to the government's overthrow.

Altho seeking Santo's ouster as an official of the union, Michael Quill, president of TWU, commented that this deporation "will not serve the best interests of civil liberties."

Murray: 'If We Vote, We'll Win'

PHILIP Murray last week pledged CIO's fighting support to the re-election campaign of President Harry S. Truman.

"We will use our votes to return to the White House a fighting President . . . who will carry on the splendid progressive policies of the New Deal," Pres. Murray declared.

The speech was prepared for delivery at a big rally for Truman and Barkley in Pittsburgh on Saturday, Oct. 23. The meeting climaxed an airplane tour by the President through the industrial centers of western Pennsylvania.

Murray praised the President for his numerous vetoes of Republican bills designed to chop away the New Deal. He hailed the President's own progressive legislative proposals as in line with "our program."

The CIO president read the record of the 80th Congress—and he contrasted the Truman record against the Taft-Hartley Act with Dewey's record in defense of the anti-labor law.

RECITING recent interpretations of T-H's meaning, Murray said:

"Can there be any doubt that this is a strike-breaking law? Can any labor leader worthy of the name lend comfort or support to the Presidential candidate who in this very city of Pittsburgh proclaimed his endorsement of the Taft-Hartley Act?

"Labor wants no man in the White House who is committed to, and runs on a platform supporting this vicious law."

President Truman, he recalled, "has consistently and forthrightly" advocated its repeal. His party's platform in plain language that none can misunderstand, calls for the elimination of this law."

Murray charged that the 80th Congress "under the domination of the biggest big-business lobby in history set out to scuttle the gains we won under Franklin Roosevelt. The record of Harry Truman's defense of these New Deal gains is evident. It's in the record—it's in the vetoes."

THE 1948 election, Murray added, is whether we want "four more years of government carrying forward the principles of the New Deal" — or whether we want our government "under the control of bankers and corporate interests."

If Republican candidates win, he indicated, the banker-corporate control will be extended from Congress to every branch of government.

"These corporate interests want to rule, and their rule means ruin for you and me," the CIO president warned his Pittsburgh audience.

Recalling that corporation profits are at an all-time high of over 20 billion dollars after taxes, Murray said:

"WE cannot, we must not permit this dizzy spiral of super-profits and inflationary prices to continue unchecked. If we do, America will face the most dreadful economic crisis in its history.

"There's something each and every one of us can do to prevent the calamity of that monopoly control of our government," Murray pointed out.

"We can vote for candidates whose program is our program. We can vote for people in the White House, in Congress and in the state and city governments who will fight in the democratic way to uphold our ideals of fairness, decency and honesty.

"If we stay home on November 2, we'll make a lot of reactionaries happy. And we'll have nobody to blame but ourselves.

"But if we vote, we'll win."

Bridges Proposes 'Rank And File' Negotiations

CIO Longshoremen's Pres. Harry Bridges has formally notified the Waterfront Employers Association of his willingness to step out of negotiations and to permit the membership to select a rank-and-file bargaining committee with the employers.

The offer was made in response to the Association's widespread statements that it would refuse to deal further with the union leader.

"Your association is attempting to mislead the public as to the reasons the strike is being prolonged by saying that you will not deal with any committee of which I am a member," Bridges wrote.

"The truth of the matter, as you well know, is that your Association wishes to dictate the composition of the union negotiating committee. If this is not so, there is no reason that you should not agree, and agree now, to meet and negotiate with the type of committee herein proposed."

CIO Vice President and Organizational Dir. Allan S. Haywood returned last week from a week-long effort on the West Coast to settle the strike, announcing that the deadlock still persists.

The employers, he said, were not as concerned about the non-communist affidavits issue as they were with obtaining Bridges' ouster.

"The employers are demanding they deal with responsible persons," he remarked. "But they have been dealing with Bridges for the past 14 years and up to 9 o'clock the night of Sept. 1 they were willing to sign a contract with him if they could get one."

Haywood has reported to CIO Pres. Murray on the situation and said he stands ready to return to the West Coast whenever he can be of assistance in reaching a settlement. The walkout is now in its eighth week.

2ND CONVENTION SPECIAL LISTED

THE Great Northern Railway has announced it will provide a special train from Chicago to Portland, Ore., for delegates and visitors to the CIO convention.

The train will leave Chicago, via the Burlington line, on Thursday, Nov. 18. On Friday, the 19th, it will arrive at St. Paul and be switched to the Great Northern tracks. On Saturday, the train enters the Rocky Mountains region and colorful scenery will be seen on all sides. The train arrives at Portland Sunday, the 21st, at 7:35 A. M.

There will be sleeping accommodations and also coaches with reclining chairs. All cars are air-conditioned. Passengers may also get on at other stops beyond Chicago.

Information and reservations can be obtained through E. H. Moot, general passenger agent, Great Northern Railway, 142 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

The Milwaukee road had previously announced a special train for the convention, which will leave Union station, Chicago, at 10 p.m., CST, on Nov. 18.

CAREY DECLARES:

American freedom—the nation's first line of defense—is being attacked by people on both the right and left who have no faith in our democratic processes.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey, speaking last week at the New York Herald Tribune Forum, charged that "some Congressmen and some American corporations are saying frankly to American citizens: 'The procedures of constitutional democracy are not for you; you must seek another method.'

"Well, if those spokesmen do not know it, the Communist Party has a method to propose," Carey said.

The CIO official said it is "extremely disturbing' to find men of science fearing to serve our government because of the "wanton irresponsibility of Congressmen who, from political or worse motives, devote themselves to character assassinations of varying intensity."

He cited the case of a government employe deprived of his job "simply because he was an admitted member of an anti-Communist organization gratuitously termed subversive in the personal opinion of the Attorney General. Is it only incidental that the man in question is a war veteran who lost both of his legs in World War II?"

The administration of the European Recovery Program has refused a job to an "extremely able man who has for many years been prominent in the organized labor movement." The man was barred for once belonging to an organization listed as subversive—even though the man has "through the years been a most effective fighter against Communism," Carey charged.

These men do not have the "full protection of our laws," and when that protection is denied, "the world is told that we, the American people are neither free nor secure."

Big businessmen and their "human echoes in Congress" have staged a planned denial of human rights and security, Carey said. He mentioned the Taft-Hartley act and the refusal of Congress to pass bills on economic security, civil rights and social reforms.

651 Union Men On Rent Boards

Labor unions are represented on local rent boards by 651 labor representatives out of a total 4447 board members. The breakdown on the labor members: CIO —157; AFL—352; Machinists—21; other unions 121. The 1948 Rent law makes adequate representation on the boards of all segments of the community mandatory.

As a result of labor representation on the boards, a number of proposed rent increases were blocked.

OUTRAGEOUS RULING!

An attempt is being made under the Taft-Hartley Act to destroy labor's only effective economic weapon—the strike.

Latest move in this direction came from Irving Rogosin, NLRB trial examiner, who ruled that mass picketing—either peaceful or violent—violates T-H.

He said the Act protects the right of free speech and expression but that mass picketing "exceeds the bounds of peaceful persuasion and is not privileged or protected as free speech."

And he held that 80 to 200 members parading in front of the Cory Corp. plant in Chicago constituted mass picketing.

What nonsense!

But he is merely putting into practice a theory advocated by NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham that any strike is "coercive" of the rights of non-strikers.

Ruling in the Norvell Shoe Co. case, a trial examiner rejected Denham's theory and said:

" . . . the ultimate logic of the theory advanced by the General Counsel would seem to be that all strikes are outlawed by the Act . . ."

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Let's get away for a moment from all the legal-sounding phraseology and see what Rogosin's ruling, if upheld, would mean to a union which felt compelled to go out on strike for higher wages and improved working conditions:

Pickets hoist signs over their shoulders and start parading around the plant they have struck.

Management decides to do some strike-busting and sends out a call for strike-breakers to join the handful of scabs who decided not to leave their jobs.

Fifty strike-breakers and scabs show up at the plant, see 300 pickets and decide not to enter.

Then somebody shouts to the NLRB: "We wuz coerced!"

Denham and his boys rush to the rescue—of management. Somebody rules that only 15—or 10—or five—pickets can be used.

So a handful of pickets—instead of 300—man the picket-line. The scabs and strike-breakers enter the plant. Word is sent out that the strike is broken, that "only a handful of union guys are interested enough to show up for picket duty."

And within a few days the strike is badly bent if not completely broken.

WHY GO OUT ON STRIKE?

The strike is a weapon to be used as a last resort—to be used when negotiations fail—and if it is destroyed or too badly blunted unions will find themselves virtually helpless in collective bargaining.

Any trade unionist worth his salt knows that an ineffective strike is often worse than no strike at all.

They're trying to establish a set-up under which unions would have to battle both management and a Federal agency every time conditions got so bad they were forced to walk out.

Just imagine the hue and cry that would go up if this thing were put in reverse and a Federal agency joined with unions in limiting the number of strike-breakers an employer could attempt to hire!

By Their Backers Ye Shall Know Them

As Political Candidates Enter Home Stretch, Look Who's Supporting Whom

By ALLAN L. SWIM

As they say out at the horse emporiums where you put two bucks on a nag's nose and then regret it, they're in the home stretch now.

The stakes are high—mighty high—and don't let anybody tell you they're not.

Just look at who's betting on whom and you can get a pretty good idea of what's involved.

LET'S start out with Tom Dewey, the little man who wants to move from Albany to Washington and occupy the White House.

The big money is on Dewey because he appeals to those who have big money.

It's almost as simple as that.

He's the darling of the conservatives—the men who publish the big newspapers and run the big corporations.

Dewey is the champion of those who love the Taft-Hartley Act and hate what they loosely term "social legislation."

He's the fellow who has been campaigning on the theory that it's best to say almost nothing about almost everything.

HARRY TRUMAN is on the "other" side of the fence—the side occupied by organized labor and by the "little folks" who make up the bulk of our population.

He's been campaigning on the theory that it's best to say something about nearly everything in which the people are interested.

He's for repeal of T-H, for a higher minimum wage, for expansion of social security, for real civil liberties, for action to control inflation and build houses.

He's running on a platform indorsed by labor—a platform that doesn't contain the vague promises made by the GOP platform committee.

Regardless of what his original intentions were, he got himself so badly tangled up with the Communists that he's "their boy" now.

His chief contribution to the campaign has been to make a lot of noise and to split a portion of the liberal vote from Truman and some of the good pro-labor senatorial and congressional candidates.

He's backed by those who have exploited race and religious prejudice in their fight against trade unions.

And there's big money—Republican money—behind his campaign.

Thurmond's chief contribution has been to capture a portion of the Southern vote that would have gone to Truman.

He's a party bolter who, for all practical purposes, is working for Dewey.

IT'S NOT difficult to put candidates for the Senate, House and state offices in their proper categories merely by learning who their chief backers are.

From labor's standpoint, many of these races are extremely important—because labor must operate under laws enacted by our legislative bodies.

The Taft-Hartley Act, remember, was a product of Congress and not of the White House.

The numerous anti-labor state laws now on the books were passed by legislatures and not by governors.

YES, THE stakes are high, and the battle over them is one well worth fighting with vigor.

There's not a lot of time left in which to fight, but there are still important things to be done between now and the close of the polls on Nov.2.

There are still door-bells to be rung and campaign leaflets to be distributed.

There's still the job of getting to the polls those whose laziness or lack of interest might keep them from voting.

Newspaper Blames Tannery For Strike

THE Sun published in Luray, Va., (1511 population in 1940 and famous for its caverns) places on the Virginia Oak Tannery sole responsibility for the strike of its employes, members of Local 265, CIO Fur and Leather Workers. Excerpts from the editorial follow:

Almost from the beginning of the strike it has been a onesided effort toward a settlement. The tannery workers had asked for an increase in pay and better working conditions with job security and a union contract of responsibility.

The company has shown by its lack of interest in negotiations and reconciliation that they were only interested in crushing organized labor in their plant. Their use of the unconstitutional Taft-Hartley Act to aid them in their fight on labor has been drawn out at length and as a result conditions have reached a point for serious thought and consideration.

The Virginia Oak Tannery owes something to the community for all the privileges it derives from it. It is not—or should not be—a matter of cold business and money making. The workers must be considered from a standpoint of economic requirements. The community provides many services to the industries located within its borders.

Now after four months of the strike, The SUN must as a matter of principle take the view that the Virginia Oak Tannery is now solely responsible for the labor trouble now affecting Page County and doing it injury. Their procedure throughout these four months will bear out facts * * * that their acts have not tended to bring about any solution of the strike.

Their court actions have been "muddled" all the way through and based on "advantages" given to the company on the strength of the Taft-Hartley Act—using the injunction proceedings in their effort to intimidate the strikers instead of working in a positive manner to adjust differences.

The SUN desires to ask the various organizations of the community, namely, the Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants Association, the ministers of the Gospel, the Lions Club, the Woman's Club, the Town Council, the county Board of Supervisors, the veterans organizations, and all other organizations to form a consolidated effort here in Page County to make it their business to use every means possible to bring about an early return of the striking workers to their jobs with a negotiated contract which will assure peace in this industry so that the economic and social betterment of the community may increase.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By Yomen

"You'd better get accident insurance—I'm going to quote you."

They Wanted Help So They Asked For It

IT was almost like a voice from the past—a nearly forgotten voice—calling out for aid in today's modern world.

It was the type of appeal which ordinarily goes to a Chamber of Commerce or some similar organization.

But this appeal was made to the CIO.

It was a simple request. All that was asked was that the CIO use its influence to pave the way for a group of people to improve their own living conditions.

It happened this way:

DIRECTOR Bill Smith of the CIO Organizing Committee in North Carolina recently called his staff together for a "strategy meeting" near the Cherokee Indian reservation.

They talked about those things which organizers always discuss when they get together.

There were the usual problems—some serious, some not so serious.

There were reports on progress of the organizing campaign in the textile, wood and other industries of North Carolina.

Plans for the future were discussed. New schemes for meeting employer opposition were worked out.

ABOUT the only difference between this meeting and hundreds of others held by organizers since Operation Dixie began resulted from its location.

Smith had called his men together at a beautiful spot in the Great Smokies. He wanted to break the routine of long hours of hard work which the organizers had been following.

He wanted to ease the pressure under which men work when they're in the midst of a campaign.

What would be a better spot for this, Smith asked himself, than the place he'd selected near the Cherokee reservation?

DURING the conference a group of visitors arrived and asked to speak with Smith regarding a serious problem which confronted them.

Smith and his staff took one look at the visitors and realized immediately that they weren't workers interested in forming a union.

The spokesman for the Indians said they had a problem they wanted to discuss. This problem, he said, resulted from a lack of jobs for the Cherokees.

AS the organizers listened attentively, the Indian spokesman said his people had observed "what the CIO has done for workers in nearby cities."

Then he said, "We'd like for the CIO to help us.

"We'd like for some industry to locate here so our people can have an opportunity to earn a livelihood."

Smith told the Chief every effort would be made to get some industrial plants to locate near the reservation.

The delegation departed.

SMITH and his staff had received many requests for assistance, but none quite like this.

They were flattered, and perhaps a bit baffled by the problem which the Indians had posed.

But they weren't baffled over the reason for the delegation calling on them.

No, not a bit.

The reason had been made quite clear when the Cherokee spokesman said:

"We have observed that the CIO usually gets what it goes after." A. L. S.

CIO Plays Vital Role in Aiding Negroes Politically

How will Negroes vote in the 1948 election?

Walter White, outstanding Negro leader and head of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has some advice for those who think that the Negro vote can be automatically predicted:

"No person and no organization can deliver the Negro vote; it is an imponderable and independent vote, and the Negro increasingly demands results for his support."

There's increasing interest in the political aspirations of our 10 million Negro citizens, the background of their political action and thinking, and the progress they've made toward achieving full political freedom.

You'll find considerable information about these problems in a fine new book: "Balance of Power: The Negro Vote." It's written by Henry Lee Moon, publicity director of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Henry Moon knows politics. He knows Negro problems. He knows the attitudes of organized labor, since he's a former key staff member of the CIO Political Action Committee.

"Predominantly a race of wage earners," Moon points out, "the Negro masses share the basic problems, interests and destiny of all workers."

But close cooperation has been hindered, at various times in the past, by the employers' importation of unskilled Negro workers from the South to take the jobs of higher-paid white workers. That has been "the tragic story of black labor in American industry," the author points out.

"Fortunately it is changing with the growth of the Negro's political strength and with the development of more progressive ideas in the trade union movement, particularly under the impact of the non-discrimination policies of the CIO."

Through the efforts of the CIO and its political action committees, cooperation has developed and it has paid off. That occurred not only in the 1944 Presidential elections and in "numerous subsequent local elections." The results have been good for labor, and good for the Negroes.

THE idea of political action in organized form by the American Negro population is nothing new. Frederick Douglass, the great Negro leader of Civil War years, felt strongly that the ballot box would bring tremendous advances for the newly-liberated colored population.

But the "Republican compromise" of 1877 gave unchallenged power to the wealthy, former slave-owning classes of the South. In the next 20 years, during which "public opinion, industry, wealth and religion" were arrayed against them, the Negroes lost the remnants of their political power.

A new group of Negro leaders—Booker T. Washington was the leading spokesman—decried "politics" and urged education as the method of achieving status in our society. Barred from the ballot and from holding public office in many states, the Negro made the best of a bad thing by turning his back on the idea of political influence.

But in the past 25 years, the pendulum has swung again. The growth of the northern Negro population; the rising status of an increasing number of Negroes; the impact of the depression, the New Deal and the growth of unions—all have brought home to the Negro that use of the ballot is not only a right but a necessity for the welfare of every American citizen.

OUR Negro citizens want two things, says Henry Moon; full equality and the elimination of Jim Crow discrimination.

"What does the Negro mean when he says that he hopes for equality?" Moon writes. "Simply this: that he is entitled to and must have every right, privilege and opportunity accorded to any other citizen group.

"Negroes must have equal opportunity for the development of individual personality, the attainment of a fair and adequate share of the world's economic goods, and the enjoyment of life.

"This is little enough to hope for. This need is not alone for Negroes; America needs it to become a truly democratic nation." H. C. F.

'No Accident'

"It is not by accident that some of our worst labor baiters also hate Negroes, Jews, Latin Americans and other minority groups. These labor-baiters are intent upon obstructing every step in the direction of a better world of decent human relations.

"Not until we are able to eliminate them from positions of power can we hope to improve the conditions of the common man and create a society in which equality is possible and acceptable."—Henry Moon, in 'Balance of Power'.

DEWEY: UNSUITED FOR POST

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

WHAT manner of man is this Thomas Edmond Dewey who aspires to the highest office in America—in fact, in the world?

What manner of man is this Thomas Edmond Dewey, who urges the reelection of such rabid isolationists as Curley Brooks, of such open industry stooges as Joe Ball?

What manner of man is this Thomas Edmond Dewey, who uses such cliches as "we need a rudder to our ship of state" and "a firm hand on the tiller?"

Deweyism:
"You know that your future is still ahead of you."—Phoenix.

There is a tendency to sneer at Dewey because, as some smart alec once said, he looks like a toy bridegroom on a wedding cake. But that's not a valid reason for opposing a man for the Presidency.

Remember?

There is a tendency to sneer at Tom Dewey because he is rather short. But, that again is not a reason for opposing a man for the Presidency.

There is a tendency to sneer at Tom Dewey because he has strived always to be the All-American Boy. And that's not a reason for opposing a man for the Presidency.

There is a tendency to sneer at Tom Dewey because he has a mustache that reminds you immediately of Charlie Chaplin's. And that is no reason for opposing a man for the Presidency.

Dewey's Boss
HUGH SCOTT JOSEPH GRUNDY

"FARMER" DEWEY "FARMS" HERE

JUST why do the CIO and all liberals oppose Tom Dewey?

The reasons are many and compelling. They make you wonder why Tom Dewey has the gall to run for the Presidency, why the Republican Party, with its past record of such daisies as Warren G. Harding, Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover, started off this campaign with an admitted commanding lead over Pres. Truman.

That commanding lead has, of course, been trimmed down considerably. The reason: (a) Dewey's "play it down the middle" campaign; (b) Truman's hard-hitting drive.

Here's why Dewey is too small (mentally, and on his record) to be President of the United States:

Deweyism:
"Our streams should be filled with fish."—Denver.

Inflation:

Last summer, when the nigh cost of living was getting almost unbearable, Truman called a special session of Congress to tackle inflation and other problems about which the 80th Congress didn't do a thing.

Maybe Truman's act was partly political—you could hardly blame him in a campaign year. But, it stands on the record that he begged Congress to take steps to halt inflation.

And what did Dewey do? The man who smugly tells us he can cure inflation did worse than nothing. He sent word to Congressional Republicans that they should "sit down" during the special session.

In effect, he told the people to go to hell on high prices.

Foreign Affairs:

In the American political field, Tom Dewey is perhaps the prize flip-flopper on this issue. In fact, he has changed position so often that there is little doubt that if the pressure arises from a strong source, and he considers it politically expedient, he will dump the bipartisan policy which he now so nobly espouses.

Matt. Neely

In fact, America's present foreign policy is a perfect example of the strange paradox that has marked Dewey's political career. He has constantly grabbed at his opponent's best achievement, hugged it to his bosom and cried: "This is fine. but I can administer it better."

The people of New York State have found after falling for Gov. Dewey twice, that he promptly forgets about "liberal" platform pledges when he gets safely on the payroll.

Dewey originally opposed lend-lease—that is, until someone wised him up to which way the wind blows.

Dewey says in one breath he's for the Marshall Plan. In the next breath, he declares that the bipartisan policy applies only to the United Nations, which has nothing to do with the Marshall Plan.

Dewey infers he's for the reciprocal trade treaties, though he at one time—before the wind blew—opposed them.

But, he is so completely under the control of Joseph R. Grundy, arch priest of high tariffs, that he had to appoint Grundy's errand boy, Rep. Hugh ("best stock") Scott (R., Pa.) as chairman of the Republican National Committee. (Grundy's high tariffs were a major factor in bringing on the depression.)

Deweyism:
"Ours is a magnificent land. Every part of it."—Phoenix.

Syllogism: Any friend of Grundy's is a friend of Dewey's. But, Grundy is no friend of the American people so, therefore Dewey is no friend of the American people.

Administrator:

Dewey's builder-uppers have spread the story that he is an efficient administrator, that he has created a terrific surplus in New York, that he gets things done, etc.

Let's take some of that, brothers and sisters, and tear it apart.

After first taking office as Governor Dewey boasted that he had built up a surplus of $168,000,000, despite what he called the bad fiscal policies of his predecessor, Herbert H. Lehman.

But how did Tommy Boy do this? Dewey—known in Albany as the "Champion Fiscal Juggler"—took the books, advanced the end of the fiscal year from June 30 to March 1, and, lo, $50 millions were taken from Lehman's operating surplus and added to Dewey's.

Some of us wish we could do that to our income taxes.

Let's get back to that $168,000,000. Such a surplus represents—theoretically—a saving of $12.50 for each of New York State's citizens. Dewey's builder-uppers have shouted from the housetops that such a saving makes Tommy a genius, a friend of the peepul and obviously the man to live at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington 25, D. C.

Ah, but boys, have you ever heard of Puerto Rico, an island where devastating poverty abounds in the midst of lush soil and foliage?

Jas. Murray

In Puerto Rico, same year as Dewey's $168,000,000 and $12.50 per person, little Puerto Rico, which has to spend millions on relief and a surplus of $75 m per citizen.

And how does surpluses? Wel

All those three are votes to return to the economic thinking of the 1800s, to Hooverism, to possible breadlines, to company-unionism, to a hamstringing of the Marshall Plan, to a foreign policy in which isolationists like Sen. Curley Brooks will have the say.

The CIO has an alternative to all this. The CIO has given unstinting support to the Democratic Truman-Barkley ticket.

Dewey's Men:

Much has been said by Time, Life, Harpers' and other magazines about the Dewey Team, all of which would, if Dewey wins, come along with him to Washington, D. C., in an immigration that would make Truman's Missouri boys look like a two-man bobsled team.

The Dewey Team may be as capable as it's written up to be—and should be for the price it costs. May I hasten to say that the team's salaries and expenses are paid for, not by Dewey, natch, but by the taxpayers of the State of New York.

Here are some examples:

Paul Lockwood, nominally secretary to the Governor, devotes all of his time to exploiting Dewey's ambitions. (Lockwood twice tried to run for office in a Democratic District, took a terrific lacing.) The State of New York subsidizes the Dewey campaign by paying Lockwood $16,500 a year, plus $2400 expenses.

James C. Hagerty, press secretary. The taxpayers of New York hand him $12,500 annually, plus $2400 expenses, to publicize Tommy. His handouts cover Dewey the Governor only when that coverage would aid Dewey the Candidate. He is sure of getting his handouts in the New York Times, since his father is chief political writer there.

Charles Breitel, the governor's counsel for whom the people of New York shell out each year $16,500, plus the usual $2400 expenses. He advises Candidate Dewey on legal questions and is high in the hierarchy.

Elliott Bell, who carries the imposing title of State Superintendent of Banks (his previous banking experience—if you can call it that—was as a financial writer for New York papers), gets $15,000 and $2400 expenses yearly to advise Candidate Dewey on financial political affairs. The people of New York, who pay his keep, get little or none of his time. Oh yes, those Dewey speeches—in which the candidate takes little or no position on anything—almost all are ghost-written by Bell—and the taxpayers spring for it.

The Candidates

Just for the sake of the record, here are the candidates who are running for the Presidency of the United States:

Democrat: Harry S. Truman; Republican: Thomas E. Dewey, N. Y.; Progressive: Henry A. Wallace, N. Y.; "States Rights": J. Strom Thurmond, S. C.; Socialist: Norman Thomas, N. Y.; Socialist Labor: Edward A. Teichert, Pa.; Prohibition: Claude A. Watson, Calif.; Greenback: John G. Scott, N. Y.; "Christian Nationalist Crusade:" Gerald L. K. Smith, Mich.; Socialist Workers: Farrell Dobbs, N. Y.; Vegetarian: John Maxwell, Ill.

Harold Keller, whose title is Commissioner of Commerce, gets $15,000 and $2400 from the good people of the Empire State. His duties are supposed to be publicizing the natural attractions of New York—Niagara Falls, the Adirondacks, etc.—but you can't see the falls without Dewey getting in the way.

Deweyism:
"You and I have a great responsibility to our children and towards the generation to come."—Denver.

John E. Burton—title is budget director—collects $16,500 and $2400 from the State. He has a research staff of 75, which gets $356,448 annually. All of his time and virtually all of the time of the 75 is and has been devoted to getting material for Candidate Dewey.

What the high cost researchers collect is a mystery, since Dewey almost never says anything in his speeches anyway.

Alger B. Chapman — Commissioner of Taxes and Finances, nominally — gets $16,500 and $2400 of the taxpayers' money to act as Dewey's New York State campaign manager.

Edward Corsi, so-called Industrial Commissioner (Labor), is paid $16,500 and $2400, devotes virtually all his time—when he is not lousing up labor—to promoting Dewey among Italian-Americans.

Power:

Perhaps the most popular and successful New Deal accomplishments are TVA, Bonneville Dam and other power developments. Untold savings have been brought to farmers and other consumers; industry has benefitted, too. Military experts shudder to think what might have happened in the war if we did not have the vast industrial empire which was born of TVA.

Is he really for TVA? Is he really for public power development?

First of all, let's look at his backers. If there is a single utility executive in this country who is opposing Dewey he must be an outcast from his own class.

Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), who is fawned over as a "liberal" in foreign affairs, is the complete opposite on domestic issue—which no one will deny. Here's what his Republican State Central Committee of Michigan has to say of TVA—and we quote:

"Congress already has sunk 800 million dollars into the TVA experiment, thereby creating a kind of super-government which diverts tax funds as it pleases and milks the treasury by tricky bookkeeping methods. The request for additional millions is outrageous, both on the grounds of common sense and national public policy.

"Congress should take steps to drive the Communists and their advance agents out of the Tennessee Valley by selling TVA power facilities to private companies. The latter pay taxes and they are not trying to turn

SEN. BARKLEY

3 R's Haunt TD

THERE'S a Three R's issue in this campaign—and we don't mean the Rum, Romanism and Rebellion issue of the Cleveland-Blaine race.

We mean Readin', Ritin' and Rithmetic—or more specifically, the teachers of this land.

Teachers are mad at Gov. Dewey for many reasons. But, the most irritating issue stems from an article by Drew Pearson. Pearson said that Dewey, at a closed Governors' conference in New Hampshire, tried to get other governors to join him in an "anti-teachers' public campaign" and further that Dewey declared the teachers' lobby is "the biggest lie since Hitler."

As usual, Dewey did not personally deny it, leaving the denial to Press Secretary Hagerty. But, immediately, Govs. Gruening, of Alaska, and Maw, of Utah, both of whom were at the Governors' Conference, issued statements in which they said Pearson's story was correct.

In fact, they stated that Dewey's present running-mate, Gov. Warren, objected strenuously when Dewey made his appeal.

Dewey, intent upon being the great saver of the people's dough, has short changed the state's schools. Dewey and his backers try to cover this up by pointing to the fact New York State's average teacher pay is $3500, one of the nation's highest.

That is double talk, for the state-wide average is pulled up considerably by the New York City average. The metropolis has had to go in for rather heavy taxation to make up for the school funds the state—Dewey's state—has taken away from it.

New York City, where more than half of the state's population resides, pulls up the statewide average by paying a median of $4000 for elementary teachers; a median of $5000 for high school teachers. Outside New York City the median is $3000.

So, brothers and sisters, to recapitulate:

Dewey is against the people in general; he's against labor; he's against government power transmission; he's against the teachers.

He's for big business; he's for Taft-Hartley; he's for Hooverism; he's for Dewey.

You can show him Nov. 2.

America into a totalitarian state.

"TVA has become a hot-bed of Communism, a haven for Communists and a factory for Communistic propaganda ever since it began operations."

Now, that type of attack is known in some circles as the BIG LIE. There is not an iota of truth in it.

Ah! you say, but that doesn't state Dewey's own position.

So, let's get down to Dewey's position. Let's go to the Natl. Popular Government League, the director of which is Judson King, who stood beside George W. Norris for years in that great man's fight for TVA and other such projects.

Says the league:

"It is now proposed that the next Congress provide government transmission lines power to be sold at the dams, or off government 'main lines' to private utilities for marketing by them.

Sen. Brooks

Since we must spend billions more on river control from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the issue becomes of great importance.

"Documented evidence shows that Truman and a majority of Democrats in Congress are opposed to this proposed policy.

"It shows that Dewey and a majority of Republicans in Congress are in essential unity in

Deweyism:
"The miners of our country are vital to our welfare."—Denver.

approving it. Dewey would limit government transmission to 'main lines' only. Private companies, owning the smaller 'feeder lines,' would deliver to the city gates, or co-ops, and cash in as profitably as buying the power at the dams."

On Dewey's campaign train, Raymond P. Brandt, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, asked the Governor:

"What is your position on the public distribution of publicly generated power?"

Paul Douglas

Answered Dewey: "In Oregon, I indorsed the Postage Stamp Plan." Brandt then asked how far he would carry the public distribution of such power. "Dewey replied that his plan called for carrying the power over main lines to a given area."

Brandt wrote: "He did not say how such power should be locally distributed but implied private companies might share in such distribution."

The Postage Stamp Plan means that any city, district, or REA co-op in Washington, Oregon or Idaho, buing power off the government's network would get the same wholesale rate whether it was 10 miles or 100 miles from the generating stations.

The Electrical World, on Sept. 25 carried a story which was headed: "Dewey Indorses TVA Steam Plant, Public 'Main Line' Transmission." Dewey's reason: "In order to insure relative availability of power throughout the area that can be served."

Remarks the Natl. Popular Government League:

"This is plainly equivocal talk. To the public, 'main lines' will

Deweyism:
"Everybody that rides in a car or bus uses gasoline and oil."—Denver.

"But, a utility executive or an electrical engineer will know that 'main lines' mean the gigantic cross country trunk lines, 100,000 kilovolts and up, which carry the current to the large substations where it is 'stepped down' by means of enormously expensive transformers and then delivered to the gateways of the municipalities and co-ops over 'feeder lines' of from 66, say, down to 12 kilovolts capacity.

"The effect is obvious. One transmission engineer diagnosed the new Dewey plan thus: 'Dondero (Rep. George A. Dondero Mich. Republican, chairman of the House Public Works Committee) would sell government power to the private utilities at the switchboard; Dewey would sell it to the companies from the big Government switching stations along or at the end of a public line, a mere extension of the switchboard. But the municipalities and the consumers will get soaked by the utilities just the same.'"

Buy a PAC-age For a Buck

In a Collier's interview in May, Dewey was asked about TVA and public power. Said he: "I'm for them provided they do not interfere with private enterprise."

Dondero says public power is one issue on which "the Republicans are not divided." From all the above, and from the well-known opposition of Speaker Martin and others to public power, it is obvious that Gov. Dewey, if elected, will listen to the men who control the utilities.

Dewey recently said he doesn't favor further application of the TVA principle—which means no Missouri Valley Authority for Mr. Dewey.

After all, you know, he is in favor of handing the tidelands oil fields over to the states, which would make the fields easy prey for exploitation by powerful oil interests.

Labor:

It is no coincidence that Dewey, after talking about rain, love, sunshine, honesty, co-operation, efficiency, reorganization and other political pap, made a sudden switch and actually came out for something.

It was naturally, the Taft-Hartley Law. That wasn't surprising from the man who forced through the Albany legislature the Condon - Wadlin Law, which would impose severe penalties on any state or municipal employe who engages in any sort of work stoppage, but would not punish any official or director who might goad a worker into such action.

High Hat

The law was opposed by outstanding clergy and educators, but Dewey had to have his pound of flesh.

What does Dewey really think of those who work for a living, these people whom he aspires to rule?

Deweyism:
"We are troubled by high prices and we must end the maladjustments which caused them."—Des Moines.

Well, out in Illinois, a week or two back, he called a locomotive engineer a "lunatic" and declared he "ought to be shot at sunrise."

Let the engineer tell it. Says Lee Tindle, an employe of the Louisville & Nashville Railway for 31 years and a member of the Bro. of Locomotive Engineers:

"We were stopping near a water tower. I backed up and in the smoke and mist went about four or five feet too far. I traveled at a snail's pace.

"The people who stood along both sides of the track jumped aside good naturedly. No one was in danger and no one screamed, because I had given the proper signals and had fulfilled all regulations.

"I have never had an accident in my 31 years of services. And the management did not discipline me.

"I think as much of Mr. Dewey as I did before this incident,—and that wasn't very much."

So do we, Bro. Tindle.

One of Dewey's principal advisers on labor matters is Mel Pitzele, highly-paid "labor editor" of Business Week magazine. Pitzele is credited with helping ghost-write Dewey's "labor speech" in the 1944 campaign ("we can do it better") and his recent Pittsburgh speech ("Wagner Act was fine, but Taft-Hartley's better").

Some columnists "reveal" that Pitzele—who may have an influential labor adviser spot if Dewey is elected—was high-up in the CIO's steel organizing drive in 1936-37. That's considerably exaggerated.

Pitzele was indeed on the staff—as a junior organizer working under Van A. Bittner in the Chicago regional office of the steel union campaign.

Deweyism:
"We've got to keep this a free and growing country."—Barstow, Calif.

He was also one of the first organizers laid off by Bittner.

Liberties:

But do you recall the serious disturbances that occurred in Harlem in 1943? Well, after that incident, Dewey named a committee of 25 citizens who were to seek a solution for this.

When the committee report was turned in early in 1944, Dewey thanked the members for their recommendations, which included the formation of a Fair Employment Commission and creation of a Civil Rights Bureau in the attorney general's office.

Anderson

All Dewey had to do was say the word. But, he said another word, ordering the legislation pigeonholed. His excuse: it was too late in the session to handle this issue. However, a few days later, he sent up "last minute" legislation which was designed to discourage stockholders from filing suits against corporations and which was extremely helpful to big business.

Immediately, eight members of the committee resigned in protest. Said Channing Tobias, prominent Negro worker in YMCA:

"The chief offense is not that the bill (FEPC) did not or could not pass, but in the fact it was deliberately shelved and no opportunity was given to discuss it."

Walter White, executive secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, has this to say of Dewey:

"When President Truman's Civil Liberties Report was issued, I asked all candidates for their opinion of it.

"Dewey's staff replied: 'Under Gov. Dewey's leadership, New York has already taken many of the steps which the report recommends.' I wrote back, saying I wanted Dewey's own opinion, not that of the staff. I have received no reply to date."

Again on Dewey, White says: "When in 1944, the Republicans refused to vote cloture to end the filibuster against the anti-poll taxes bill, I wired Dewey and Wendell Willkie asking them to intervene. Willkie did, forcefully. Dewey wired back that 'my views are well known,' but took no stand or did nothing to help."

Civil Service:

And, of course, you've been told that New York is a model of civil service and that Dewey is completely responsible for this. Smith, Roosevelt, Lehman? What did they ever do? ask the Dewey-eyeds.

Well, let's talk facts.

A Veterans' of Foreign Wars Committee called on Dewey early this year to plug for civil service improvements. Reports Daniel O'Neill, of the Kings' County VFW:

Deweyism:
"I firmly believe that depressions need not be inevitable."—Albuquerque.

"He flew into a rage and gave civil service a severe tongue-lashing. This bill provided for an increment or automatic increase for a state civil service employe who had 10 years of satisfactory service and who had reached the highest grade for his class of work.

Mrs. Woodhouse

"The Governor said: 'I'd never sign a thing like that. This would pay the son-of-a-sea-cook for breathing.'

"He stated that if he had his way he would abolish the entire civil service system."

★ ★ ★

From all of the above issues, and from the article on Page 7 about teachers, it is obvious that Thomas E. Dewey is not suited to be President of the United States.

Oh, yes, Henry A. Wallace is also running for the Presidency, as you may or may not recall. The CIO is also proud that it has clearly and unequivocally rejected the Wallace candidacy and has denounced his party and platform as unsound and destructive.

Dewey Snubs Negroes

Negroes have been given a pushing around by GOP Candidate Dewey, Walter H. Aiken, president of the Natl. Builders' Association, charges.

Aiken, speaking before the Washington conference of Negro land-grant colleges, declared: "We especially want to smoke him out and tie him down on housing for minority groups."

He accused Dewey of failing to respond to a telegram sent him Oct. 7 by the Natl. Association of Real Estate Brokers, Natl. Builders' Association and the Natl. Negro Business League. The wire requested a conference on the housing problem.

In contrast, Pres. Truman sent "warm personal greetings" and said he "will look forward to hearing about your conclusions."

CIO News Uses Poster In Subscription Drive

A three-color poster urging all who see it to subscribe to the CIO News is being sent to industrial union councils, regional directors and locals of several international unions.

"The CIO News plays an important role in the operation of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. It serves as the chief means of communication between the National CIO and members of its affiliated unions. It provides prompt, accurate reports on organizational policy matters, legislation, politics, management-labor relations, economics, and many related subjects.

"The CIO News should be on the 'must' reading list of all CIO members."

The poster calls attention to the fact that the individual yearly subscription is $1 a year, $1.50 in Canada, and that under the group subscription plan—for 100 or more members—the cost per member is about 65c a year.

HUNDREDS OF DETROITERS LINE UP IN RAIN TO REGISTER

Registrants Ignore Gallup

THIS is our weekly refutation of the theory of Dr. George Gallup—of the polling Gallups—that this year's total vote will fall possibly as much as 3,000,000 below 1944.

As we've said before—and we repeat—we think George Gallup is all wet.

Humphrey

Registration in Arkansas is up nearly 33⅓%.

In California, it's up 22%, with a total of 5,062,089, compared to 4,141,331 in 1944 (Democrats outnumber Republicans, 2,892,270 to 1,908,208).

OR, let's look at Florida. In '44, it was 756,094; in '48, it's approximately 1,000,000. Georgia was 1,018,649 in '46; now it's 1,201,735.

Indiana's up from '44's 2,279,272 to 2,500,000, approximately, which is close to 100% registration.

Minnesota, where Hubert Humphrey is scaring the blazes out of Joe Ball, shows a rise from the 1,195,397 of four years ago to 1,400,000 this time out. Minneapolis is at a record 277,532; St. Paul has 174,785 compared to '44's 157,527.

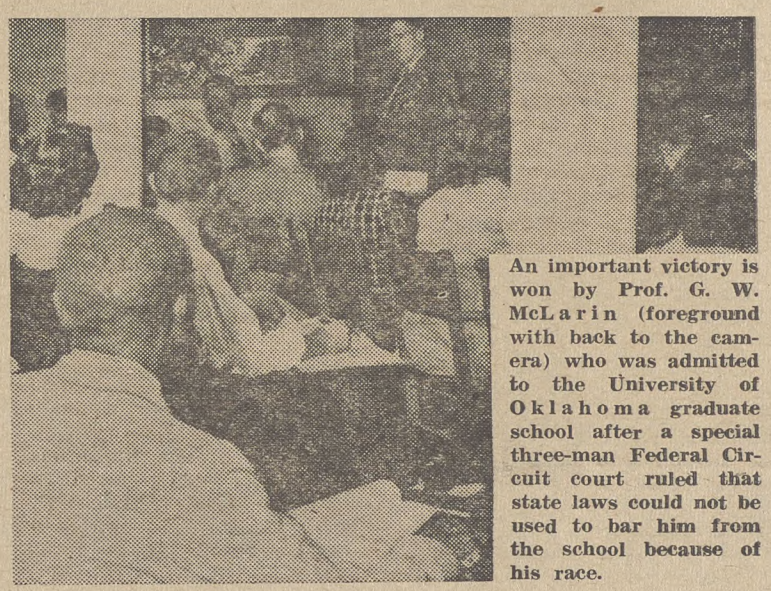
The City of St. Louis, Mo., is up from 381,842 to 405,000; Kansas City, Mo., is now 210,000; in '44 it was 190,390. Those two cities, as you well know, hold the key to Harry Truman's home state.

New Jersey, where the previous high was 2,361,000 in '40, now has 2,504,000.

IN Portland, Ore., where the CIO convention opens Nov. 22, the Democrats for the first time have a registered majority; it's an 11,000 lead.

Rhode Island—"Little old Rhode Island which is famous for you"—is up from 335,923 in '44 to 585,000. That's a 74.1% rise, chum.

How do you like them apples, Dr. Gallup?



An important victory is won by Prof. G. W. McLarin (foreground with back to the camera) who was admitted to the University of Oklahoma graduate school after a special three-man Federal Circuit court ruled that state laws could not be used to bar him from the school because of his race.

'The Choice Should Be Easy'

With only about two weeks remaining before the election, Tennesseeans ought to have little trouble in making their choice of a junior U.S. Senator.

There are two excellent reasons for voting for Rep. Estes Kefauver.

The other is the poverty of his opponent's record.

Brazilla Carroll Reece, the Republican nominee, voted against the Reciprocal Trade Act, against the full employment bill, against extension of price control, against extending the wage-hour law, against federal crop insurance, against the anti-lobbying bill, against the veterans' emergency housing bill, against health programs for Government employes, against putting postmasters under civil service.

The former Republican national chairman also voted against public operation of Muscle Shoals, against the PWA, against Social Security, against creation of TVA, and, when the national emergency arose just prior to this country's entry into the Second World War, against lend-lease, against selective service and against the arming of American merchant ships. Since the war he has voted against the Fulbright amendment for international co-operation to maintain peace.

Mr. Reece didn't think the measures important enough to merit his valuable time and so he didn't vote on the European Recovery Program, the admission of 200,000 DPs, the loan to Britain, the Greek-Turkish aid, the International Bank and Monetary Fund, the McMahon bill for control of atomic energy, and the La Follette-Monroney bill reorganizing Congress.

He voted for the Case anti-strike bill, the bill to prohibit political contributions by labor unions, and the abolishment of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

A more wretched record would be difficult to find in either House of Congress. Carroll Reece is a relic of the political Stone Age. Estes Kefauver is a public servant with an eye to the future. The choice of Tennesseeans should be easy.

Officers of Four California Utility Locals Suspended By Union's Executive Board

OFFICERS of four California locals have been suspended by the national executive committee of the CIO Utility Workers of America, following unanimous authorization of the move by the union's third national convention.

The resolution empowering the national committee to take action charged the local officials with negotiating for the transfer of the locals to a rival AFL union, of refusing to adhere to national UWUA policy, and of refusing to consult with national union representatives or to permit their attendance at membership meetings. All the acts, the resolution stated, constituted a violation of the union's constitution.

Involved are locals 133, 137, 169 and 241. Pending a hearing before a trial committee, the locals will be administered by an appointee of the national executive committee.

The convention, held in Washington, D. C., threw its full support to the Truman-Barkley ticket, praising the President for his stand on the Taft-Hartley Law, price controls, housing and social security, and condemning Dewey as "the candidate of Big Business."

FURTHER impetus to the union's endorsement of Truman was given by the appearance of Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.), who twice brought the delegates to their feet cheering.

Pepper warned his audience against the Republican "blue-sky sellers," whom he accused of practicing the "caviat emptor" principle—"let the buyer beware." The GOP, he said, thinks it has the election "in the bag." But, said Pepper, it's a paper bag, and already leaking.

The Floridian then tore into the Republican claim that Dewey is a good administrator. "I never heard anyone say Roosevelt was a good administrator," Pepper said. Neither, he continued, was Lincoln considered that.

"Have you ever seen the people of America—the people of the world—cry when one of these 'good administrators' died?" he asked. "You give me a man in public office whose heart's right, and you can have all the good administrators they can sell or create on Wall St."

A DEPRESSION would be the result of a Republican victory in November, the Senator predicted, because the Republicans "dry up the springs of purchasing power. They begrudge every wage rise the unions get for their members."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey, addressing the delegates, said that Truman's record was "even superior to that great record of Pres. Roosevelt." He explained that Truman's opposition was stronger, the difficulties following the war greater than those encountered by Roosevelt.

Carey pointed out that the Democratic platform parallels that of the CIO on every issue. "This is certainly no time for workers of America to sit out an election," he emphasized.

Following a condemnation of the "Tafts and Hartleys" and the Communists, Carey charged that "Taft is trying to Sovietize the American trade unions, make them instruments regulated by government, restricting their right to withdraw their services from an enterprise, creating intolerable conditions." Both groups, he said, are tearing down workers' confidence in democratic institutions.

WITH the exception of one constitutional amendment, the convention proposals met with delegates' undivided consent. Warmly contested was a proposal to increase the national officers' term from two years to three and to hold conventions every 18 months instead of annually. The amendment was adopted overwhelmingly over the objections of California delegates, who argued the move would give their left-wing critics food for attacks on the union's leadership.

- Repeal Taft-Hartley
- Bring prices down
- Raise the minimum wage
- Low-cost housing
- Control rents
- National Health insurance
- Broaden social security

RESOLUTIONS were passed favoring private ownership of public utilities "so long as private ownership is productive of good labor-management relations"; urging repeal of state anti-labor laws; urging inclusion of health and pension plans and rejection of "escalator clauses" in contracts.

The union's officers noted in their report that UWUA membership, now 75,000, is at an all-time high.

All four top officials were unanimously re-elected. They are Joseph Fisher, president; William J. Pachler, secretary-treasurer; Harold Straub, vice-president and organizational director; and William Munger, vice president.

Typos Lose, Win In Court Case

The Int'l Typographical Union came thru with both a victory and a defeat in the latest of its Taft-Hartley battles.

Federal Judge Luther M. Swygert found the union and four of its officials guilty of contempt for allegedly violating a previous Swygert injunction. But the judge did not order a stop in payment of strike benefits to members who have been on the picket line at Chicago newspapers since last November. Nor did he rule that ITU insistence on union foremen infringed on the injunction.

Sigler About-Faces On Labor Course

Gov. Kim Sigler has done an about-face and urged the board of regents of the University of Michigan to reinstate the Workers Educational Service program, under which more than 75,000 industrial workers in the state went to evening classes and took part in other educational activities.

The original postponement of WES activities came after General Motors made charges before a Congressional committee, and to Sigler, that "subversive doctrine" was being taught. The GM charges were quickly refuted both by AFL and CIO unions and by several executives of the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. who took the same course.

EFFECT OF EROSION: When steps are not taken to protect the top soil, double damage sometimes occurs. Here for example is an expanse of sand—once top soil—which is gradually burying a cedar forest which may be barely seen in the left background.

EROSION HALTED: Contour tillage—plowing, planting and cultivating across the slope as nearly on the level as possible—creates innumerable little dams to hold the rain until it soaks into the ground. This method of farming prevents blowing away of precious top soil.

CIO Pamphlet Warns:

'Man-Made Deserts are on the March'

THE CIO has warned that unless immediate curative steps are taken, America's land will be unable to produce enough to feed our people, let alone the needy people of the world.

The CIO Dept. of Education and Research in a pamphlet, "Healthy Soil, Healthy People," issued last week, said:

"Millions of the world's food acres are poor. And they are rapidly becoming poorer. Man-induced erosion, stripping away precious topsoil, gouging gullies into slopes, is destroying millions of good acres every year and lowering the productive capacities of millions more. Man-made deserts are on the march!"

While the population is rising, "We are plunging headlong toward disaster," the pamphlet states. "Some 50 million acres formerly in production already essentially ruined; an additional 50 million acres so seriously damaged as to be marginal or submarginal; still another 100 million acres losing topsoil rapidly.

"In normal times, an American family with a $2000 income needs three acres per person to maintain its standard of living—two and one-half acres for food and one-half acre for shelter, clothing and the raw materials of industry.

"By 1970, at the present rate of population increase, we would have only two and eight-tenths acres per person or one-fifth of an acre less than the required three acres."

This solution is offered by the pamphlet.

"Public funds devoted directly to conservation should be divided four ways:

"1. Scientific research should be expanded;

"2. We should greatly simplify and speed up the mapping procedures which would yield the data necessary for conservation plans.

"3. We need a great expansion in the staff of trained men who can help farmers;

"4. Incentive payments should be used to encourage the installation of effective conservation plans—but only insofar as such payments are necessary to induce voluntary and rapid cooperation in the conservation program.

"We cannot spread the blessings of human freedom to peoples everywhere if there are only desolation, hunger and disease all about them."

The pamphlet may be ordered from the CIO Publications Dept., 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C. The pamphlet number is 162; the price, 15c a copy, 8 for $1, 100 for $11; 1,000 for 100.

Paperworkers 'All Out' For Truman

By NAT GOLDFINGER

FULL support of Truman and Barkley and all other CIO-PAC backed candidates was given by a rising vote without dissent by 330 delegates to the first constitutional convention of the CIO Paperworkers at Elks' Hall, Buffalo, N. Y.

Delegates voted to send President Truman a telegram pledging to do all in their power for his election. The action followed a rousing address by Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin.

"It is not an accident that the unions in America find it difficult to organize," Tobin said.

"It is not by accident either that a great movement of industry has begun to low-wage areas. It is all due to the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Is this a fair law which provides five mandatory unfair labor practice charges against labor while on the other hand there is not a single one against management?" Tobin asked.

The Secretary of Labor recalled that as late as 1938 Labor Department reports showed that in some parts of the country workers were paid as low as 10¾c an hour for an 84-hour week. Tobin said that we are going back to the same conditions "except that we are denied the protection we received under the Wagner Act. We are going backward. We have now laid the groundwork for the greatest depression this country has ever seen."

ATTACKING what he termed the "Republican theory" of labor which considers a man's work as a commodity, Tobin declared that the Truman Administration "looks upon workers as human beings with inalienable rights given by God and which cannot be given by one government one day and taken away by another some other day."

"I predict that Democrats will supplant Republican Senators in West Virginia, Minnesota, Iowa, Oklahoma, and Wyoming. I know of no senatorial contest in which a Republican candidate has a chance of defeating an incumbent Democrat," Tobin said. He predicted Democratic majorities in both the House and the Senate.

CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, honorary chairman of the Paperworkers, earlier told the delegates that "if ever a third party is to succeed, it must have at its base the American trade union movement.

"A third party cannot come from a Messiah helped along by outside forces," he declared.

Haywood said the Wallace Party, along with the Dixiecrats, could be responsible for the election of another reactionary Congress.

He declared that American workers "will not accept any system of Government that is all state. The Government must be a servant of the people and organized labor stands wholeheartedly against any type of dictatorship."

THE convention re-elected by acclamation Pres. Harry D. Sayre and Secy.-Treas. Frank Grasso. Haywood, honorary chairman, and other members of the executive board, Anthony Adamo, Charles Bridgwater, Frank J. Carmichael, Robert J. Davidson, Burt J. Mason, Harry Scott and Nicholas Vrataric, were re-elected by unanimous vote.

The constitution adopted by the convention bans Communists, Nazis, Fascists and other opponents of Democratic government from holding office in the International or the locals. A resolution adopted by the convention put the Paperworkers on record as supporting the Marshall Plan and opposing the Progressive Party headed by Henry Wallace.

Other resolutions:

- Rededicated "our organization and its members to the support of our constitutional form of Government and to our democratic way of life."
- Supported striking CIO unions.
- Called for rolling back prices, a national housing program and rent control.

The convention unanimously voted support of CIO-PAC after hearing an address by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. Kroll urged the delegates to get out the vote on Nov. 2 to assure the election of a liberal Congress and Truman.

Hugh Thompson, CIO Regional Director in Buffalo, opened the convention. He was followed by Peter J. Crotty, president of the Buffalo Common Council. Msgr. John P. Boland gave the invocation. Greetings were brought to the convention by Rev. Willard Uphaus, executive secretary of the National Religion and Labor Foundation.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey presented Haywood with a CIO Anti-Discrimination Committee Award for 1948 at the convention banquet. Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steel-Workers addressed the convention.

Why Non-Union Office Girls Sing The Blues

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, in a survey of office workers' salaries in 11 cities, found that stenographers average $40.72 and that office girls' and file clerks' pay ranges from an average $27.51 in Dallas, Texas, to $38.61 in San Francisco.

All occupational categories considered—and BLS considered 20—the West outstripped the East in treatment of its office workers. San Francisco treats its girls best, with Boston lagging far behind.

But a comparison of these average salaries with union scales in the same cities shows that the union gal is faring far better than her non-union sister.

In San Francisco, women stenographers average $48.13 a week. BUT, stenographers under Guild contract on the four S. F. dailies have a first-year minimum of $51.35. After one year, these stenographers make a $55.85 minimum.

In Boston, where the stenographers average $37.31 a week, the Guild first-year minimum on the Record, American & Advertiser is $40.45. At the end of the first year this jumps to $44.90 and after three years to $54.

In San Francisco, where they are best paid, typists average $42, according to BLS. Under Guild contracts at the city's four dailies, clerk-typists make $45.80 in the first year, with the minimum jumping to $50.25 after one year.

Boston pays its clerk-typists an average $32. Guild rates on the Record, American & Advertiser begin with $32.70 and reach a top minimum of $44 after three years.

Besides San Francisco and Boston, cities studied by BLS ranked in the following order on stenographers' pay, beginning with the second highest: Oakland, Chicago, Seattle, New York, Dallas, Denver, Atlanta, Milwaukee, and Buffalo.

Guaranteed Wages Surveyed

A survey of guaranteed wage plans in the United States has been issued released by Ewan Clague, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor.

The October "Labor Information Bulletin," just released by the Labor Department, contains an article discussing the report, which is the result of an extensive study of 347 guaranteed wage plans, and a detailed analysis of 62 selected cases. These 62 cases include large as well as small plants and represent a variety of industries, both manufacturing and nonmanufacturing.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Martin Gerber, director of Region 9, Auto Workers, reports the following victories in NLRB elections:

White Metal Corp., Hoboken, N. J., 165 for UAW-CIO, 4 for no union; American Light Alloy Co., West Paterson, N. J., 34 for UAW-CIO and 31 for no union.

In an election among the maintenance employes of the University of Chicago, the CIO Public Workers were chosen as bargaining representative with 405 votes being cast for the Public Workers, 85 for AFL and 1 for no union.

Delmond Garst, CIO Regional Director in Missouri, reports that in an election held for the employes of the Palmyra Missouri Crown Shoe Co., the vote was 68 for the CIO Shoe Workers, 35 for no union. Gerald Crane was in charge of the election.

Frank J. Bender, CIO Regional Director in Maryland, reports that in a union shop election at the plant of W. D. Byron and Sons, Williamsport, Md., 97 ballots were cast for the union shop and 12 against. One hundred forty-one employes were eligible to vote. Samuel Fiore, Textile Workers' representative, was in charge.

Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization of the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, reports victories in the following union security elections: Baldt Chain & Anchor Company, Chester, Pa., 125 for union shop, and 4 against out of 135 employes eligible to vote; Ajax Metal Plant, Philadelphia, Pa., 132 for union shop, and 3 against out of 141 eligible to vote.

THE MEANING OF ELECTION

As we approach the election of 1948 it might be well to look at the first national election in 1920 following the end of World War I.

Prosperity and normalcy were the order of the day. The idealism of President Wilson and his sponsorship of the League of Nations were in disrepute. Normalcy, in the minds of people of wealth, meant lower wages, a stifling of unions made stronger during the war, but most important a return to the isolationism that was so rudely interrupted by the war. Government was already engaged in singling out labor leaders in witchhunts endangering civil liberties.

The results of the 1920 election are now history. Harding, on a platform of normalcy and rejection of the League of Nations, was elected. The United States on that November day in 1920 withdrew itself from the world but in its withdrawal could not succeed in keeping world events from its door.

The period of inflation resulted in the crash of 1929, the depression years not only here but abroad, and the rising role of dictators stemmed from the election of 1920.

Let us look at 1948 in terms of 1920. Civil liberities are again being threatened. Labor unions have already been attacked through the Taft-Hartley Act. The reactionaries dare not attack international cooperation as openly as they did in 1920 but every means possible to cut down appropriations and belittle the need of real aid to a war-torn Europe was followed in the 80th Congress. The people of America are told, let us return to the good old days.

History shows us that in 1920 it didn't work. In an age of atom bombs, flying wings and jet propelled airplanes we cannot afford to be wrong election day 1948. We must vote for CIO-PAC supported candidates.

'It Is Obvious That Taft-Hartley Is Aimed At Right Of Unions To Survive'

As the nation went to the polls this week to decide whether its future would be liberal or reactionary, the CIO Oil Workers were engaged in a bitter picket line struggle with the major oil companies of California.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray sent this statement to Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers and all CIO affiliates:

I am writing you this letter to urge that all CIO affiliates extend every possible moral and financial aid to the Oil Workers International Union in its West Coast strike. Acting for the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I am extending every possible help to this union. I urge you to do the same.

The OWIU is one of our oldest unions. It helped to found the CIO. Today it is engaged in a life and death struggle with the oil trusts on the West Coast and it needs our help.

The Oil monopoly, headed as usual by Standard Oil, is attempting to destroy the OWIU on the West Coast. That is the plain and simple issue of the dispute as it now stands. There is no question of wages or of better economic conditions involved in the California OWIU strike today. The union has reduced its wage demands from 30c an hour to 12½c, the figure which the companies originally agreed to grant. The union has agreed to arbitration but the oil monopoly has brushed to one side every offer by the union and by public agencies to settle the strike.

I am deeply concerned about developments in the West Coast oil strike. This is a logical end result of Taft-Hartleyism. This is what the signers of that notorious law had in mind—the destruction of the OWIU and every other union in the country.

The OWIU has complied with every provision of the Taft-Hartley Law. The OWIU signed the hateful affidavits required under that law. It is obvious now to the members of CIO that the Taft-Hartley Law is aimed not at this or that feature of unionism, but at unionism itself—the right of unions to survive in our free America.

The California strike, now in its seventh week has been attended by every union-busting technique known to monopoly. Damage suits totaling more than 30 million dollars have been filed against this one union in just one state. Hundreds of its most militant members face injunction action totaling in the millions of dollars, with years and years of jail sentences, if these actions are sustained in the courts.

The president of the OWIU, O. A. Knight, a vice-president of CIO, faces fines totaling $30,000 and 300 days in jail if actions filed by the oil companies are sustained by the courts.

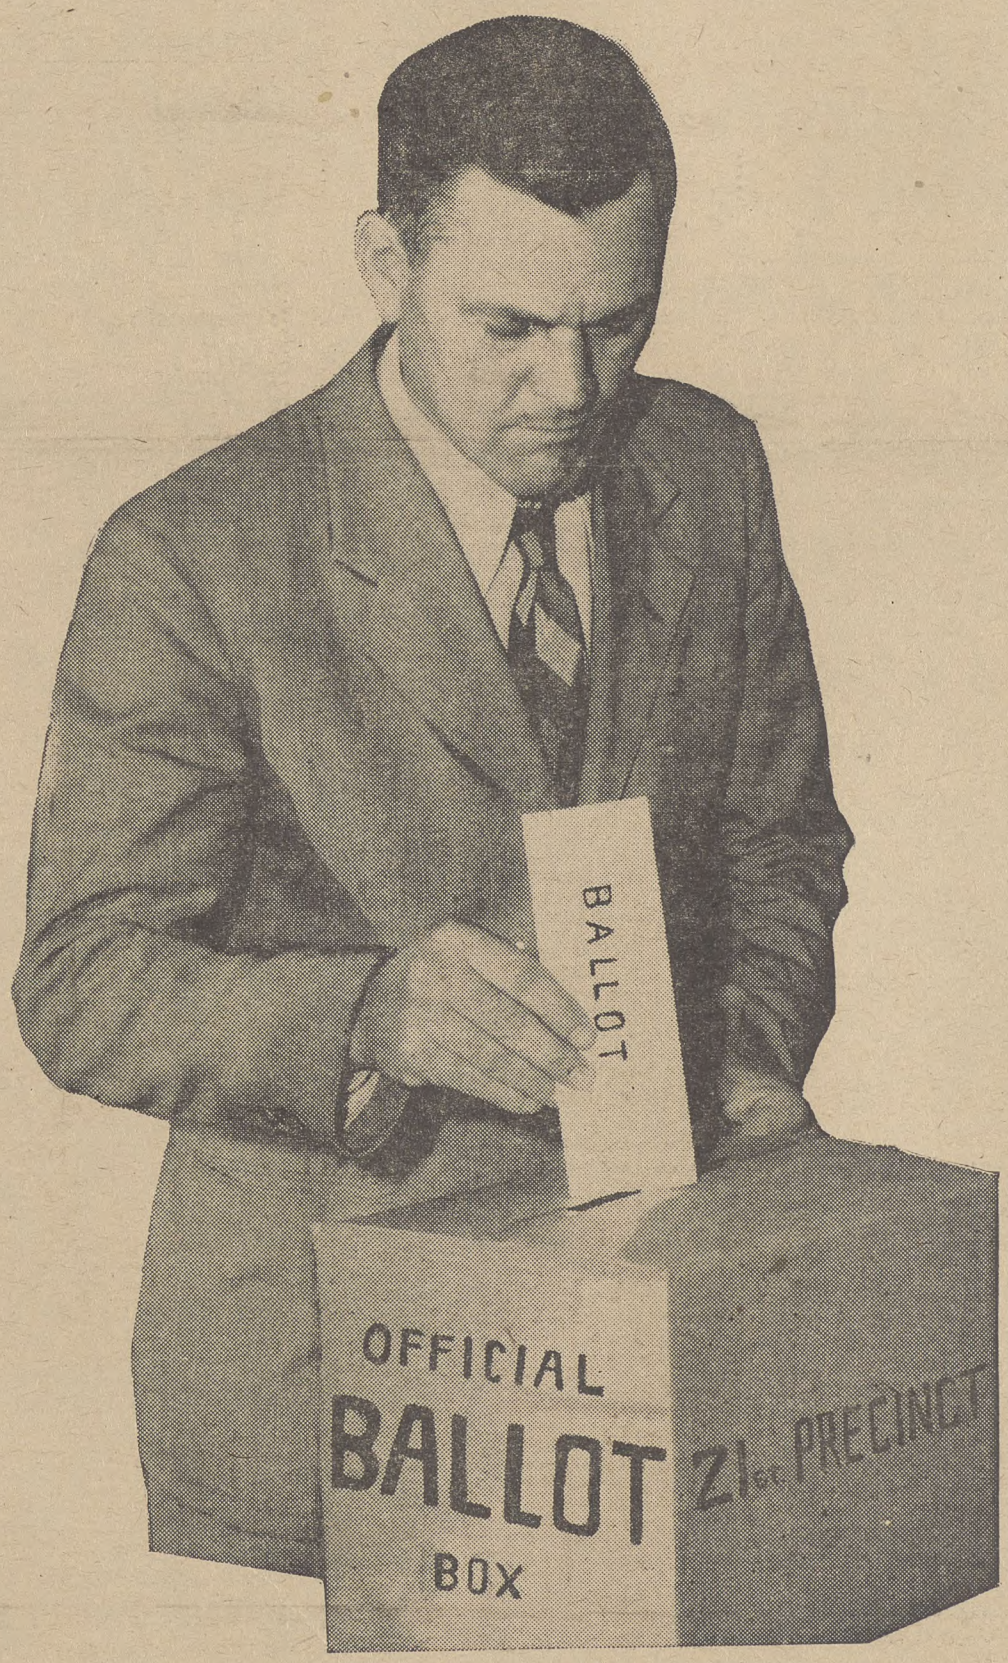
This is a challenge not only to the OWIU Union but to every international union in CIO, to every local union, to every member of CIO.

I call upon every branch of the mighty CIO to defend the OWIU. I call upon our great movement to mobilize its every resource, moral and financial, to the end that one of our oldest and strongest unions shall not be wiped out of existence on the West Coast. I urge our members to accept the challenge thrown down by Standard Oil and the oil trusts, and to give generously from their treasuries and their great reservoir of moral support.

I feel certain that with the full support of the CIO the strike can be settled on terms acceptable to the OWIU.

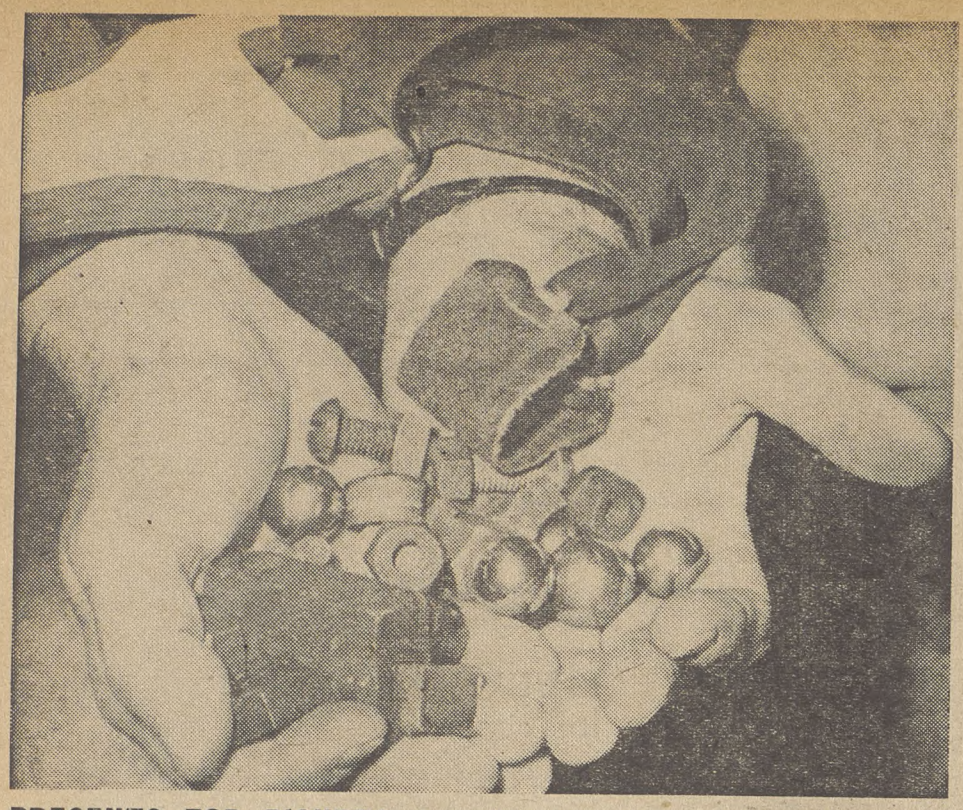
Late last week, the first of nine struck companies came to a settlement with the OWIU.

The company was Shell Chemical, which had 375 employes on strike.



A Citizen Votes

Cecil Knupp, a member of the CIO Oil Workers, is typical of the millions of Americans who flocked to the polls this week.



PRESENTS FOR PICKETS: A member of the Richmond, Cal., police department holds in his hands some of the missiles heaved at CIO Oil Workers pickets by scabs inside the Standard Refinery at Richmond, Cal. The slingshot was used to add force to some of the projectiles!

In Rome, Ga.,

Arrest 50 Strikers Averting Work Move

THE company doesn't always wait for you to commit what it considers on illegal act before getting an injunction these days. It just dashes up to the judge and gets an injunction against something it thinks you might do in the future.

In Rome, Ga., that was the experience last week of 1800 CIO Textile Workers at the Celanese rayon plant. And 50 strikers were cited for contempt of court for demonstrating their solidarity on the day the company reopened the plant and tried to get strikebreakers to man it.

The walkout began 10 weeks ago after the corporation refused to extend to its Rome employes the 15c hourly wage increase in effect at its Cumberland, Md., plant. TWUA is bargaining agent in both mills.

Since then the Rome plant has been shut tight while its management refused to meet with the union, to arbitrate or to accept proposals advanced by U. S. conciliators. Rather than conform to the rayon industry wage pattern, Celanese is insisting on adoption of the Southern cotton pattern of 8%, which is somewhat lower.

Two weeks ago the company announced it would attempt to open the plant Tuesday, Oct. 19. On Saturday, Oct. 16, TWUA Joint Board Manager Joseph Pedigo appealed over the radio to the workers not to return. He urged them to demonstrate their solidarity on the picketline.

Anticipating a mass picketline when they attempted to run strikebreakers into the plant, Celanese officials first thing Monday morning obtained an injunction limiting the number of pickets to two at each gate and forbidding such traditional picketline pastimes as boos and catcalls.

(Even the NLRB, in one of its most stringently anti-labor rulings, last week found catcalls and name-calling protected by the Bill of Rights.)

The following day the plant was reopened. Not a worker returned. Instead, employes were joining the picketline to emphasize their refusal to return until their demands were won.

There were no disturbances until police charged the line and hauled off twenty-five pickets, including Pedigo. The following day 25 more were carted off to jail.

But not one of the 1800 employes has returned to work, despite the mass arrests.

Association Accused Of Fixing Paper Prices

The nation's users of paper and paper products have been systematically gouged by the Natl. Paper Trade Assn., the Federal Trade Commission charged in a complaint against the association for having violated the FTC act.

The commission charged the association with boosting prices by getting together on prices and dominating the American market. This has long been known to unions buying mimeograph paper, for example, who have been asked the same price for a carton of paper by every company in town.

The association was given 20 days to reply to the FTC complaint.

Financial Reports Called Deceptive

Financial reports of corporations were severely criticized by Nat Weinberg, Research Director, in an address before the Public Relations Society of America at the Detroit Athletic Club.

Weinberg charged that "most published reports are an insult to the intelligence of the general public and of the employes of the organization."

He said, "The various devices used to conceal or minimize profits and to hide other crucial details are unmistakable signs of an uneasy conscience. The reports represent calculated evasion of what we consider industry's responsibility to make the basic facts of our economic life available to the American people."

Education Decisions Irk Unions

FIFTY representatives of Michigan organizations with one and a half million members—including the CIO and AFL—waited in vain an hour and a half last week to see Gov. Kim Sigler. They sought to protest the firing of Arthur Elder as director of the Workers' Education Service at the Univ. of Michigan and the alteration of the workers' education program.

The Michigan Committee on Civil Rights said that a representative made the appointment for the delegation with Sigler.

This was the latest development in the struggle for the retention of the workers' education program which provided instruction for 70,000 workers last year. The university's board of regent postponed the program a few weeks ago, an action which brought howls of protest and caused Sigler to do an about face and urge the regents to re-institue the service. The postponement was caused by General Motors, which told a Congressional Committee and Sigler that "subversive doctrine" was being taught.

The board then fired Elder and voted "continuation of an experimental program . . . as part of the general extension services of the university." After the 50 representatives failed to see Sigler, the Michigan CIO Council said:

"The decisions of the regents and the manner in which they were made are one of the most dastardly examples of General Motors' influence ever flaunted in the face of Michigan's citizenry.

"The council will not stand idly by while GM and Gov. Sigler toss academic freedom, educational standards and opportunities out the window."

Guild Slaps Council

By a two-to-one vote, members of the New York Newspaper Guild have expressed a desire to disaffiliate from the Greater New York CIO Council.

Assigned To N. Y. City

Mann Named To Act In Secession Move

MICHAEL Mann of Chicago has been named special representative in New York City to direct CIO activities in connection with the "confused retail clerks situation," Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, announced.

Mann has been serving as CIO regional director in Chicago and as Secretary of the Chicago Industrial Union Council. His assignment to New York resulted from a "secession movement" in New York locals of Wholesale and Department Store Union of America.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray said that "we are convinced that this movement is directed not only against the international union having jurisdiction in this field but also against the national policies of the CIO. It is divisive and plays into the hands of labor's common enemies."

Mann's job, Mr. Murray said, "will be to act in liaison with both a committee created by CIO unions in Greater New York and with representatives of the international union to bring back within the CIO fold those men and women who have been led out of our organization by these secessionists.

"The national CIO pledges its full support to the international union and to all those who support national CIO policy, in the best interests of those who are employed in the department store field."

EMBARK FOR U. S.: Among the first contingent of European displaced persons embarking for the U. S. from Bremerhaven, Germany is this elderly woman. A limited number of DP's is being admitted under the act passed by the Republican-dominated Congress and reluctantly signed by President Truman in lieu of a better bill. CIO President Murray criticized the act for discriminating against Catholic and Jewish immigrants.

Pin Illegal Acts On Internationals

Mass Picketing Is Banned Under T-H, NLRB Rules

THE five-man Natl. Labor Relations Board, in its first decision on strike activities under Taft-Hartley, has slugged unions with another swift uppercut to the jaw.

Ruling on a case involving the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen and the Sunset Line & Twine Co., in Petaluma, Calif., the Board declared mass picketing illegal and found not only the local, but the international union as well, responsible for "illegal" strike activities.

The mass picketing, said the Board, "patently involved restraint and coercion of employes attempting to go to work. On this the Board members were unanimous. They split three-to-two, however, on whether the international, too, was liable.

The minority held that clear proof of agency—that is, proof that the individuals acted as agents of the international union—was lacking. The majority were unimpressed by this argument. In fact, the Board listed three principles it said it will follow hereafter in determining responsibility. One serves notice that a labor union "may be responsible for the act of its agent within the scope of the agent's general authority, even though the (union) may have specifically forbidden the act in question."

BY DECIDING in the company's favor, the Board overruled the earlier findings of an NLRB trial examiner who, after a hearing at the scene of the dispute, found in favor of the union.

The decision, he said, "completely exposes the claims of the Republican supporters of the T-H Act that it is a mild law. The decision also makes it clear that the Labor Board is determined to enforce this anti-labor law in as harsh a manner as possible."

The CIO counsel charged that the ruling elevates what the Trial Examiner described as a "petty annoyance" to the level of a federal offense. Outlawing of peaceful mass picketing, he continued, vindicates the CIO's early warning that the law's "unions restraint or coercion" provision would be used as a dragnet for anti-labor purposes.

GOLDBERG pointed out that the Trial Examiner found the strike was caused solely by the employer's "misconduct" in terminating a seven-year period of peaceful labor relations. The company cancelled the contract after passage of the T-H Act.

"The Board's decision in this case contrasts sharply with its growing tenderness in cases in which employers are charged with unfair labor practices," he charged. "In case after case, the Labor Board has justified the most extreme forms of employer restraint and coercion, either on the ground that they are protected by free speech or on the ground that they may not be attributed to the employer.

"This case reflects a partisan interpretation of a partisan act. It should bring home to the American people the imperative need for its immediate repeal."

CIO Fears Hoover Cutting Vital Depts.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey has called upon former President Herbert Hoover, chairman of the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, to permit CIO representatives to see the Commission's preliminary reports on all matters "of special importance to the unions" and to discuss them with the Commission.

Carey said he was "especially concerned by reports that essential services of the Department of Labor and the Social Security Administration are going to be eliminated."

The CIO official said labor had been consulted by only two or three of the Commission's 20 "task forces."

"Your commission's reports cannot possibly be impartial as long as you have heard only the views of and given representation on your 'task forces' only to representatives of one organized segment of American life—big business," Carey wrote.

PARTIAL text of the letter to Hoover:

"You will recall that in June I protested the onesided nature of the 'task forces' appointed by your commission and urged the addition of persons capable of presenting the point of view of workers and farmers, since officers of many giant corporations were already serving. I likewise deplored giving governmental funds to the Brookings Institution for a study of public welfare, including social security, when that organization has already published a report which advocates substitution of relief on a needs basis for social insurance programs.

"In reply you justified the appointments but indicated that you would be willing to receive constructive suggestions. Obviously such suggestions can not be made effectively without knowing what proposals for reorganization are under consideration.

"I understand that the 'task forces' have now completed their reports and so undoubtedly draft recommendations are being or will shortly be prepared for your consideration. I am therefore now requesting on behalf of the CIO that we be permitted to see the draft recommendations which deal with matters of special importance to the unions and that we be permitted to discuss them with the Commission at one of its sessions.

"WE are especially concerned by reports that essential services of the Department of Labor and the Social Security Administration are going to be eliminated. But these are not the only aspects which interest us.

"Does your commission expect working people to have confidence in your recommendations when not one representative of the CIO, the AFL, or the railroad unions is included in the commission or the 'task forces' and when our opinion has been officially requested only by two or three of over twenty 'task forces'?

"If in any part of the world communism threatens to become prevalent, the CIO and the AFL are asked to assist in averting this result and have cooperated effectively. But the United States at home has not reached the stage of permitting confidence to grow among workers that the work of important commissions reflects their needs"

Convention Call Issued

CIO Conclave To Hear Tobin and Morse

SPEAKERS at the 10th convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at Portland, beginning Nov. 22, will include Justice William O. Douglas of the U. S. Supreme Court, Exec. Secy. Walter White of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Sen. Wayne Morse, liberal Republican of Oregon, and Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin.

Other speakers will include Catholic Archbishop Edward D. Howard, Methodist Bishop Gerald Kennedy and the Rev. Lee O. Stone, all of Portland, and Portland Mayor-elect Dorothy McCullough Lee. Other speakers will be announced later.

Justice Douglas

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Secy-Treas. James B. Carey have issued the official call for the convention.

The convention, which will be held in Portland's Masonic Temple, will be preceded by a meeting of the CIO Executive Board in Portland Wednesday, Nov. 17.

White

The call stated:

"We have met and will continue to meet these responsibilities with the courage born of faith in our democratic form of government, faith in our way of life, and faith in the American people.

"The CIO has dedicated itself to a program designed to benefit each individual in our society, regardless of race, creed, or color. The security of our nation resides in the security of our individual citizens. A secure people is a strong people, free from the fear of oppression, of want, and of fear itself.

Sen. Morse

"Our democracy is an ever-expanding force in the lives of our people. To its widening influence, the people look for protection in the exercise of their God-given rights in all of their activities.

"They look to our way of life for the establishment of policies that will guarantee every willing and able worker the opportunity to earn an equitable and reasonable annual wage, for an economic system that will insure the day-by-day security of the worker and his family, with educational opportunities for all and the healthful well-being of all. It is in these things that the welfare of our nation and of workers throughout the world rests.

Secy. Tobin

"These are the objectives of the CIO and toward them, we will continue to strive."

UE Sues GE, Atomic Unit

THE CIO Electrical Workers has filed suit in the Federal District Court in Washington, D. C., against the General Electric Co. and the five members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The suit arises from the Commission's Sept. 27 order prohibiting GE from bargaining with the union at its atomic laboratory in Schenectady, N. Y. UE is asking an injunction against the blacklisting of the union in atomic plants and $1 million damages.

AEC Chairman David E. Lilienthal's order noted that the union's officials have not signed Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavits, and he later served notice that the ban would be extended to other atomic plants unless the affidavits were signed.

Since Government agencies cannot be sued without their consent, complaint names as defendants AEC members Lilienthal, Lewis F. Strauss, William W. Waymack, Robert F. Bacher and Sumner T. Pike.

THE union charges that the action of the Commission and GE "results and threatens to continue to result in the illegal deprivation to the plaintiffs of their contract, rights, properties, privileges and immunities, guaranteed to them and secured to them by the Constitution of the USA."

'JENNY' SLIPS UP: Known to the police under several aliases, Slaughterhouse Jenny—as she is known to packinghouse workers—got her signals crossed up as she attempted to help Armour & Co. make its firing of 24 members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers stick. The arbitrator threw out her testimony and reinstated the workers.

NOW WE'RE FINDING OUT!

We might seriously consider laying off the Taft-Hartley Act for a week or so if the NLRB would do likewise.

But the boys over at NLRB have been as busy as little beavers, designing union-busting weapons for employers out of material supplied under T-H.

Early in the game, the Board's legal high mogul, Robert N. Denham, illustrated he's one of those fellows who doesn't believe in permitting the injunctive weapon to lie around unused.

But use of the injunction against unions is becoming an old story—so let's look at some of the newer anti-union gadgets produced by NLRB.

There's that little ruling which denies an economic striker the right to vote in a representation election at the plant against which he's striking.

You and your buddies hit the bricks as a last resort and keep pounding them for some time. The boss brings in strike-breakers, puts them to work. Soon he calls for and obtains an election, but you can't vote. The strike-breakers can.

Guys who break strikes don't vote in favor of unions. So you and your buddies are out on your ears!

And it's all nice and legal under T-H.

BAN PLACED ON MASS PICKETING

Now, if you're looking for a working companion for the ruling cited above you can find it in the mass picketing ban imposed by NLRB under the guise of protecting the "right to work" of those unwilling to honor picket lines.

It's really a nifty, insofar as the boss is concerned. It can be used to bring into the plant those strike-breakers who will vote your local union out of existence.

A large number of striking workers, although they do not engage in violence or make threats of violence, cannot legally picket a plant because to do so might influence scabs and strike-breakers from taking over the strikers' jobs.

But, wait a minute! Suppose there is violence?

NLRB has taken care of that, too, in a new ruling. It has held that an international union may be held liable—along with the local union on strike—for unfair labor practice charges if there is picket line violence.

And it doesn't alter the case if the pickets are provoked into violence by a management group which wants to obtain a strike-breaking injunction.

T-H encourages acts which provoke violence and then penalizes unions when violence occurs.

IT'S BEGINNING TO CUT DEEPLY

The Taft-Hartley Act, which will not be fully operative until after the NLRB quits making new rulings, has begun to hit the unions where it hurts, and there's good reason to believe the worst is yet to come.

Gradually, step by step, the NLRB is throwing its weight behind management in management-labor relations. It is compelled to do so by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Its rulings use terms designed to make the public believe it is administering an impartial management-labor relations act—terms like "right to work" and preventions of "picket-line violence."

But those who get batted over the head with the new T-H clubs have no illusions about them.

Backward Or Forward?

Choice At Polls Is Between GOP Old Dealism And Liberal New Dealism

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THOSE were tough days—when men and women swallowed what was left of their pride and went on relief to keep from starving.

You remember how it was.

The era of "everlasting prosperity" came to an abrupt end. Instead of two cars for every garage there were two workers for nearly every job.

Then we witnessed the disgraceful spectacle of widespread want in the midst of plenty.

And with the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932 came the end of one trend and the beginning of another.

ONE of FDR's first major projects was to put the government into business of "pump priming."

This was nothing more than an effort to restore the consumer purchasing power which began drying up in the late '20's when wages and profits got badly out of balance.

As the new trend developed, more and more emphasis was placed on providing a better way of life for the so-called "common man" and placing curbs on the abuses and bad practices of the rich and powerful.

As a result of this trend, Congress enacted the Wagner Act, designed to encourage trade unionism and firmly establish collective bargaining as an important part of the American way of life.

A large portion of the nation's business and industrial leaders fought enactment of the Wagner Act and then sought to have it declared unconstitutional.

Many of them continued to fight it throughout the years, never accepting the idea that collective bargaining was here to stay.

It became apparent during the late days of the war that the fight against unions had merely been dormant during the heat of the world conflict—that it was not dead.

Following the defeat of Germany and Japan a new trend began—and this trend was back toward conditions as they existed just before the great depression.

THE men who guide the destinies of our giant corporations and establish policy for the NAM wanted to get back in the saddle and run the show again.

They played their cards well. They took full advantage of the confusion and discontent that followed the war.

They were responsible for the premature end of price control—and when OPA died we were on the road to inflation.

They slipped the labor movement a "Mickey Finn"—the Taft-Hartley Act.

They prevented low-priced government housing.

They began moving toward destruction of the TVA as a public power agency.

They were able to do this because the Republicans controlled Congress and Big Business called the turn for the Republicans.

SO, here we are today on the eve of another election—an election which can reverse or intensify the recent trend.

Either way it goes, the public should be made aware of what to expect.

If the Republicans win, an effort will be made to kill what remains of the New Deal—and this means an attempt to kill the New Deal concept that human rights must not play second fiddle to property rights.

If Democratic liberals win, an effort will be made to rewrite the miserable record of the Awful 80th Congress, take the government from under the domination of Big Business and return it to the bulk of the people.

This is the week when the choice is made.

No person who understands the issues—and the trends—will have any trouble deciding how to mark his ballot.

Little Admits Trusts Permit Speculation

PRES. Royal Little of Textron, Inc., whose announced intention of closing his Nashua, N. H., mills and thereby throwing 3500 persons out of work promted a Senate subcommittee investigation of his affairs, had "his day in court" last week.

He told the subcommittee headed by Sen. Charles W. Tobey, Jr., (R., N. H.) that the charges made by CIO Textile Workers' Pres. Emil Rieve were false. Rieve had said that Little's corporation was a "racket" using charitable trust funds for "financial manipulation." Little testified:

"Mr. Rieve has endeavored to create the impression that I personally have profited at the expense of Textron by these transactions. I am formally requesting this committee to investigate my personal financial situation and the financial situation of members of my family."

At another time Tobey said that he would call to the Congress' attention to the fact that loopholes in the income tax laws allowed charitable funds such as Little set up to escape income tax.

FOLLOWING the hearing Rieve said:

"Actually Mr. Little admits that the primary purpose of the trust funds has been to provide a source of venture capital for his own operations.

"This venture capital has enabled him to build a corporate pyramid with himself perched on the apex. This was good business for Mr. Little. I do not see how it can be called charity.

Assurance that one of the Nashua mills—the one making sheeting and employing 1000 persons—would continue to operate came with the announcement that a group of Nashua citizens—borrowing a leaf from Little's book—had set up a trust fund.

This fund was used to buy the two Nashua mills from Little, who signed a ten-year lease for the one plant.

Pay Porto Rico Workers 40c, Rieve Urges

Pres. Emil Rieve, of the CIO Textile Workers has asked that the legal minimum wage for textile workers in Porto Rico be raised from 25c to 40c an hour.

Rieve's request was embodied in a letter to William R. McComb, director of the Dept. of Labor wage and hour division. Under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the department can raise the minimum wage to 40 cents by administrative action, on recommendation of an advisory committee.

Rieve pointed out that "several American textile mills" are being established in Porto Rico.

Among the mills planning Porto Rican operations is Textron, Inc., TWUA said. A Senate committee is conducting an investigation of this firm at TWUA's request. Recent liquidations of Textron mills in New England have destroyed nearly 10,000 jobs.

He Wanted To Be A Military Man, But --

PERHAPS it's unfair to put your finger on some minor flaw in a man's make-up, point it out and say, "This changed the course of history."

But sometimes the evidence is so convincing that you can't resist the temptation.

Take the case of a Mid-Western lad who wanted to become a soldier—not just an ordinary soldier but a "professional."

Had he possessed 20-20 vision the world might have known him as a great military leader.

Or it might not have known him at all.

But let's start the story at the beginning.

THE lad who wanted to become a soldier was born in a small town back before the turn of the century.

A few years later he moved with his family to another small town, where he graduated from high school and worked on a farm.

He, like many other youngsters of his time, felt that he would be well along the road to success if he could attend the U. S. Military Academy.

He attempted to obtain an appointment to West Point but was rejected because of inferior eyesight.

Then he did what he believed the next-best thing; he joined the National Guard.

A DOZEN or more years passed and our Guardsmen landed in France with the American Expeditionary Force of World War I.

He did his bit as an officer, but the war ended without history recording him as a great hero or as a military genius.

He was regarded as merely one of the many good soldiers who helped the Allies achieve victory.

Returning to this country, he and a war buddy went into business, but their new enterprise—like many others—folded up during the depression of 1921.

Our war veteran a short time later accepted a minor political job and then—although nearly 40 years old—he enrolled in law school.

AFTER studying law for two years, the lad who had wanted to be a professional soldier, became a judge.

Twelve years later he packed up his belongings and his family and headed for Washington.

Another seven years passed and the nation had headed into another war before Washington was more than casually aware of his presence.

Then, not overnight but within a short time, his name became almost a household word throughout the country.

The lad with the inferior eyesight had become an ace investigator!

SOME folks say he dashed in where angels feared to tread, but he got results—and results counted in those tense days.

Even his most severe critics admit he saved the nation billions of dollars—dollars that would have been squandered had not it been for his dogged determination.

This endeared him to the public although it made him powerful enemies.

Then, rather unexpectedly, he changed jobs.

WORLD WAR II was drawing to a close when the U. S. and her allies received a great shock.

Franklin D. Roosevelt died unexpectedly!

Word of his death reached the man who had been rejected by the U. S. Military Academy—and he moved again.

He moved into the White House—as President of the U. S.

Glass Workers Example In Industrial Peace Study

BEHIND the strike news which is played up by press and radio lies a seldom-told story of great interest. It's the story of the efforts of unions and employers to push their way through the hates and misunderstandings of the past to a new era of peaceful relations based on mutual respect.

The story concerns the search for the "Causes of Industrial Peace under Collective Bargaining," a study being conducted by a committe of the Natl. Planning Association, non-profit, non-political organization set up in 1934 by a group of leaders in business, labor, agriculture and the professions.

Clinton S. Golden, adviser of labor policy for the Economic Cooperation Administration, and former vice-president of the CIO Steelworkers union, is chairman of the committee.

The NPA has just issued the second in a series of 15 scheduled case studies aimed to show examples of the progress being made toward industrial peace in mass production industries. This report deals with the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. and the CIO's Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers which has bargaining rights covering some 7,500 workers employed in eight LOF plants—four in Toledo, Ohio; one in Charleston, W. Va., two in Ottawa, Ill., and one in Shreveport, La.

An examination of the relationship between LOF and the CIO Glass Workers since industry-wide bargaining with "Big Glass" first began in 1936 indicates, "that constructive industrial peace can be achieved in American business when companies and unions cooperate intelligently where their interests are in common and compromise intelligently where their interests are in conflict," states the report.

IT finds that "realism and practicality on both sides," is the most striking and most helpful feature of the bargaining relationship at LOF with both management and union devoting themselves "largely to solving concrete problems rather than to defining abstract principles."

One of the basic premises of the report is "that the lack of strikes is not the only criterion of good industrial relations, nor is their occasional occurrence an absolute proof that relations are bad."

Spectacular stoppages now and then, as a matter of fact, have fewer unfavorable consequences, maintains the report, than "the steady impairment and deterioration of day-to-day production caused by poor operating relationships."

SOME of the major features of LOF-union relationship credited in the report with promoting industrial peace are:

- Management believes in the principles and practice of true collective bargaining.
- The union fully accepts private ownership and operation of the industry.
- There is a secure, strong, responsible and highly democratic union. Union membership is a condition of employment.
- Grievances are settled promptly, in the local plant whenever possible. There is flexibility and informality within the procedure.
- The company stays out of the union's internal affairs, and does not try to alienate the workers' allegiance and loyalty to the union.
- Plant managers and local union officials are given both responsibility and authority.
- Day-to-day bargaining at the local plants, rather than at the company-international union level, is encouraged by both the union and the company.
- The company considers the union an asset to management and treats it as such.

Although the NPA case study of Libbey-Owens-Ford does not claim to have discovered "a cure-all for conflict," it expressed the opinion that many of the policies and procedures followed "could be profitably applied to the development of good industrial relations in various other industries and areas."

The on-the-spot investigation at LOF and preparation of NPA's second case study were the responsibility of Dr. Frederick H. Harbison of the University of Chicago and a member of the NPA committee. He was assisted by King Carr of Chicago University's Industrial Relations Center.

How Much Peace?

"Every seven or eight years since 1876 the Government of the United States, through presidentially appointed commissions, has been making inquiries into the causes of industrial conflict and strife," said Clinton S. Golden at a meeting of the National Planning Association in 1946. Plans for a study of industrial peace were discussed.

"In my opinion, the time has come when, instead of looking into the causes of conflict that we know and hear so much about, we ought to try to discover how much peace there is and what makes peace."

It Certainly Was A Campaign!

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

I HAVE covered this election campaign in at least 15 key states.

I traveled 1125 miles through Indiana. I was a tired but highly impressed man after a whirlwind Minnesota tour with Hubert Humphrey.

I saw PAC baby sitters and volunteer nurses and a lot of other pretty block-workers in West Virginia. I saw the usual indications of GOP skullduggery in Pennsylvania, where I vote.

I saw six political candidates candidly and clearly state their views to CIO members in New Jersey, where I happened to have been born. I saw and talked to scores in Massachusetts, where an anti-labor referendum was up.

I discovered in Illinois why Paul Douglas was a war hero at an age when most men would have been contented to stay home. I saw Auto Workers amazing old line politicians by their canny footwork in Michigan.

In Ohio I saw how proportional representation has worked wonders, with labor's aid, in Cincinnati; I saw why Tom Burke was the logical man to run for Congress in the Toledo District.

I saw how farmers and labor, opposed to certain candidates for different reasons, united in Iowa to clean up several situations. I talked with the man on the street in Nebraska.

In New York, I saw evidence that many who originally backed Wallace had changed their minds toward the end.

Tommy, Boy

From The St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

The Chicago Daily News carries a short "special delivery letter" on its editorial page every day. Signed by Dad Dearborn, these letters are addressed to prominent persons. Pointing to Gov. Dewey's Chicago address, today's letter from Dad Dearborn reads:

GOV. THOMAS E. DEWEY
Chicago.
Dear Tom:

Some of the politicians on the platform with you tonight must be glad you're here as head of the ticket and not as a prosecutor.

In Maryland I saw an active PAC trying to free the Free State.

In Virginia, I noted with interest a strong upsurge of Republican strength in revolt against the Byrd machine.

And in Washington, D. C., that voteless city, I saw streams of people who have state residences pouring into absentee voters' headquarters to have their ballots notarized.

I suppose all that makes me some kind of an expert.

Well, let's concede I am an expert. But this expert is in an odd position. He's writing his story just before election for a paper that won't reach most of its readers until after that election.

What a place for an expert! But, a Riordan was never one to miss a chance to be an expert.

So, I predict that this election will have an important effect on the future of America.

There. Just like Dewey would say it!

THE CIO Political Action Committee is also in Washington, D. C.

In a little modest office at 728 17th St., N.W., CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll directs its many activities. (He casts his absentee ballot in Cincinnati.)

When this year's campaign began to get up steam, there were gleeful predictions from Wallaceites and Republicans that PAC had come apart at the seams, that there just wasn't any PAC.

But, Kroll knew better. So, last week, he called a press conference and let more than 30 reporters in on things.

This is the news Kroll made:

• There are 443 active PAC units in states and cities.

• More than 80,000 PAC workers were scheduled to toil full time on Election Day. Thousands of others, part-timers, were to assist.

The 80,000 faced a tough day. They were to serve as transportation corps drivers, as sound truck drivers and operators—and as speakers, too—as house-to-house canvassers, as distributors of handbills and other literature, as handers-out of sample ballots, as telephone brigades, and even as baby sitters.

• The work of PACsters won't be haphazard. They know that they are up against a cynical, well-oiled Dewey machine. So, (they've been trained to fight hard, but clean.)

They have their eye on that Dewey machine. In Pennsylvania, where the Republican Party learned its lessons well from the Vares and the Penroses, PAC asked the FBI to watch the election in Harrisburg, the state capital. There, PAC workers have already been intimidated by city detectives. Upon arrival at PAC meetings, they found a cordon of detectives—"plain clothes dicks"—lined up at the door. The sleuths forced PAC workers to be searched.

And, PAC Dir. George Medrick says he has evidence that an old Pennsylvania Republican trick — lever-pulling — was planned by the desperate GOP machine.

Lever-pulling, which is done on voting machines, takes two forms. One is for the traditional "long-Legged man" to stand on a stool back of the machine. He reaches over and gives illegal assistance to voters, particularly "drones"—who are do-nothings on city and state payrolls. The other form of lever-pulling is to ring up about 1000 or so votes for the GOP before the first voter casts his ballot.

How is the latter done? The GOP controls the polling officials. It often appoints Democrats or Wallactites who have no objections to turning the country over to Dewey and Joe Grundy.

PAC was keeping a close watch for possible fraud elsewhere, too. In Memphis, for instance, no one would be surprised at irregularities in Boss Crump's bailiwick. The Boss, you know, supported Strom Thurmond, the Henry Wallace with the you-all accent.

KROLL also revealed that since July 12 more than 10,000,000 pieces of literature have been distributed from his office. Untold millions of additional pieces of literature came from local PAC sources. More than 800 radio shows were put on over radio stations in local areas. Two network broadcasts were sponsored. Hundreds of speaking engagements were filled by PAC and CIO officials. Thousands of extra copies of the CIO News were distributed.

For example, the CIO Auto Workers, using funds from voluntary PAC collections, handed out so many pieces of literature prepared by UAW-PAC, that no one in the Detroit office was able to keep a tally.

THIS has been a unique campaign in many ways.

Henry Wallace, denied the support of any appreciable segment of labor, was the most rapidly declining "major" candidate ever to run for the Presidency.

His Don Quixote campaign grew more ridiculous as the final days wore on.

Even Joe Stalin crossed him up. Last week, Henry came up with a daisy. He declared that his candidacy had ended the "cold war" between Russia and the democracies.

Two days later, Joe kicked Henry in the pants by crying out that the democracies were plotting to draw him into another war. (Henry, why can't you keep that left foot out of your mouth?)

Wallace, venting his hurt pride on Truman because FDR preferred Harry to Henry as a running mate in 1944, got himself into the campaign bright—well early, anyway. Last December, the Progressive Citizens of America dutifully called on him to run for President as the "labor and peace" candidate. Not a single key labor leader was consulted. But, there it was.

Asked why he had not talked in advance to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Wallace blundered: "Well, he's a busy man."

Wallace immediately accepted the PCA draft—if you'll pardon the use of that word, Henry. Idaho's renegade Democrat, Sen. Glen Hearst Taylor, sang "me, too" and the farce was on.

The Wallaceites held a PCA gathering in Chicago. Wallace and Taylor were nominated. They held another songfest in Philadelphia — attended mostly by youths too young to vote, but who certainly had lusty singing voices.

A rally was held at the big league ball park. Vito Marcantonio screamed out a speech in which he got so wrought up near the end that even the Daily Worker correspondents couldn't understand a single word he said.

Next, Taylor made an acceptance speech in which he gave the real keynote of the Wallace campaign by singing "I'll Love You in December as I Loved You in May," accompanied by Miz Taylor, his brother, and one of his kids.

So, Henry and Glen started off around the country, losing votes by the thousands at every stop. Wallace toured the South, where unthinking Dixiecrats egged and tomatoed him. Even that didn't win any sympathy votes for HAW and GHT. The people were having none of that stuff.

It's amazing that Wallace was able to travel so far, because he spent most of his time with his foot in his mouth.

There were two classics. One was when reporters asked him how he could continue to defend Soviet foreign policy in light of the apparent suicide of Czecho-Slovakia's Jan Masaryk. Wallace brushed aside the question, muttering "maybe he had cancer."

The other classic came during the time when the Progs pulled out a number of Congressional candidates who were running against liberal nominees. Wallace publicly rebuked his campaign manager, Beaney Baldwin, for daring to suggest such a thing.

Near the end of the campaign, Wallace grew bitterer and bitterer, stooping to attack Mu labor leaders.

It is the fact that few people are seen on the streets wearing campaign buttons. In other Presidential years, people vied with each other to wear buttons, but not this time.

Politicians are unable to explain it, except that among Democrats the tendency was to believe that the absence of FDR might be the explanation. One Republican ward leader said: "Huh, Dewey's so unpalatable, even if we do have to vote for him, that people don't want to admit publicly they're for him."

Also, a lot of people had their lips buttoned up. They just weren't talking about whom they would vote for. A lot were on the fence, too.

Dewey didn't even hold his nose as he urged the good voters of Minnesota to return Sen. The Marshall Plan is so popular in Minnesota that arch-isolationist Rep. Harold Knudsen (R.) had to tell an audience there that his vote against the Marshall Plan was a mistake.

Dewey departed from sweetness and light only twice—when he indorsed Taft-Hartley and when he called a locomotive engineer a "lunatic."

All around Dewey hovered the Hoovers, the Grundys, the Sewell Averys, the duPonts, the oil interest, the NAM.

THEN along came the Dixiecrats. There's a mob for you, chum. The Dixiecrats, sipping mint juleps and talking about the days before the war—the War Between the States, suh—launched into as vicious a campaign as you've ever seen.

Unlike Dewey, they made it abundantly clear what they stood for. They were the stooges of the oil companies, they were on the ballot solely to beat Truman, they wanted none of Truman's civil rights.

Pardon me if I hold my nose.

Truman started the campaign admittedly behind. Possibly very far behind. The defections of the Wallaceites were known too well. The liberal element of the Democratic Party tried to get Gen. Ike Eisenhower to run in Truman's stead. Ike said no. So, Truman was renominated against token opposition of some Southern delegates.

Then, Truman swept the convention off its feet. In a fighting ad lib acceptance, he tore the house apart.

And, he continued that throughout the campaign. In virtually every corner of the land, he hammered at the 80th Congress. He fought for relief from inflation, he pledged a resurgence of the New Deal, he fought the good fight for the people.

In fact, he far more than satisfied the hopes of the CIO Executive Board, which indorsed him in August.

Come, Come Boys!

Last week, he received a letter from the New York City Republicans, asking for a contribution to the Dewey campaign!

Strictly Political

THIS and that and here and there in political action circles:

"STEAL": CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther took to the air to accuse the GOP of "attempting the most gigantic steal ever proposed in this country."

He said the Reps. "officially and frankly" propose:

1. To turn over more than $39 billions in tideland oil resources "through the states to private corporations, with no regard for national security."

2. "To throw away the successful example of TVA" and turn over public power to private utilities.

3. To rob the American people of its investment in atomic energy and turn it over to private business.

LITERARY: Twenty-seven well-known writers announced for Truman because his "services to democracy entitle him to the support of every liberal."

TRAVELER TOBIN: Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin (third from left) was the most active Cabinet member who campaigned for Truman. Here he is at Kansas City, Kan., where he addressed a PAC rally, which was one of the largest political demonstrations ever held in Kansas City. While Kansas was considered easily Republican, labor's vote in such cities as Kansas City was expected to make local gains. With Tobin are H. J. Yount, secretary-treasurer of the State CIO; Willard Murphy, president of the State Council, and Ralph Baker, director of District 4, CIO Packinghouse Workers. Votegetting was their business all this fall.

WFTU Vice-Pres. Rosenblum:

Western Europeans Fear War

THERE is expressed fear of war for the first time among the peoples of Europe, a possibility which was regarded as unthinkable on his previous visits, according to Frank Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and vice-president of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

The union leader—who has just returned from a WFTU executive board meeting in Paris—said that the peoples of Western Europe would prove to be questionable allies in the event of war because both their substance and their spirit have been destroyed.

Rosenblum

"They are fatalistic in their approach to the question of war," Rosenblum declared. "They fear it, and there is no fight in them. They are accepting the proposition that they will be the first victims in the event of a conflagration."

EUROPE, the Amalgamated official said, is now depending on the United States to furnish the military establishment, just as it is now the mainstay of economic rehabilitation in the West.

The commutation of the sentences of many Nazi criminals, including Ilse Koch, who made lampshades from the skin of slain prisoners at Buchenwald, has created a wave of resentment and indignation in Europe and has done "incalculable harm" to American prestige, he said.

He said that ECA has undoubtedly helped the economies of France and Italy, this type of aid accounting for at least 10% of Italy's national income. But prices continue to be high in both countries, he said, and account for the continual labor disturbances.

Rosenblum said that Communist strength continues in these countries. The failure of the French and Italian governments to bring down the cost of living injured the fortunes of the non-Communist elements in the trade-unions.

HE sharply criticised the insistence in certain Government quarters that the conflict in Europe is between communism and fascism and "thus give no active aid and encouragement to the broad middle ground, the democratic center, which is the best foil against both extremes."

In this connection, he said that the recent statement in regard to the DeGaulle movement by Paul Hoffman, ECA head, did both America and the European democratic forces a distinct disservice.

In certain French quarters, he said, the feeling is prevalent that should DeGaulle seize or come to power, it will likely result in civil war.

THE Amalgamated official said that the WFTU executive bureau reached a stalemate at its meeting in Paris from Sept. 17 to 21. The Marshall plan issue, to which the Soviet trade union delegation had objected at previous meetings, was never once raised, he said.

The two principal items on the agenda were the international trade secretariat and the development of the German trade union movement.

The executive bureau meeting was attended also by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Michael Ross, director of the CIO international dept. and Elmer Cope, CIO representative in Europe. The next regular meeting of the WFTU executive bureau is scheduled in three months.

BERLIN STREET SCENE: After Communists seized Berlin City Hall several week ago, a crowd milled around this Soviet jeep which had ventured into the British sector. Although tempers may flare at times like this, Secy-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers who just returned from attending a session of the executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions at Paris, said that the people of Western Europe cannot be depended upon to fight effectively if war should come.

A FIRST: Secretary of State Marshall (r.), accompanied by CIO Newspaper Guild Pres. Harry Martin, was photographed on his way to address the democratic trade union leaders of 12 Marshall Plan countries. Martin, who is labor adviser to Ambassador W. Averell Harriman, ECA chief in Europe, arranged the event, the first time an American Secretary of State has ever spoken before European labor. Marshall said the help of the unions is needed to assure ERP's success.

U. S. Seen Aiding Liberty in Germany

General Counsel Arthur Garfield Hays of the American Civil Liberties Union said, upon his return from a seven-week tour of the American zone of Germany, that the Russians' totalitarian rule in Germany had convinced Germans that democracy was the better form of government.

Hays, ACLU Director Roger Baldwin, still in Germany, and Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review of Literature, investigated the progress made toward the development of civil liberties.

Hays said that the impetus toward establishment of civil liberties is not coming from the Germans but from the United States. He added that the Germans are acquiescent and that those who believe in freedom are more fearful of the German state government than of the Americans.

Hays said that he, Cousins and Baldwin held a series of meetings in Frankfurt, Augsburg, Munich, Nuremberg and other cities where they were free to address Germans, urging them to fight for their civil liberties.

"The Germans were amazed that they should be encouraged to fight for the individual rights of man," he said. "It is clear that before long present controls by a licensing system over speech, press, radio, movies and political organizations will be relinquished by our Government."

Dixiecrats Run on 'Oil' --Ala. PAC

"CIVIL rights is not the issue motivating the Dixiecrats. The issues are oilmen's money and what's best for the corporations. The issues are the oppression of labor, cheap wages, unlimited profits."

Thus did the Alabama State CIO Political Action Committee rip into the Dixiecrats in a six-page, single-spaced, well-documented statement.

Adopted at the annual PAC conference in Birmingham, the document assailed the Dixiecrats as "back-door" Republicans, and called on Gov. Folsom to bring suit to force Alabama's 11 Democratic elector nominees, running under Alabama's Democratic Party emblem, to vote for the regular party nominee for president. Full support of the CIO would be given such a suit.

In linking the oil interests to the Dixiecrats, the 321 PAC delegates pointed out that the leading spokesman for the Alabama States Righters in Gessner T. McCorvey, counsel for both Standard and Gulf Oil companies.

ANOTHER Dixiecrat leader, ex-Governor Frank Dixon, is a DuPont attorney, the statement said, adding that "the DuPonts are powers in the Republican party."

The statement charged that the May 4 primary in Alabama, which named presidential elector nominees, was "rigged." Basis for the charge was this sequence of events:

"As of midnight, March 1, twenty-eight persons had qualified with State Party Chairman McCorvey as candidates for Democratic elector. While there had been much talk in the air, only a few of them had stated definitely that they would not vote for Pres. Truman.

"But on March 17, seventeen days after the deadline, 21 of the 28 candidates for elector publicly pledged themselves to vote against Pres. Trnman, should he be the nominee of the Democratic Party. By then, it was to late to qualify a pro-Truman slate of electors."

STATE Sen. Joe Langan, one of the principal speakers, predicted that the regular Democrats could win a court suit against the Dixiecrat electors. He pointed to instances in Nebraska and California, where electors have in the past been ordered to support the national party nominee.

"1948 is not a reactionary year," Textile Workers PAC director Al Barkan told the group, pointing to the re-nomination of liberal Sen. John Sparkman and defeat in the primary election of two anti-labor Congressmen, Manasco and Jarman.

At most, the PAC statement pointed out, the Dixiecrats are expected to capture the 38 electoral votes of four southern states—which ordinarily would have gone to Truman.

"That is why," it said, "we charge that a Dixiecrat vote is a Republican vote!"

Morristown, Tenn., Once Tough on Unions

Now Bosses Chat With Workers Outside CIO Hall

A lot of you folks outside Tennessee probably have never heard of Morristown, Tenn.

Well, you're going to hear a lot about it in the future, for CIO perseverance is putting Morristown on the labor map.

Morristown is a little industrial town, 43 miles east of Knoxville. It's the county seat of Hamblem County—population is about 15,000. Some 3500 workers are employed in textile and hosiery mills, furniture factories, lumber processing plants and a few miscellaneous and specialty trades.

Since 1942, repeated efforts have been made by CIO and AFL to establish unions which could weather employer opposition and overcome the fear generated by anti-union politicians.

But, not until Morristown was designated as one of the targets in CIO's Southern Organizing Drive and the power of the CIO Organizing Committee applied in late 1946 was there a sign of possible union success.

FOLLOWING the Oak Ridge campaign, CIO assigned James E. Payne and N. H. Kurko to Morristown. They managed to get a hotel room, which is quite a feat in an anti-union town. Morristown Turning Co., 150-man furniture shop, was the first plant organized. That was accomplished by a 10-man volunteer organizing committee.

The company then was asked to deal with the CIO Furniture Workers. The employer immediately discharged the entire organizing committee.

Charges were filed with the National Labor Relations Board, but the Furniture Workers' election petition was processed. The pre-election poll, now outlawed under Taft-Hartley, resulted in a 75-74 vote for the union, but 7 challenged ballots—all cast by discharged union committeemen—held up certification.

After a hearing in March, 1948, the NLRB decided the unfair labor practice charge would have to be decided before it could rule on the challenges. That hearing was held in April.

Meantime, T-H became law. When the Furniture Workers failed to qualify, the Board dismissed the Morristown Turning Co. petition.

Ironically, the Board's Trial Examiner later ordered all 10 union committeemen reinstated with full back pay. The board upheld the ruling with one modification, and only now is the company making preparations to comply with the reinstatement order.

CIO has managed to carry on a sustained organizing drive. Dozens of workers have been discharged by several companies because of their union activity, but some have been reinstated and given back pay.

When the American Enka Corp. started operations in its new $20 million rayon plant in early 1948, hundreds of CIO members filed applications for jobs. Many were hired. From the very beginning a big majority of all Enka employes have been members of the CIO Textile Workers.

Enka hired Theodore R. Iserman, reputed to be one of T-H's co-authors, to fight TWUA's petition for an election. This petition was filed in April, but the union's 800 members still await an election order.

Carl W. Holt, Navy veteran and native of Morristown, was fired three times for union activity by two employers. Ordered by the NLRB to reinstate him, the Taylor Manufacturing Co. put him back to work only to fire him again a few weeks later. Between board decisions he was hired as a CIO organizer, and is now considered to be one of the aces in CIO's team of crack Southern organizers. Recently, the Board ruled he should get back pay from the date of his last discharge until March, 1948, when he joined the CIO staff.

CIO headquarters is one of the busiest places in Morristown. Hundreds of CIO members meet and visit there regularly. When the bosses stop near or "casually" stroll by now just about the time a meeting of "their" employes is scheduled it is seldom that one or more of the members doesn't go out to chat with them and pass the time of day and "casually" talk about how well the union is getting along.

In addition to the one at Enka, four CIO petitions have been filed this year. Morrison Turning is again on the list, and still refuses to give an inch. Elections are coming up in two more furniture factories—Gluck Bros., where the next poll will be the fifth election, and Tennessee Furniture Industries, Inc.

Latest addition is the Belding Heminway Co., new modern textile thread throwing mill owned by the Corticelli interests, where over 150 of the 200 workers are active TWUA members.

It now begins to look as if the iron curtain of anti-unionism in Morristown is about to be penetrated, because Belding Heminway has indicated a willingness to agree to a consent election—the first time any Morristown employer has agreed to give employes on his payroll a free right to vote on the question of representation without having first been ordered to do so by the Labor Board.

MISS Lucy Randolph Mason, Southern CIO public relations representative, was recently in Morristown for a week of interviewing. Here is what Miss Mason had to say this time:

"Five full days in Morristown visiting merchants, the newspapers, Councilmen, the Mayor, educators, civic club leaders, ministers and the public in general made me think there is a far more friendly attitude in the city than when I was there in June, 1947.

As the CIO unions have grown, town people respect them more.

"Carl Holt was with me on community visits. His friendly smile, quick wit and convincing story of his own union experience won him many new friends.

"At a meeting of the Enka members, a volunteer organizer handed in 29 membership cards. He said 30 new workers had been taken on the previous week to replace those who had left Enka to seek better jobs. Ed Gerchak, CIO area director in East Tennessee, asked, 'Why didn't you get all of those new people?' At the next Enka meeting (for the morning shift) a man handed in one card, saying, 'Here is the card for the last of the 30 new people hired last week.'"

Big Like The State:

TEXAS CIO MAPS BROAD LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

RESOLUTIONS at the twelfth annual convention of the Texas CIO Council at Austin stressed a legislative program for the state and political action.

The legislative program called for:

- Abolition of the poll tax.
- Improved safety codes.
- Increased unemployment benefits.
- Adequate pay for teachers.
- Protection of migratory workers.
- Prison reform.
- Expanded education program.
- Opposition to enactment of a sales tax.
- Repeal and revision of repressive labor laws.

ENTER U. S. ILLEGALLY: These are typical of the estimated 15,000 Mexicans who swarmed into this country illegally to work in Texas, Arkansas and New Mexico cotton fields. In answer to a note from the Mexican government saying that the United States had abrogated the treaty governing the entry of Mexicans, our government replied that it had reprimanded immigation officials and that such events would not recur.

SPEAKERS drove home to the 125 delegates the importance of political action.

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils, reviewed the gradual enlargement of the CIO legislative and political action programs.

"We have to fight for the kind of political force that can put our program over," Smith said.

"We must bring home to our members that what happens in Washington and Austin has a decided effect on their own welfare," said John Edelman, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers.

THE convention sent a telegram to President Truman and Attorney General Clark vigorously protesting the illegal entry into Texas of Mexican migratory workers "apparently with the knowledge and without the interference of U. S. immigration and naturalization service."

The telegram said that because the Mexican government had refused to permit the legal importation of workers by Texas, the migratory laborers were unable to look to either government for protection.

"This cheap, illegal alien labor employed by Texas farmers, ranchers and citrus growers," the telegram said, "displaces thousands of resident agricultural workers, forcing them to other fields of employment where they accept substandard wages, thus depressing the entire economy of the state and impeding the efforts of all labor to improve its state."

W. Don Ellinger, Dallas, and J. J. Hickman, Houston, were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively, and A. A. Rister was named vice-president.

State's Braggadocio Put to Work

The Texas CIO Council convention decided to channel to better use the Lone Star state's proclivity for bragging. The following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, it is well known and highly advertised throughout the several states that Texans are as good, if not a little better than the inhabitants of the other 47 states, and as such are entitled to a better way of life.

"And whereas, the legislature and the governor of Texas have apparently overlooked their obligations to uphold Texas' vaunted superiority in at least one field, that of legislation for the betterment and protection of the working men and women of this state.

"Therefore, be it resolved that this convention call upon the legislature to enact a wage-hour law superior to that of California, that TSUIC advise the people of Texas the names of those legislators who proved to be so unTexan as to vote against such legislation and who expressed thereby the belief that working men and women of Texas are not entitled to such legal protection of wages as the people in any other state of the union."

'Don't Work For Peanuts,' Guild Teaches Students

THE CIO Newspaper Guild is conducting a campaign to keep schools of journalism from supplying newspaper editorial rooms with cheap labor.

The method is the Guild's associate membership program, which is an educational antidote to the anti-labor education received by prospective newspapermen and women in many schools of journalism.

The program offers limited membership in the union to college students who plan to enter the publications industry. For years, editors on unorganized papers have hired these students for next to nothing to undercut regular reporters, Guild leaders say.

Now, students are attending Guild meetings, executive board and district council sessions, listening in as the union discusses its problems and gains, and learning by experience why organization was necessary on the nation's newspapers, wire service, news, feature and picture magazines. Through the associate membership program, the Guild has an opportunity to explain to undergraduates what the aims and accomplishments of the union are and to make them an integral part of its operations.

ANY college journalism student, staff member of a campus publication, journalism instructor or student planning on a newspaper career is eligible for associate Guild membership. Units have been set up at about a third of the nation's journalism schools.

Publishers have become alarmed and put heat on the schools to squash some college units, according to the Guild. The head of one big city daily informed the dean of a school (which for the purpose of this story must remain nameless) that unless he got rid of the unit the paper would hire no more graduates of the university. The dean had the good sense to leave it up to the students, who have built their campus unit into one of the biggest in the country.

Many of the 22,000 students enrolled in journalism schools and thousands of others working on campus papers will never enter the newspaper industry. However, since educators, in the opinion of the Guild, have not done an active job of instructing students about the labor movement, the Guild believes that a better informed public will result from its program.

CAMPUS UNIONISTS: Faith Carrigan and Dave Pollard, associate members of CIO Newspaper Guild, take time out from their studies to draft a program for their Guild unit at Ohio State University.

Health Notes

UN Agency Sparks World Drive On Tuberculosis

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

HERE'S some news of an impending world-wide war that is good to hear. It is an international drive against one of the big killers of mankind, — tuberculosis — which takes the lives of four to five million people each year throughout the world.

Spearheaded by the United Nations Intl. Children's Emergency Fund, which is providing most of the supplies and equipment, this drive will be aided directly by the Danish and Swedish Red Cross, and the Norwegian Help for Europe, which are providing specially trained doctors and nurses and medical supplies.

The World Health Organization of the UN is providing technical advice and assistance; ministries of health in countries where the campaign is conducted are providing medical teams and facilities, and Natl. Red Cross societies are assisting locally in individual countries.

The anti-TB drive will be the largest single mass-health campaign of its kind ever undertaken. Fifty million children and young people under 18 in war-ravaged European countries will be tested for tuberculosis infection. The drive also will be extended to millions of other children in China, North Africa and other regions.

Financing of the campaign is on a joint international basis. The UNICEF has allocated $2,000,000 for immediate use in Europe, and another $2,000,000 for countries outside Europe. Denmark is contributing the equivalent of $420,000 with more to be made available later. Norway and Sweden together are contributing about $410,000.

Relief From Heat

How would you like to work in a place where the temperature averages 159 degrees, with a high of more than 210?

Next time you eat in a railroad dining-car, give a thought to the cooks in the train kitchen, who may have to endure this intense heat to prepare the food you eat in luxurious coolness.

(The CIO Transport Service Employes Union has a number of members in the dining-car service.)

A survey of dining-car kitchens on several railroads made by the U. S. Public Health Service's Industrial Hygiene Division, with the cooperation of the Public Utilities Commission in California, discloses that working conditions in kitchens go pretty hard on the health of the employes and are responsible for considerable fatigue and loss of time. The sanitary quality of the food is also endangered.

The Public Health Service offers a number of recommendations for controlling the excessive heat, such as mechanical exhaust ventilation, and insulation of ranges, exhaust stacks, and overhead hot-water tanks, which it says have been accepted by the railroads involved, and "will probably be put into effect soon."

Within the Law

A worker was engaged in cleaning an airplane with rags soaked in a corrosive solvent, when he suddenly became violently ill and was rushed to the hospital, where his condition was found to be grave. After being kept under oxygen that night and the following day, he apparently recovered.

A subsequent investigation by the U. S. Public Health Service's Division of Industrial Hygiene revealed that the industrial cleaner which is being sold widely to the automobile and aircraft repair industry contains aniline, a potentially dangerous substance, but carries no warning on the label. The manufacturers and vendors when interviewed volunteered the information that aniline is not harmful.

Public Health officials warn that although aniline poisoning has become rare since knowledge of its potential dangers have become widely known, products containit should have a warning on the label.

Since such labelling is not legally compulsory, U. S. Public Health authorities are taking what steps they can to spread warnings against the improper use of this and similar harmful materials, to prevent further poisonings.

A Tragic Case

A more tragic case of criminally negligent disregard for workers in the use of an unfamiliar solvent was reported by the Safety Research Institute of New York. A group of men assigned to work in a pit under a punch press were given a nonflammable solvent. The label warned only that ventilation should be provided, and so some air was forced into the pit by means of an air hose, without regard to the amount of solvent used and the type of place in which the men were working.

The men worked all day without complaint, all but one stopping from time to time "to come up for air." At the end of the day, two men became ill, and one of them, the man who had worked without interruption throughout the day, died a few days later.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

A. T. Stephens, director of organizations, CIO Packinghouse Workers, reports CIO victories in two NLRB elections: Armour's, Fort Worth, Tex., UPWA 1232, AFL 334, no union 55; wholesale market unit Armour's Fort Worth, UPWA 20, AFL 8; Armour Oil Refinery, Chattanooga, Tenn., UPWA 105, VORWA 26.

International Rep. Francis McMahon, Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers, reports an NLRB election victory at Duesbers-Bosson of America, Inc., Providence, R. I. The results were PJNW 31, no union 5. Rep. Charles Barranco assisted at the election.

George Brown, director of organization, Woodworkers, reports that at an election held at Douglas Timber Co., Drain, Ore., IWA received 33 votes, no union 3.

Intl. Secy.-Treas. John C. Lawson of United Stone and Allied Products Workers reports that in a representation election held at the Allegheny Products Co., Everett, Pa., the results were 30 yes., 5 no. Rep. Gaston LeBlanc organized this group.

Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization, Shipbuilding union, reports the following Union Shop election victories: Todd yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., were 2556 for, 109 against; Atlantic Steel Castings Co., Chester, Pa., 175 for, 12 against; Enterprise Galvanizing Co., Philadelphia, Pa., 37 for, 1 against.

Colorado CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda, reports that in a Union Shop election held at the Trailmobile Corp., Denver, the results were 15 for and 1 against. At the Fruehauf Trailer Co., Denver, the results were 39 for, 4 against. The Auto Workers was the union involved in both elections.

LONGSHORE SITUATION

The writer has recently returned from the West Coast where attempts were made to bring about a settlement of the Longshoremen's strike. The men in this waterfront situation are standing solid despite the length of the shut-down and are making a truly inspiring fiight to win their just demands. Issues have been raised which are not germane to true collective bargaining. If the companies would come to their senses and meet with the union this matter could be settled decently in a short time.

Also on the West Coast 14,000 Oil Workers have been on strike against the major Coast oil companies for seven weeks. President Murray has written a letter to all CIO affiliates urging that they extend every possible moral and financial aid to the Oil Workers at this time. This is a life and death struggle with the oil trusts and it needs our help. The oil monopoly headed as usual by Standard Oil is attempting to destroy the union. The strike has been attended by every union-busting technique known. More than $30,000,000 in damage suits has been filed against the union. Hundreds of its more militant members face injunction action with years of jail sentences. This is a challenge to every union in CIO.

PAPERWORKERS, UTILITY WORKERS

The writer attended the first Constitutional Convention of the United Paperworkers of America, an organization of which he was Chairman a while back. This union has developed splendidly and has demonstrated a great degree of responsibility. It was one of the most harmonious conventions the writer has ever attended in his life, and that is quite a number. All the officers were re-elected unanimously, indicating the confidence of the membership. The convention fully endorsed the national CIO policy and program.

The writer deeply regretted that he was unable to attend the Utility Workers' convention in Washington. This union has started the right kind of responsibility and is making continuous progress in all of its efforts. All of the officers of this union were re-elected at the convention which adopted the national CIO program.

THE ADVENTURES OF Jim Barry

STAND BACK, PEGGY! I'M GOING TO CRASH THE DOOR! THE REST OF YOU GUYS CHARGE IN!

RIGHT, MIKE!

Crash

THERE'S NO ONE HERE! SEARCH THE PLACE!

WHA-WHAT'S HAPPENED TO JIM? I KNOW HE CAME UP HERE...

THE BEDROOM IS EMPTY---

OH, JIM!

WHAT'S THE MATTER, PEGGY? WHA!

IT'S JIM... AND WOODY! HELP HIM, MIKE! QUICK... DON'T STAND THERE!

KNOCKED COLD BY A BLOW ON THE HEAD! THEY'LL BE ALL RIGHT IN A MINUTE!

OH, JIM... JIM!

A FEW MOMENTS LATER...

HOW... HOW DO YOU FEEL, JIM?

OOOOOH! LIKE THE SKY SUDDENLY DROPPED ON MY HEAD... WHERE'S WOODY AND POP?

HERE I AM, JIM... IT'S GETTING TO BE A HABIT-- THAT'S THE SECOND LUMP THE RATS PUT ON MY HEAD...

AND POP'S NOT HERE, JIM. DID YOU SEE HIM?

SURE... WE SAW POP TIED UP AND LYING ON THIS BED JUST BEFORE... HEY! THERE'S SOME OF THE ROPE THEY USED TO TIE HIM UP WITH...

THIS ROPE... HMMM... SMELLS STRANGE- SOME KIND OF TAR... I WONDER IF WE COULD IDENTIFY THIS ROPE! IF WE FOUND WHERE THIS CAME FROM... MAYBE WE CAN FIND THE PLACE THE KIDNAPPERS WENT TO! IT'S A LEAD!

A LEAD? I DON'T SEE HOW THIS ROPE CAN LEAD US ANYWHERE!

Truman, CIO Pay Tribute To Sen. Murray

The CIO's Natl. Community Services Committee sponsored the affair, a dinner in New York City, and presented the Philip Murray Award to Wagner in honor of his many social and philanthropic contributions to America.

Noting Wagner's close identity with the New Deal, Truman declared: "The New deal benefited all of the citizens of this great nation of ours, the rich as well as the poor, all of us."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, expressing regret that illness prevented Wagner from attending the dinner, declared that Truman's platform is Wagner's platform—"a fighting program which commands the respect of labor and all liberal Americans."

The Murray Award, was presented to Wagner's son, Robert F. Wagner, Jr., City Planning Commissioner, by John Brophy, who is treasurer of the NCSC. Senator Wagner requested that the award, a check for $10,000, be used to set up a scholarship fund to finance studies in social sciences.

Truman declared that Wagner had made untold conrtibutions to his country. Along with Franklin Roosevelt, he stands for the heart and soul of the New Deal, and I am proud to be a part of the New Deal."

When he thinks of Wagner, the President said, he recalls a dinner a year ago—in the same hall —honoring 50 business leaders. The publicity blurb, he recalled, stated that the 50 represented an annual income of $7,500,000, or an average of $150,000 a year.

"The sponsors looked around for a man who could talk the language of those who make $150,000 a year," Truman said. "They didn't ask me. But they didn't have a great deal of trouble finding the man. He hurried down from Albany. You see, he wanted to be President.

"He rose up before the assembled millions—in income, I mean, not in persons—and delivered a speech. This is how he began: 'Fellow victims of the New Deal.' He thought it was funny to call those $150,000 a-year-men victims of the New Deal."

The President, of course, was referring to his opponent, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

MURRAY, whose speech was broadcast, said that "almost every socially progressive bill in the Congress during the past 16 years bears a trademark: the name of Wagner. That in itself is a guarantee that the legislation has been drafted to help the citizens of America."

He said the "Republican leadership of the 80th Congress made promises in 1946 and ignored them in 1947 and 1948. Wagner, and the men of the New Deal, made promises to help the people of this country escape from the depression. They kept their promises." He predicted that a heavy vote Nov. 2 would lead to election of a "team" of liberal Senators, like Wagner and of liberal Congressmen, and that such a liberal team would be captained by Pres. Truman.

PRES. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers said that labor now, as in the depression, "knows who were our real friends. They are not the Johnny-Come-Latelies who run around the country today preaching a false unity. They are not those who praise reaction and pass anti-labor laws. Our friends then and our friends now are the same, and of those who stood up and made the good fight, Wagner leads all the rest."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers charged that Dewey's "kind of unity has me a little worried . . . I am afraid that what Mr. Dewey has in mind is some kind of shot-gun ceremony."

"If we are to have unity in America," Rieve said, "workers must be free." Mr. Dewey, he said, "wants efficiency in his happy family—but not freedom." Wagner, Rieve added, gave the country the Wagner Labor Relations Act, and made it possible for workers "to be free to organize, free to fight for justice, free to seek economic security."

CIO Asks UNESCO To Transfer Meeting

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has urged that the Nov. 17 meeting of the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization be transferred from Beirut, Lebanon. because the latter nation is engaged in a dispute with Palestine before the UN General Assembly. Murray cabled Julian Huxley, UNESCO's director general.

"The CIO strongly urges you to transfer the site of the Third General Conference of UNESCO scheduled to convene in Beirut, Lebanon, on November 17th.

"This cable follows up the position taken by our representative on the Executive Committee on the United States National Committee of UNESCO. We cannot see how an international body such as UNESCO can lend the prestige of its presence to a country, Lebanon, now engaged in defying a decision of the United Nations. The Third General Conference of UNESCO should not be held in any country engaged in a dispute which is being discussed and considered in the United Nations General Assembly.

"I therefore urge you to either postpone the Beirut meeting until satisfactory adjudication of the Palestinian issue is arrived at or to change the site of the Third General Conference."

Alaska Blames Waterfront Bosses For Embargo

OFFICIALS of the Territory of Alaska have placed the blame for embargo on vital shipments to Alaska squarely on the shoulders of the strike-bound Waterfront Employers Association, the Pacific American Shipowners' Association and the Seattle-based Alaskan carriers.

In letters to the three employer groups, the officials, headed by Alaska Gov. Ernest Gruening, noted that the Seattle CIO Longshoremen have agreed to load and unload ships bound for Alaska under pre-strike conditions. The employer associations, however, are pledged to boycott the union until it changes its leadership.

Gruening urged the associations to release the Alaskan carriers from their unity pledge.

"Let it be clearly understood," the letter concluded, "that if you remain adamant in your determination not to negotiate for resumption of service to Alaska, the responsibility will be entirely yours."

Earlier the communication, which reached CIO through a West Coast source, pointed out some of the same inconsistencies in the employer excuses for refusing to bargain as the union previously had noted.

"Although none of the carriers is obliged under the Taft-Hartley Law to negotiate with the longshoremen until ILWU leaders sign non-communist affidavits," the officials wrote, "the fact remains that there is nothing to prevent the carriers from so negotiating if they see fit to do so. As a matter of fact, they have engaged in just such negotiations for a West Coast agreement over a period of months before the present deadlock with those very same leaders. The carriers, as operators of dock facilities in Alaska, have also concluded agreements with those same unions.

"John L. Lewis, a known non-communist, refused to sign the affidavit because he challenges the constitutionality of the statutory provision requiring a declaration of party. Yet the coal mines operate, and rightly so, as no one in his right mind would contend that the nation should freeze until the Supreme Court rendered a decision."

FURTHER South, in San Francisco, the battle was being waged in the newspapers while West Coast employers continued their refusal to meet with the ILWU or the CIO Marine, Cooks & Stewards.

To prove their contention that the union is communist-dominated, the employers placed an ad in the San Francisco newspapers showing ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges and Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov toasting each other. Omitted were facts specifying when or where the shot was taken.

The scheme boomeranged two days later, when a union-sponsored ad appeared, reproducing another photograph taken on the same occasion as the first, it showed Molotov with Henry Grady, then president of the American President Lines and now Ambassador to Greece. Both were taken May 7, 1945, at a reception in Molotov's honor during the UN conference at San Francisco.

Meanwhile, one of the four striking maritime unions has reached an agreement with the operators, although union spokesmen said it leaves the union free to respect other unions' picket lines.

The CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association negotiators accepted a 5.3% increase, bringing West Coast engineers on a par with those on the East Coast.

TRUMAN AND BARKLEY RETURN TO WHITE HOUSE

It Was A Victory For The People

(An Editorial)

Several hundred thousand cheering Americans lined historic Pennsylvania Avenue Nov. 5 as President Harry S. Truman made his victorious return to Washington from his home state of Missouri.

It was obvious that Harry Truman was a happy man—happy not only for himself but for the "common people" who shared in and contributed to his great victory.

CIO members throughout the nation played an important role in the campaign which returned the President to the White House for another four years and gave the Democrats control of Congress.

To them, we of the CIO News say, "Thanks for a big job well done."

These CIO members were in the thick of the battle when all the "experts" said they were fighting for a lost cause.

They formed district, precinct and block organizations. They pushed door-bells. They distributed literature. They talked politics.

And on Nov. 2 they voted—and they got their friends to vote, too.

Their ballots were not only votes for the Democrats. They were votes of confidence in the judgement of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO Executive Board members who decided to back Truman when he was generally regarded as a sure loser.

PAC Director Jack Kroll, we believe, will join us in saying that credit for labor's share in the victory must be divided among thousands of active union political workers and among the other unionists who went to the polls and voted "right" Nov. 2.

It makes no difference what the wrong-guessing "experts" are now saying about the election. It was a victory for the people. It was a defeat for the special interests.

CIO members can well be proud of the role they played.

U. S. JUST WOULDN'T BE LICKED

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

SCENE: The PAC office of Jack Kroll, on 17th St., Washington, D. C.

TIME: Late afternoon of Election Day.

Kroll lays down an afternoon paper which forecast a sweeping victory for Gov. Dewey.

"I think Pres. Truman's going to win. I guess they're all out of step but Harry and me."

That little scene just about symbolizes the confidence that Jack Kroll exuded throughout the campaign. In the face of Gallup, in the face of Roper, in the face of the soothsaying of the newspaper "experts," Kroll and Harry Truman just couldn't be beaten. And they weren't.

For those two were just about the only political figures in America who seriously predicted a Truman victory.

Jack Kroll didn't cry "I told you so" with any malice the day after the election when he met with the press. The facts were there for all to see plainly.

• Truman had defeated Dewey, about 22,000,000 to 20,000,000 in popular votes. He had beaten the GOP by 304 electoral votes to 189 (with 38 for Dixiecrat J. Strom Thurmond and not a single electoral vote for one Henry A. Wallace).

• The Democrats had won back control of both houses of Congress—the House with 262 seats to 171 for the Republicans, and one for the American Labor Party; the Senate with 54 seats to 42 for the Republicans.

The last House was 249 Republicans; 184 Democrats and 2 ALP. The Senate was 51 GOP, 45 Democratic.

• At least 120 Congressmen who had voted to override the Taft-Hartley veto of Pres. Truman would not be back in the 81st Congress, almost all of them sent to private lives by the citizenry.

• Kroll had the deep heartfelt satisfaction of knowing that his home state—Ohio— had gone to Truman, something which FDR failed to accomplish in 1944.

• Kroll's Political Action Committee — he's its director — was given credit, along with its new alliance with farm groups, for being the major factor in the victory.

Typical of labor's reaction was that of CIO Pres. Murray (full text on an adjoining page) in a wire to Truman:

"We the people used our votes and we used them well."

Kroll told his press conference a number of interesting things:

1. He is positive Pres. Truman will carry out his platform pledges.

2. The Truman victory is a beacon of hope for labor all over the world.

3. Has the New Deal won? He was asked. "The New Deal changes with the times," he declared. "After all, we didn't have an atom bomb four years ago." "We had one yesterday," quipped one reporter.

4. Does this mean there'll be a real (as opposed to the Wallace brand) labor party now? "The 1948 election showed that labor can work within the framework of both major parties."

5. Democrats won because they had rid themselves of their left and right wings.

6. "It is about time the press of America learned to do something about the aspirations of the people."

7. Had Taft, Ball and Hartley been liabilities to the Republican ticket? "Dewey was his own greatest liability."

8. "Gallup and the other poll makers are in business for a profit. They want to satisfy their customers."

9. "The effects of this election will be felt for 50 years."

10. "The American people turned down Dewey because they didn't like being treated with disdain, they didn't want a goldfish and a fixed smirk in the White House."

Democratic Natl. Chairman J. Howard McGrath was quick to acknowledge with gratitude the help of labor:

"So what will Harry do after Jan. 20? We don't care much."

"The election marks a great victory for American labor; for to the organized political effort in the American labor movement much of the credit must be given."

Dream World

"The voters, who called for new labor legislation in 1946, now have indorsed the answer devised by the 80th Congress by electing a Republican Congress.

MURRAY WAS ARDENT HST BACKER

IN A much less comfortable position was most of the nation's press the day after election—particularly the Journal of Commerce.

The J. of C., just fresh from taking a beating from its union printers, rushed madly, Don Quixote style, at the windmill. As you may know, papers like the Journal of Commerce, which issues one edition daily, go to press the night before. So, the issue of Nov. 3, 1948—that happy day for us—went to press the night of Nov. 2, 1948, when things looked pretty good for Wall St.

United Press Dispatch in Washington Times-Herald Nov. 1:

"Polls and political surveys agreed almost unanimously for the first time in 20 years that the Nation will elect a Republican."

But, J. of C. wasn't content with that. It listed just what it expected the Dewey Administration—remember that the Journal was still living in a dream world—to do for business. It is interesting to know what we escaped:

Rent Control: Will be continued, but watered down through more liberal provisions. (Yes, the word is "liberal"!)

Utilities: More local participation in power projects.

And, dreamed on the J. of C. "The Dewey Administration should be able to provide business with the inspiration of consistency and a cautious, carefully thought out approach to its problems—but not at the expense of what the President's advisers consider the good of the nation as a whole.

Then, J. of C. conjectured:

"What kind of a President will Thomas Dewey make?

"World events will have a great deal to do with this. They will determine his opportunity for leadership.

"But we feel certain that the conduct of our foreign and domestic affairs rest in capable hands for the next four years."

So much has been written about this election that there hardly seems to be much I can add to it.

But, I want to send my deepest congratulations to the many workers and candidates I met during this campaign: to Hu Humphrey, to John Blatnik, to Ray Madden, to Philadelphia's Earl Chudoff and Bill Green, to Paul Douglas, to the new New Jersey Congressmen, to Dick Goss and the others in West Virginia, to Tom Burke at Toledo, to Bartley Brown and the other Hoosiers, to Ohio's Bill Lavelle, to Cy O'Brien and all the hard workers in Massachusetts, to Van Bittner, to those pretty blockworkers at Wheeling, to the scores of others.

You did a job, Chums!

CIO-PAC VICTORY STATEMENT

HERE is the post-election victory statement issued Nov. 3 by Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee:

We of the CIO Political Action Committee share in the pleasure and pride of the American people at the outcome of this election.

The people of the country have demonstrated their genuine unity in rejecting the attempt to wrest control of the government from them. They have also demonstrated that they were clearly able to recognize the allies of reaction whether they wore the label of the Republican party, the Dixiecrats or the so-called Progressive Party.

THE CIO-PAC is happy to have participated in this tremendous victory and to have stood shoulder to shoulder with the farmers, small business men, and white collar and professional workers who stood up and were counted for the New Deal. The battles that we fought in 1944 and 1946 gave us the know-how and the organization which were so valuable in 1948. As early as January of last year the CIO executive board and President Philip Murray demonstrated their wisdom in rejecting the ill-fated third party venture.

We had fighting champions in Harry Truman and Alben Barkley and the New Deal candidates for the House and Senate and we gave them our fighting support.

The American people have delivered a genuine mandate to translate into law as soon as possible the pledges of the Democratic platform. The American people have, with an unmistakable voice, affirmed their desire for a control of inflation, decent housing, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, strengthening of our civil liberties and the other needs which the Democratic platform promises to fulfill.

We will continue to fight always for the candidates who fight for the people.

The Journal Of Commerce Said—

Dewey Victory Seen as Mandate to Open New Era Of Government-Business Harmony, Public Confidence —And Was Its Face Red!

120 T-H'ers WON'T BE BACK IN 1949

BY HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE new Congress is going to have a new look.

It will be a 1949 new look—and the trappings, the trimmings and the falsies of the 80th Congress have been deposited on the political rubbish heap.

Many of the men who gave the 80th Congress its awful reputation will be on the sidelines in 1949.

The Democrats' gain of 73 seats in the House, of 9 seats in the Senate—that tells only part of the story. It's not only "how many" but "who."

Turning of the election tide was clearly seen in the tallies of Congressional candidates endorsed by CIO-PAC organizations in the various states.

In House election contests, PAC endorsements were given to 186 candidates. Over 120 of them were elected.

SOME 331 Congressmen voted to over-ride Pres. Truman's veto of the Taft-Hartley Act. Next year, 103 of them will not be back in the House.

"We hereby dedicate our organizations . . . to work unceasingly in the political field in complete unity with all labor organizations and other progressive groups to insure the political repudiation of those reactionaries who are responsible for the Taft-Hartley Bill . . ."—CIO Executive Board, June 27, 1947.

Not all of them were defeated—though plenty were. A few retired for one of several reasons. A few died. But the overwhelming majority of the 120 who won't be back lost their seats because they got licked on Nov. 2.

Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.), a sponsor of T-H, decided not to run for re-election. A Democrat won his seat. Sen. Ball (R., Minn.)—a principal designer of the T-H plot against labor—was soundly whipped by liberal, fighting Hubert Humphrey, the New Deal mayor of Minneapolis.

Sen. Taft (R., O.), the other T-H kingpin, stays in office until 1950. Ohio went Democratic last Tuesday, and Taft won in '44 by only 7,000 votes. Our advice: don't bet on Taft in '50.)

BUT the liberal sweep in Congress was more than a Taft-Hartley sweep. Casualties:

- Rep. Rizley (R. Okla.), co-sponsor of a bill to give natural gas corporations a rate increase and a cut in federal supervision. He ran for the Senate and was whipped.
- Rep. Gearhart (R. Calif.), sponsor of two bills to cut social security coverage. He ends 4 years on the Congressional payroll.
- Rep. Fletcher (R. Calif.), a prime foe of rent control and government housing programs. The people of San Diego turned thumbs down after one term.
- Rep. Knutson (R. Minn.), sponsor of "spare-the-rich" tax bills. Out of office went Knutson after 32 years in the House.

(Knutson will draw a $10,000 yearly pension, which is more than you'll get from Social Security.)

- Two brothers named Schwabe—George (R. Okla.), and Max (R. Mo.). George voted wrong all 16 times on the CIO News voting guide, Max voted wrong 14 out of 16. They never will be missed, they never will be missed.
- Rep. Vail (R. Ill) and McDowell (R. Pa): Both Un-American Activities Committee members, they shouted spy scares for the headlines, but voted wrong for the record. Their constituents weren't impressed.
- Rep. Landis (R. Ind.), a foe of unions. He was next in line for chairmanship of the House Labor Committee—if the Republicans had won control of Congress.

'We Used Our Votes, We Used Them Well'-Murray

HERE is the wire of congratulations sent by CIO Pres. Philip Murray on Nov. 3 to Pres. Harry S. Truman:

Mr. President, I offer you my heartiest congratulations on your inspiring, tremendous clean-sweep victory—a victory based so clearly and unalterably on the principles of the New Deal.

We congratulate you for your steadfast devotion to those progressive principles, despite the sniping of extremists who for months have preached the "ism" of defeat.

We in organized labor know that your election, and the election of an 81st Congress committed to repealing the malfeasance of the 80th Congress, is a victory for the millions of decent Americans who want progressive, humane government in this country of ours.

We in organized labor are proud that we played so mighty a role in winning this victory for the people for you and for so many other candidates committed to a forward-looking, fearless program to develop the human and natural resources of this nation.

We are proud that our CIO Political Action Committee brought out a tremendous vote in every section of the country behind these principles which we support and you so fearlessly carried to the people.

We are confident that this demonstration of labor's great political strength will give pause to those reactionary minorities which have so obviously wished to place the American spirit in a strait-jacket controlled by rich special interests.

In Pittsburgh, when we appeared together before an audience of workers, small businessmen and professional men, I predicted: "We will use our votes to return to the White House a fighting President—a President whose program is our program—a President who takes his case to the people in words of honesty and sincerity."

We the people did use our votes, and we used them well.

Clearly this tremendous election victory for the New Deal principles which you made the cornerstone of your platform must be quickly translated into action.

Clearly the people want repeal of the hateful Taft-Hartley Act, which is being used to rob labor of its basic rights.

Clearly the people want immediate action to halt the terrible rising spiral of inflation.

Clearly the people want a government-sponsored housing program that will provide homes for workers and veterans.

Clearly the people want high minimum wages, vastly expanded social security, a health insurance program, a program of federal aid to guarantee decent education for our children.

And clearly, the American people—in every section of the country, have demonstrated their full endorsement of the inspiring civil rights program which you carried to the people with magnificent courage and over the opposition of petty-minded bigots.

We in the CIO have said time and again that this program of yours is also the program which the six million members of CIO have long advocated. In the months ahead you may count on our full support in adopting this progressive, New Deal program.

The support of millions of workers which led so clearly to the triumph of liberalism on November 2 will be ready to buttress your program of action in the 81st Congress.

We in labor are happy to have contributed so mightily to this victory of yours and ours. We offer you our most sincere congratulations and our pledge for whole-hearted cooperation in the months ahead.

Plain English

The British newspaper New Statesman and Nation, on Oct. 30, remarked thusly on Sen. Joseph Ball's possible future:

"Another approach to wit was the remark that if Joe Ball in Minnesota is defeated, his friend Stassen, new president of Pennsylvania State University, will find him a job as 'professor of Medieval Economics'."

(Editor's note: The British erred slightly. Stassen heads the University of Pennsylvania, not Pennsylvania State College.)

Continuing, the New Statesman commented prophetically:

"The only good remark I have heard lately from the U. S. referred to one of the best sellers. It is said Dewey has at last shown how to have influence without making friends."

THE Congressional hurricane blew in only one direction. The liberals, the men who had voted for price control, for housing, for rent control, for higher minimum wages and against Taft-Hartley—almost all of them were re-elected.

Only two men—both Republicans—who had voted to sustain the President's veto of T-H, were defeated in re-election attempts. They were Brophy (Wis.) and Butler (N. Y.). In both cases, the rest of their voting record was second-rate.

U. S. News and World Report, week before voting:

"Between Election and Inauguration Day—with a Dewey victory — an Administration that stands defeated and on the way out will continue to run the country."

Some of the GOP's leading Congressional viewers-with-alarm will be back, of course. Hoffman (Mich.), Wolcott (Mich.), Short (Mo.), Rich (Pa.), Gwynne (Ia.) Taber (N. Y.) won re-election—but the tremendous power they exerted has been washed away by the voters.

NEWCOMERS and veteran liberals, men with brains and courage and spirit, will be on hand to carry out the people's desire for progressive government.

In the Senate there'll be Paul Douglas of Illinois, a militant liberal from way back who defeated Curley Brooks, the Chicago Tribune stooge; Estes Kefauver, a former Representative who licked Boss Crump; Hubert Humphrey, who played an instrumental part in framing the liberal Democratic party platform; Matt Neeley (D., W. Va.) returning to Congress after an absence.

Frank B. Kent, in the Baltimore Sun, Oct. 31:

"Some day the betting odds, the prophets, and 'trained observers' may all turn out to be wrong and the candidate the 'authorities' agree is a beaten man, coming from behind, will tear across the line a winner . . . no such miracle has ever happened in American politics."

Returning for another six years in the Senate will be Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.), whom the copper trust tried desperately to defeat; and 80-year-old Theodore Green (D., R. I.), who has always gone down the line for the New Deal.

In the House will be Andrew Biemiller (D. Wis.), who lost out in 1946; Tom Burke, former CIO union official in Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse (D. Conn.), also a former member of the House; Mrs. Reva Bosone (D. Utah), judge, and numerous young ex-GI's who defeated their Republican rivals.

California's group of liberal Congressmen—Havenner, Holifield, Helen Douglas and others—were re-elected after the Wallace Third Party finally trimmed its sails and abandoned candidates whose campaigns might have guaranteed GOP successes.

The overthrow of Republicans in some states was spectacular. In Illinois they lost 8 seats, in Pennsylvania 12, in New York 9, in Ohio 8, in Indiana 6, in Missouri 10, in New Jersey 4, in Michigan and Wisconsin 3 each. All these states were centers of PAC activity.

Editorial in Washington Star, Oct. 31:

"Is the American press at last going to be on the right side of a Presidential election? Is it not the function of the press to tell the people how to vote?"

It's an 81st Congress with talent — and its leadership was elected on a program of action. The contrast with the "worst Congress in history," should be complete.

Other News Of Election on P. 6-7

Haywood

Comment of CIO Vice Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood:

"It is a victory for the people over the greatest odds and heaviest opposition the privileged groups ever offered. The CIO declared for Truman over the opposition of editorial writers, columnists, commentators, poll-takers, the NAM and other such groups.

"When the people know the facts they will act. We must keep the facts before the public so the entire program of Pres. Truman can be achieved."

Carey

Comment of CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey:

"You just had to look at the faces of the wealthy the day after election to know that not they, but the people, had won.

"The people marched to the polls and showed that they want decent, liberal government, that they want fair labor and economic legislation. They want decent civil rights.

"They now can achieve their goal."

NOT A PLEASANT PROSPECT

The boss calls you into his office one day and says, "Joe, our records show you'll soon be 65. That means we'll have to retire you next month."

You tell him you've still got a lot of good work in that body of yours, that you can't afford to retire.

He mentions the fact that you'll draw a Social Security pension and you say that it isn't large enough.

He tells you he's sorry that he can't let you continue at your job; there's a company rule that production men retire automatically at 65.

So there you are, at the end of 45 years of hard, steady work facing a future that's none too pleasant.

With prices as they are, your Social Security pension will just about pay your wife's doctor bills and buy you enough to eat. There won't be anything left for rent, clothing and incidentals.

Maybe you can move in with your daughter and her husband —or maybe you can get a job as a nightwatchman.

Then you tell yourself with considerable feeling, "What this outfit I'm working for needs is a decent retirement program."

A lot of Joes around the country face this problem every year, which explains why a large number of CIO unions are paying more and more attention to retirement programs.

They want to make pensions—along with insurance plans—the subject of collective bargaining. Their argument is that workmen, acting collectively, have as much right to bargain for their future as for the present.

It's a sound argument—one we intend to keep making from time to time until industry provides its employes with adequate retirement programs. ★ ★ ★

OIL UNION NEEDS AID One of the CIO's oldest unions is engaged out on the West Coast in a bitter struggle with giant oil companies which have devised a fantastic "California Plan" of attempted strikebreaking reminiscent of the infamous "Mohawk Valley Plan."

Neither the Oil Workers International Union nor any other union of its size could stand up alone for long under the punishment being dished out by the petroleum trust. That's why the National CIO and its affiliates are throwing their support behind OWIU.

Turn to Pages 8 and 9 of this issue of the CIO News, if you haven't already done so, and read a detailed account of the "California Plan."

Then you'll understand why OWIU needs help.

And you'll have a much better understanding of what Taft-Hartleyism means to the trade union movement. ★ ★ ★

WAGNER GIVEN MURRAY AWARD Philip Murray, speaking recently at a Community Services Committee dinner in New York City, said: "Almost every socially progressive bill in the Congress during the past 16 years bears a trademark—the name of Wagner. That in itself is a guarantee that the legislation has been drafted to help the citizens of America."

He was referring to Senator Robert F. Wagner, N. Y., Democrat, who was given the CSC Philip Murray Award in recognition of his many social and philanthropic contributions to the nation.

The selection of Wagner—author of the Wagner Act—as recipient of the award was a wise one on the part of the judges.

And it was typical Wagner thinking which prompted the decision to use the award—a check for $10,000—to set up a scholarship to finance studies in the social sciences.

It Was No Miracle

American People Fed Up With Republicans, So They Voted Democratic

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS column is dedicated largely to the proposition that political "experts" can and sometimes do talk through their hats.

Weeks ago, the public opinion pollsters and a large portion of the nation's editorial writers "elected" Tom Dewey and his senatorial and congressional followers to office.

They were positive. Absolutely! All that remained was the mere formality of permitting the people to vote as the "experts" had predicted they would.

Then the people voted—and oh, brother!

The "experts" were struck dumb, but not for long. Before all the returns were in they started peddling the idea that the nation was witnessing a "political miracle."

THIS "miracle"—like so many others — represented much hard work, sweat and careful planning.

It represented a great victory for Harry Truman, who often had been reported "down," but was never counted "out."

It provided a shot-in-the-arm for the liberalism which the Republicans said was dead.

It represented a slap-in-the-face to the "splinter" parties—the Progressives and the Dixiecrats.

FRANKLY, we don't intend to be a bit modest about the part organized labor played in the Democratic victory.

It played a major role—and played it so quietly and without fanfare that the "experts" didn't know until the votes were being counted what was going on.

A few months ago many of the newspapers were telling about PAC coming apart at the seams. PAC Director Jack Kroll was being generally ignored by the press. Labor was reported showing apathy regarding the campaign.

That suited Kroll fine. He was busy directing the establishment of district, precinct and block organizations—the CIO's doorbell ringers.

He was interested in getting the vote—not the headlines.

And other branches of organized labor were in there, too, working where it counted.

HARRY TRUMAN, campaigning on a platform that labor might well have written, took his message direct to the people.

He told them in plain, simple language what he would fight for if re-elected.

He punched hard—and largely at the record of the GOP-dominated 80th Congress.

He talked about specific issues —the Taft-Hartley Act, social security, price control, housing, minimum wages—and left the glittering generalities to Dewey.

He made one of the most strenuous presidential campaigns in history. He called a spade a spade. He talked in language the people understood.

And other labor-backed candidates were right in there pitching on the same team.

THE meaning of the "miracle" is perhaps of more significance than the manner in which it was brought about.

It nullified that "mandate" which the Republicans claimed they had received when they began chopping away at the New Deal.

It demonstrated a majority of the nation's people were fed up with the pro-big business, anti-labor groups which played the tune to which the 80th Congress danced.

It revealed that labor can become a potent political force when it is being pushed around.

And it showed that millions of citizens outside the ranks of organized labor also wanted the things for which the unions have been fighting.

The big job ahead is to translate into action the desires of those who made the Democratic victory possible.

CIO Batting 80% in NLRB Polls in Miss.

THE CIO Organizing Committee in Mississippi is batting just under 80% with a record of 56 wins out of 71 elections held since the Southern Drive began 29 months ago.

"The 15 elections not won cannot be chalked up in the lost column," Mississippi State Director Robert W. Starnes says, "as we still have volunteer committees functioning in these plants and intend to go back and take them at a later date."

Before the Southern Drive opened there were but two small units of CIO in Mississippi—at Natchez and Hattiesburg. Since then, organization has spread to more than a dozen cities and the CIO membership in the state has increased more than tenfold.

Biggest gains have been made in Laurel, an industrial community of 35,000 population. Before the drive started there were no CIO members there. Now there are more than 6,000 staunch CIOers and payrolls have been increased by more than five million dollars a year through CIO-negotiated contracts. CIO is popular with the merchants in Laurel—their cash registers ring with a merrier tune with $5,000,000 more being spent annually.

"Mississippi may trail the rest of the states in some respects," Starnes says, "but in the field of organization, we are keeping up with the pack. And when we finally organize all of the unorganized, Mississippi will come out and bask in the same economic sun that shines down on the organized and more prosperous sections of the nation."

Study Shows Public Power Cheaper

Publicly owned power systems are more efficient and furnish cheaper electricity than the private utilities, according to a study made for the American Public Power Association by Carlton L. Nau.

Nau, formerly a Rural Electrification Administration official, based his analysis on government statistics contained in a generally ignored report of the Federal Power Commission. Nau compared 150 publicly owned systems with 300 private power corporations.

The public utilities have far lower rates, Nau found. The average domestic customer pays the public companies 2.3c per kilowatt hour. He has to pay the private utilities 43% more, or 3.3c pkh.

The private utilities give industrial users special breaks, but even for such customers the public systems are cheaper, charging 1.3c as against 1.5c pkh.

The study refutes the private utility argument that public ownership is given advantages by the federal government. Actually, the public utilities pay 27c on each dollar of revenue in taxes. The private corporations pay only 19c on the revenue dollar.

Sure, He Distributed Some Leaflets, But—

THIS is a story about a newspaper man who outsmarted two lawyers —his own and a company attorney who was trying to send him to jail.

In some circles the little scheme he used is known as the "fast switch." The important thing about it, insofar as he was concerned, was that it worked.

He didn't go to jail.

IT happened a number of years ago in a Mid-Western city, where the CIO Newspaper Guild was on strike against a powerful publisher.

The publisher said he wasn't going to comply with the Guild's contract demands and then launched a strikebreaking drive.

Things got rough—mighty rough.

"Goons" who had been used by the publisher in his rough-and-tumble circulation battles were brought in to "work over" the striking newsmen.

Such instruments as tire tools and car cranks were used in an effort to beat the strikers into submission.

They didn't submit.

Then the lawyers and the police got busy.

STRIKERS were arrested so fast that their attorney had trouble keeping track of the charges placed against them.

Then the injunction mill began to grind.

It was difficult to keep a picket line in operation because so many of the strikers were held in jail or tied up in court.

Late one night during this period the Guild's attorney got a telephone call at home, informing him that one of the strike leaders had been arrested.

He had been charged with violating an injunction which prohibited Guildsmen from passing out leaflets asking the public not to patronize stores which advertised in the struck newspaper.

THE strike leader who was under arrest seemed not to be a bit worried about what would happen to him in court.

His lawyer, however, didn't share his optimism.

"Sure, I know the injunction says I can't distribute strike leaflets in front of stores," the Guildsman said. "But they'll turn me loose if you'll do exactly what I tell you to do.

"When we get into court, you ask me if I was distributing leaflets—and then you ask me to read the leaflet to the court."

It didn't sound like a good defense to the attorney, but he couldn't think of anything sure-fire.

COURT opened on schedule and those involved went through the preliminaries required under legal procedure.

Policemen testified they had arrested the newsman as he stood before a store distributing leaflets in violation of an injunction.

Finally the strike leader took the stand and began testifying, with his own attorney asking the questions.

Yes, he knew about the injunction. Yes, he was distributing leaflets, as the policemen charged.

At this point his attorney asked him to read one of the leaflets he had been passing out.

Calmly, he began to read—a leaflet advertising a social function at a church!

The case was dismissed, and as they strolled out of the courthouse the newsman told his attorney:

"You lawyers aren't so darn smart. Nobody asked me WHAT ELSE I was distributing!" A. L. S.

'This Hurts You More Than It Does Me'

Apparently You Can't Make Them Happy

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE corporation president—an eternally unhappy man is he, or so his public statements indicate.

If profits are low, he's in the dumps.

If profits are high, he's in the dumps.

If wages go down, he foresees a depression.

He reaped his heaviest harvest of profits under Truman's administration. But with Truman's reelection he's predicting a nightmarish four years of inflation and a New Deal grab for his profits.

The quarterly filing of corporate financial reports with the Securities and Exchanges Commission always affords the corporation president an opportunity to cry out loud.

Now that the July-August-September reports are in, and the presidents and board members have had a good cry—all because next year's profits might conceivably drop behind this year's record-smashing totals—here's the picture:

A Wall St. Journal survey of 155 major companies in 15 industries showed that third-quarter earnings after taxes were a sweeping 41-7% above those of the corresponding period in 1947.

Business pages of the daily newspapers weren't embarrassed to point out that industry owed it all to price increases. In the case of steel, this was supplemented by additional revenue brought by abandonment of the basing point system under which the industry used to absorb freight costs. U. S. Steel Board Chairman Irving S. Olds estimated this alone had increased his corporation's profits by $1 a ton—$4,916,185 for the months of July, August and September.

AFTER setting aside an almost doubled "special quarterly depreciation reserve" of $13½ million, U. S. Steel's net zoomed from $28,735,082 in the third quarter of 1947 to $34,599,132 in the 1948 third quarter.

Even so, Mr. Olds was an unhappy man. The government doesn't permit tax deductions on Big Steel's extraordinary "depreciation reserve." Costs are still going up, he says, and he hopes "it will not be necessary to increase prices."

Chrysler Corp. Pres. K. T. Keller likewise fished around and came up with something to be gloomy about. Oh, sure, Chrysler profits spurted $12 million above last year's third quarter. But Keller nonetheless predicted higher car prices next year. Reason: There is little prospect of any substantial production improvement next year.

THE Natl. City Bank of New York found something to mourn about, too. Business, it reported in its November letter, is getting a sub-normal share of the national income. For proof it digs 'way back into the 1929 figures when wages were dangerously shrunk in purchasing power and corporations were devouring 9.8% of the income "pie." Today the companies are only taking 9.1%, the bank complains.

It did not mention that the 9.1% represents the largest hunk corporations have eaten since the profit-crazy '29 era. Profits since 1936 have been consuming a steadily growing part of the national income, while wages and salaries have been getting a steadily smaller share. Thus, by June, 1948, the share consumed by wages and salaries declined from 67.6% to 61.3% of the national income in 1945. On the other hand, profits, which in 1945 constituted 4.7% of the national receipts, had galloped to 9.1% the first half of this year.

Committee Wrong 'Uns Lose

SEN. ELBERT THOMAS
Senate Labor Committee Head

REP. JOHN LESINSKI
House Labor Committee Head

THERE'S a big New Deal for labor coming up in Congress—and nowhere is it more evident than in the House Labor Committee.

Out as chairman goes Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.), co-author of you-know-what-law. Hartley decided private life looked fine. He didn't run for re-election, and Jersey voters promptly elected a young PAC-endorsed Democrat to succeed him in Congress.

In as chairman will come Rep. John Lesinski, a Detroit Democrat, who had a perfect record in the CIO News 1948 voting record. Lesinski has been top Democrat on the committee during the last two years of the GOP Congress.

The House Labor Committee is pretty certain to be a far different sort of Congressional animal during the next two years. Under Hartley's regime, it was converted into an anti-labor group, which has harassed many unions and threatened scores of union officials with contempt charges.

Next year, the Republicans will be in a minority on the Committee. And eight of the committee's members during the past two years won't be back. Hartley's retired, Rep. Thomas Owens (R., Ill.) died earlier this year, and six others woke up Nov. 3 to find the opposition had gotten the votes.

Out of Congress and thus off the Committee went Landis (Ind.), McCowen (O.), Schwabe (Mo.), Buck (N. Y.), Kersten (Wis.), and MacKinnon (Minn.). In recent months Kersten has been ranging up and down the country running "investigations" of unions.

The Senate Labor Committee will somehow have to struggle along without the services of Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.), who even the Gallup poll could find is one of the most unpopular gentlemen in the eyes of U. S. labor. Ball, a leading figure in the Taft-Hartley drive, was whetting his axe for the Wage-Hour law. He treated labor union officials with studied contempt.

In place of Sen. Taft (R., O.) as committee chairman will be Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), a veteran liberal. He's author of wage-hour and anti-inflation bills which didn't appeal to the GOP majority in the 80th Congress.

Two members of the publicity-loving House Un-American Activities Committee also got the hook—not from Moscow, but from the folks back home. Rep. Vail (R., Ill.) and Rep. McDoweli (R., Pa.)—both of whom had been filling the papers with spy scare stories in the weeks before election—were retired to private life. But Rep. J. P. Thomas (R., N. J.) managed to ride out the storm.

Remember Henry Wallace?

Now that the singing and shouting are over, the Wallaceites, it turns out, captured scarcely over a million votes—2.3% of the total cast.

Only seat taken anywhere by a Wallaceite was a narrow win for Rep. Marcantonio (N. Y.). Rep. Isacson, his chum, lost.

"FINIS"—as they say in the movies. Next third party?

* * *

It's poetic justice.

Mahoning County, O., the main stem of which is Youngstown, was the scene of major violence against labor in the Little Steel strikes of 1937. The then sheriff was Ralph Elser, who treated our boys rough. This year, in the primary, he was defeated by Paul Langley—a member of the United Steelworkers!

The experts then had a field day. Why, Langley just couldn't win in the fall. But, came Nov. 3, Langley was elected, by 7000 votes.

So, we say it's poetic justice.

* * *

Twenty-three of the "marginal" Congressmen who refused to sign the discharge petition which would have saved the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill were defeated for re-election.

The four who managed to save their necks were:

Edward T. Miller (R. Md.); Ernest K. Bramblett (R. Cal.); Joseph Bates (D. Ky.) and Alvin O'Konski (R. Wis.).

* * *

Jack Kroll is director of National PAC, as everybody knows. But, not everyone is aware he is also PAC chairman for his home state, Ohio.

Jack did right well by himself, nationally, in the election. And, he did darn well by himself—and the people of Ohio—in his state work.

In addition to carrying the state for Truman—which was not accomplished for FDR in 1944 — Democratic majorities were achieved in both state houses—the first time since 1936. And, several liberal Republicans won with PAC support. Only Republican to win a state-wide office was the state treasurer.

P. S.—Ohio is Bob Taft's home state, too.

Ah, The Po

HOW would you like to be good old George Gallup these days? How would you feel in the shoes of Elmo Roper?

Those gents are on a spot.

IF YOU had watched Dr. Gallup on an ABC television in the late hours of Election Day and the early morning thereafter, you would have seen an increasingly sad-looking man. He seemed to think his world was coming apart. You could sense him recalling the Literary Digest, which went boom in 1936, after polling the nation by penny postcard and finding that FDR just couldn't win.

In New York last week, Wilfred Funk, former editor of the Lit. Digest, chuckled, and said: "I think

He had a word of pity for Gallup and Roper. "I udder to think of the stock jokes they'll fall into."

On Nov. 3, 1948, wiping the crow from his s, Roper said:

Barkley Says:

VICE-PRESIDENT ELECT BARKLEY, in his first post-election press conference, cited these factors as the major reasons for the Democratic victory:

1) High cost of living; 2) The poor record of the 80th Congress; 3) A feeling that people are "getting along pretty well;" 4) Taft-Hartley; 5) Farmers' fear of what the Republicans might do to them; 6) Fear that a Truman defeat might be misunderstood abroad.

When Congress resumes, Barkley pledged, his party will take immediate steps to: a) Repeal Taft-Hartley; b) fight inflation; and c) obtain civil rights legislation.

PRESS CONFERENCE: CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll is shown as he met the press the day after election. Beside him are Mrs. Kroll and PAC Public Relations Dir. Henry Zon (in shirt sleeves). Kroll was one of few in America who predicted a Truman victory. The press, which had scoffed, hailed him after the election.

The Free Press Surely Was Pressing Freely

THE newspapers of America were caught with their plans down.

They were so sure that their boy, Tom Dewey, would be elected, that the vast majority of them didn't even bother to prepare any advance copy to be used if—perish the thought, they said—Harry Truman were re-elected.

Column upon column of glowing articles about Dewey's boyhood were set up rapturously. Think pieces about who would be the Cabinet members, if laid end to end, would have blanketed New York state on a clear day.

Prominent citizens — Republicans, natch—were called to give advance statements, which would be released when the happy news broke. Picture after picture of Dewey mugging the camera were processed by the engraving department.

Full pages of preparedness articles were set and locked up ready to be placed on the press.

The efficient press of America was being at its most efficient, it says here.

Cute little editorials were prepared, condescendingly saying that while Harry S. Truman was a very nice man—a man you just couldn't get mad at—he just wasn't the guy American people wanted to lead them.

The wire services must have sent millions upon millions of words of background material on Dewey "victory." Histories were poured over. It was indeed a happy occasion.

Truman, well, he was a good guy for the photographers and many a picture editor felt a pang at having to think of staring at Dewey's fixed puss for the next four years, But, well, after all, the American people were about to speak.

When they spoke! Oh boy, were they unkind to the press!

State-Wise Results

PAC indorsed 16 candidates for Governor in the elections. PAC indorsed candidates won 14 of the 16 races.

Outstanding victories were those of Adlai Stevenson, Illinois, who unseated Gov. Dwight Green, the Republican keynoter; Chester Bowles, former OPA chief, in Connecticut; Paul Dever, in Massachusetts; Thomas Bonner, in Montana, and Elbert Carver in Delaware.

Labor won two out of three state tests in which bans on union security were involved.

In Massachusetts, AFL, Brotherhoods and CIO united as never before to slaughter a referendum which banned all types of union security. The vote was better than 2 to 1.

In New Mexico, a similar proposal also went to defeat.

The voters of Arizona approved an enabling referendum to a previous closed shop ban, but the act is up for review before the U. S. Supreme Court.

REP.-ELECT TOM BURKE

When Arthur Riordan, of the CIO News, came away last August from a visit to Vice Mayor Tom Burke, of Toledo, he was positive as he ever had been of anything: that Tom Burke would be elected to Congress on Nov. 2.

That's the kind of a man Tom Burke is. He has been heart and soul in the labor movement from as early a date as he could. He was one of the founders of the CIO Auto Workers and was fired for union activity. A one-week strike by his fellow workers won him reinstatement and recognition for themselves.

Tom Burke, now 44, is a member of UAW Local 12, Spicer Mfg., Toledo. He served in the Navy for five years. He is secretary-treasurer of the Toledo Industrial Union Council. He formerly served in Ohio's General Assembly. In 1943, he was elected to Toledo's City Council under proportional representation. In 1947, he was reelected and became vice mayor under Mayor Michael DeSalle. (DeSalle, incidentally, failed by 357 votes of being elected to Congress in 1946.)

Last week, Tom Burke rode to victory in Ohio's 9th District, defeating incumbent Homer Ramey by 11,000 votes.

Mass. — There She Stands!

Massachusetts, which has voted Democratic in every Presidential election since and including 1928, went liberal with a bang last week.

Spurred by PAC, Paul Dever (D) was elected Governor over incumbent Robert Bradford (R). Dever will have a Democratic House, a tie in the Senate. And for the first time in many years, the Governor's Council, a Bay State group which reviews appointments, will have a Democratic majority.

The California Plan . . . 'Legal' Strike Busting

Big-Six Oil Firms Fight CIO Workers

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

WHEN the California oil workers struck Sept. 3 for an increase to bring their wages up to the level paid union oil workers in the Deep South, they ran smack up against a brick wall.

Eight weeks later they know a lot more about the bricks in the wall they ran up against. The bricks spell "California Plan"—which is just a modernized version, with Taft-Hartley trimmings, of the Mohawk Valley formula of the early '30s.

The California Plan was drawn up by the Big Six of the oil trust—spearheaded by Standard Oil of California, brain-trusted by Reese Taylor of Union Oil and supported by Shell, Texas, Richfield and Tide Water Associated.

For the information of union men of CIO, the 14 big points of the California Plan are outlined below. You'd better read them now—while you're not on strike, so you'll know what working men are up against in the Taft-Hartley era when they go out after a decent break in wages.

1. Soften 'Em Up

Long before the strike, the Big Six were spending thousands of dollars on training programs for supervisory people. The "righteousness" of each company was sold, skillfully and delicately, to all employes. No rough stuff, please. The "friendly" approach. Iron hand in velvet glove. The "new look" in industrial relations. When the strike crisis came, some employes had been softened to the point that they believed too many of the companies' words.

2. The Solid Front

In preparation for the strike, the Big Six of the West Coast oil trust formed a united front. There would be no "breakthrough" by one company, with the others following a pattern set by an initial settlement.

While refusing to negotiate wage issues jointly, the Big Six took the identical line in all wage negotiations. It was "United We Stand, Divided We Negotiate." At each wage conference, whether in San Francisco Bay or Los Angeles or Bakersfield, the union committees ran into exactly the same answers, the same maneuvers from each of the Big Six.

3. Courts Smash Lines

On Sept. 7, four days after the strike began, Shell Oil went into Judge Harold Jacoby's court in Martinez, on San Francisco Bay, and asked for an immediate injunction to break the oil workers' picket line at the Shell Refinery.

The union was not even notified or heard. Shell didn't bother to submit evidence or affidavits in its pleas for relief by the court. Fact was, it had none to submit.

Injunction granted. Pickets limited to four at a gate. Other members must remain at least 200 yards from the entrance. The four lonely pickets at a refinery employing 1,500 must be at least 20 feet apart from each other.

Later, the Oil Workers Intl. Union had the injunction dissolved by another superior court judge when it was shown that there was literally nothing to restrain, that the Shell plant at Martinez was closed tighter than a drum, that there were no scabs clamoring to enter the cold plant.

Nevertheless this was the pattern for all subsequent injunctions granted by a dozen different superior court judges in all parts of the state. These injunctions varied only in the number of pickets permitted; some judges deemed four too many, and allowed two or three.

Incidently, this was the only injunction dissolved in the two months' duration; and Shell got other injunctions to cover its plants.

On Sept. 10, one week after the strike, Union Oil got a similar injunction from Judge Clarence M. Hanson in Los Angeles.

There was no hearing.

Neither OWIU nor its locals were notified of the company's action in seeking an injunction. The union read about these injunctions in the newspapers or found out about them when served on the picket lines.

JUDGE HANSON threw his heart into this injunction. He announced that for the slightest infraction of his injunction, he would deal out the maximum penalty—a $500 fine and five days in jail. No monkey business about jury trials, either. In California there are no juries in contempt cases and no appeals to a higher court.

After the Richmond injunction—granted by Judge Hanson a few days later—the International Union, Long Beach Local 128, all of its officers and all International Representatives were cited in contempt cases totalling 1,380 counts.

Under Judge Hanson's threat, these cases would cost the union and its members $640,000 and 6,900 days in jail.

In all, 21 injunctions have been obtained by the Big Six, tying up picketing in every refinery, oil field and pipe line in the state.

So far 310 union oil workers have been arrested for picketing activities and are under criminal charges that result in jail sentences and onerous fines.

There have been about 1,500 contempt citations. There are 60 such citations pending against Intl. Pres. O. A. Knight, Intl. Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley and Intl. Sec. T. M. McCormick, each. McCormick has not even been in California in recent months.

4. Bust the Union Financially

The Oil Workers Intl. Union is being sued for over $28,000,000 for daring to call a strike on the Big Six.

This figure was as of Oct. 30. This sum increases at the rate of $360,000 a day.

But this is only the half of it. Many of the companies have sued for "indefinite" amounts, alleging that their losses are so gigantic that they are unable to estimate them. At the same time publicity is fed to the plant papers that oil industry operations are "about normal."

These damages claims are filed against OWIU, its locals and its members—everybody in the union.

5. 'John Doe' Technique

These fantastic injunctions and damage suits take on a typical California razzle-dazzle. In addition to naming all union officers, they name thousands of "Does."

One suit named "Does 1 to 2,000, inclusive," the "Does" being unidentified union members. Such citations were printed en masse and passed out like handbills on picket lines by process-servers. Cameramen stood by to take pictures of the pickets as the citations were thrust into their hands, thus establishing identity and proof of service.

6. Back-To-Work

All newspapers received publicity handouts saying that the Wilmington plant would reopen "next Monday." These handouts were duly reproduced with appropriate headlines on the front pages of the papers. Came Monday, the newspapers announced solemnly that the Wilmington plant had "opened." A few days later the same papers followed up with a company handout to the effect that production in the Wilmington plant is "75% of normal."

"Seventy-five per cent" seemed to be a favorite figure, covering a patch of refinery equipment staring at a handful of supervisory employes and trainees.

In advance of the strike the Big Six had built up huge reserves of low-grade gasoline. This they have been unloading on the public to the disgust of clattering motors and cursing motorists.

7. "We Resign"

Unable to produce high-test gasoline, the Big Six had no trouble in mass-producing "union resignation" forms for distribution among striking employes. These were circulated personally by foremen in door to door visits. These visits were invariably "friendly"—the foremen said they didn't have a thing against the union, the boys needed more money of course, but how about that pension? The company likes you, Jim, and doesn't want to see you out on the end of a limb.

Company stooges filtered into union halls and engaged in backyard talks with strikers, skillfully introducing defeatist rumors. Scabbing with the tongue was so widespread that the word "scabwag" was invented to cover the type of character.

With the papers blaring forth back-to-work propaganda, company personnel spread the old standby rumors that strikers would lose seniority, pensions and other benefits.

And here's another company "contribution" to the conduct of union affairs. In an effort to pack group meetings with pro-company stooges, the companies carried on advertising campaigns for union meetings!

For example, a group strongly suspected of stooge sentiments approached the chairman of the Shell unit in Long Beach to suggest a meeting. The chairman said that certainly he and the other officers were happy to meet with any and all members at any time.

Soon every Shell employe in the group received a mimeographed postcard advertising the meeting. These cards went to members and non-members alike. They were addressed from Addressograph stencils. They were NOT addressed from the union's file of stencils. Who else would WARNING!

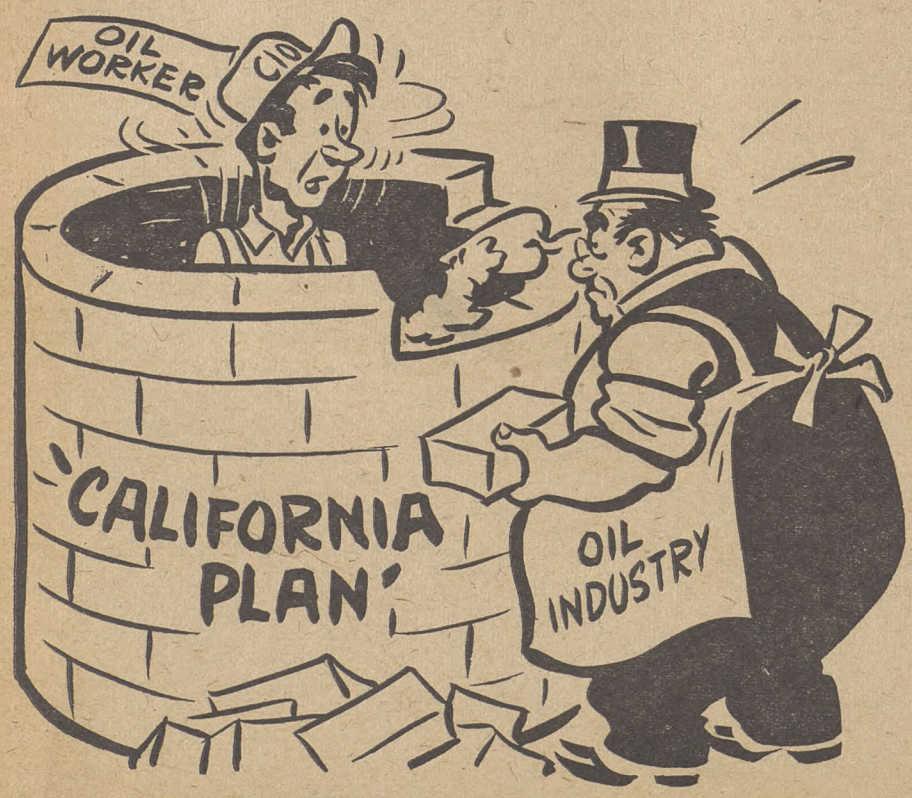
The California Plan is a corporation plan to smash unions. It is a carefully-developed plan, worked out by corporation lawyers and requiring the cooperation of company-minded city officials.

If Tom Dewey had been elected and reactionary political machines established in many of the 48 states, the California Plan would have been the most dangerous threat to labor since the similar Mohawk Valley Plan of 10 years ago, union leaders say.

Thanks to labor's overwhelming victory at the polls, the immediate danger apparently has been averted. The day after elections, some of the companies signed up with the unions; others are still fighting their workers. Nevertheless, there's plenty of chance that some corporation in your city may develop its own version of the "California Plan" to use against its unions.

Read this detailed story of how the California Plan was used against striking CIO oil workers—and remember it COULD happen in your city, against your union. Read it—and be prepared.



The California Plan

have such a set of stencils—except the company?

Incidentally, the plan didn't work. Although this crowd-packing trick was tried in the big Shell groups at Long Beach and Martinez, in both meetings the people present voted overwhelmingly to stick solidly behind the strike.

8. Buying Public Opinion

Unions have men, corporations have dollars. The Big Six has assets running into the billions of dollars.

So in one phase of the battle of Big Six against the Oil Workers Intl. Union, the oil trust wins hands down. That is in buying newspaper space. Full page ads run in all the leading California papers and in the oil country papers.

There are no bones made about the unity of the oil monopoly. All ads are signed jointly by all companies. The Big Six won't talk jointly with the union, insisting on separate negotiations, but they're mighty ready to talk to the public jointly.

The ads give company claims of oil production; carry threats against striking employes; attempt to inflame public opinion against "violence" of strikers (men fighting for their jobs).

In this business the Oil Workers Intl. Union has no chance. A single Big Six blast in the papers grosses $50,000 to the newspaper owners, who are the buddies of the Big Six anyway.

9. Violence Provoked

Hogging the newspaper headlines during much of the strike have been stories about alleged strike violence. What brought about the few incidents of violence which did occur?

The answer is: Provocation and aggravation. Man slapped and mistreated showed red-blooded rebellion.

When companies wanted back-to-work movements, did they try to quietly slip their scabs through the court-thinned picket lines, with a minimum of irritation to all parties concerned? No. They advertised the back-to-work movement well in advance. They flaunted their finky plans in the face of the strikers fighting for bread on the tables.

Back-to-work movements were staged en masse. Mobs of scabs were lined up to "crash" the two-, three-, and four-man picket lines. Literally hundreds of gun-toting, billy-wielding cops were dispatched to the gates to "protect" these scabs.

There was shoving from the cops. Pickets were run down by scab-driven cars. In one instance a woman picket was struck by a fink car and carried far into the Richfield plant, clinging to the bumper to avoid mutilation under the wheels. So there were some incidents. What do you expect?

10. Papers Like "Violence"

War, murder, sex and violence are the real loves of America's press lords. Such stories may not build up the morale of a people, but they build circulation.

So naturally most of the California newspapers, reinforced by oil trust advertising, have been at the service of the corporation. And "violence" is their dish.

The picture of the $15,000,000,000 California oil trust being assaulted and bruised and manhandled by their employes is a hard one to draw. But not for the Los Angeles Times, which for 40 years has carried on a high-powered campaign to blast all unions—CIO, AFL and what-have-you.

Perhaps it couldn't happen in most parts of the country. But in California, most newspapers have taken hand-outs from publicity agents of the Big Six, accusing their employes of violence. Most newspapers elsewhere insist on getting such news from police blotters. But not in California.

And when the lone publicity representative of Oil Workers Intl. Union protested this unabashed practice, the newspapers hemmed and hawed—but did not retract. On the other hand, when OWIU's publicity department turned over authenticated instances of violence against the union's members, the newspapers either ignored the facts or played them down on Page 31.

11. Break the Treasury

Money makes the mare go round. And the oil trust has the resources to whip the mare. The Big Six works it on advertising and they work it on lawyers.

The Big Six has scores of lawyers on its payrolls for the sole purpose of harassing the union oil workers. The union has exactly one lawyer on its staff—all that it can afford.

Obviously the union's counsel can't be in half a dozen places at one time defending cases brought by Big Six. Obviously it's pretty unfair to the union to have to bring witnesses and union officials 300 miles to answer charges that may have no validity whatsoever. But it happens. Big Six files charges, for instance, in Santa Rosa, hundreds of miles from the Los Angeles Oil Basin, and the union is under the heavy burden of sending its officers and witnesses there for a protracted hearing.

Hundreds of strikers have been arrested. The bail bonds run over $100,000, on which there is not only a 4% commission to be paid immediately, but a minimum bail bond fee of $10, no matter how slight the charge.

If the Oil Workers Union had to rely on its own resources, obviously hundreds of members would face court without protection of any kind. Only the help of CIO nationally has prevented this.

12. Taft-Hartley's NLRB

It's heads you lose, tails I win, when a union goes to the National Labor Relations Board today.

Big Six asked a federal injunction under Taft-Hartley to restrain union members from doing what they can't do anyway under state court injunctions. The federal judge sitting in San Francisco inquired if OWIU had taken a firm stand against "violence."

In evidence were submitted telegrams from President O. A. Knight to local unions urging strict compliance with injunctions. Ah ha, said the judge, that established the responsibility of OWIU for the acts of all its members!

Five of the Big Six have filed for federal Taft-Hartley injunctions. Their virtue to the Big Six over state court injunctions is that the sky is the limit on fines. There is no maximum federal fine, as John L. Lewis found out in the United Mine Workers case.

George E. Arthur was secretary of OWIU's West Side local in the sunburned oil fields of the San Joaquin Valley—the kind of devoted union man to whom the union is the breath of life. He was also an employe of Tide Water Associated—one of the Big Six.

When he and four fellow-workers living in company houses refused to scab, Tide Water Associated threw armed guards around their homes. They refused to let friends enter the houses. They turned back the men's ministers, and even the neighbors' children who just wanted to play with the strikers' kids.

The company cut off the water supply. OWIU filed unfair labor practice charges with the labor board. After three weeks of investigation, the labor board upheld the union's charges but refused to seek a Taft-Hartley injunction against Tide Water Associated.

By then it was too late for George Arthur. Brooding over what was happening in this Oil Trust corner of free America, Arthur went mad in the isolation of the concentration camp, murdered his wife, and nearly killed his two smaller children, and then blew out his brains.

The Big Six, with the assistance of NLRB had scored another victory over the union.

13. Fire Most Militant

Sticking point in repeated negotiations between the Big Six and the union has been the reinstatement of union members against whom charges have been filed under injunctions. The oil corporations insist that strikers charged with contempt are guilty and will not be rehired. They have named hundreds of union members—by pure coincidence they happen to be the officers, leaders, active strikers—whom they say they will never, never re-employ.

In negotiations, each company has simply stated that "there are certain employes whom we will not allow to resume employment."

"Which employes?" asked the union negotiators.

"Those guilty of violence," said the management spokesmen.

"Who are they?" persisted the unionists.

"We don't care to say," replied management.

"How shall we determine guilt of violence?"

"We shall not rehire those who, in the company's opinion are guilty," was the adamant industry stand.

The "violence" bludgeon is of course one-way. Company supervisors and stooges whom the union holds guilty of violence are on the job nevertheless. In this, as in so many cases, it matters whose ox is gored.

14. Divide and Conquer

Oil is produced in isolated oil fields strung out over hundreds of square miles. It is piped in lines from distant points to the refinery areas in the Los Angeles and San Francisco Bay areas.

Under the concentrated pressure and terror of Big Six, some of the isolated union groups have gone back to work.

So now Big Six is refusing to negotiate for production and pipe line groups represented in present agreements. They are demanding that the strong refinery groups sacrifice their brothers in the fields and on the pipe lines as a condition of bargaining.

In some fields the Big Six have wheeled in Taft-Hartley de-certification election proceedings.

★ ★ ★

This is the picture of the hatchet job done on a union which has complied with all the hateful provisions of Taft-Hartley.

It happened to the Oil Workers Intl. Union. Unless the record is studied carefully and labor-hating employers' California Plan of union-busting is met successfully, it will be the record of what can happen to your union.

With the iron determination of oil workers' stout hearts and clear heads, the California Plan can be beaten—if other unions and workers will provide the sinews of support to the heroic California oil workers.

'Dough, Dough, Dough' Is Oil Firms' Theme

WEST COAST oil companies have been fighting their CIO union workers during one of the most lush profit periods in U. S. history.

Standard Oil of California pulled in $117,073,083 in net profits—after taxes—during the first nine months of 1948.

The profits were 77% higher than during the same months in 1947.

But these figures don't tell the whole story of Standard-of-California's money-making spree.

They don't include, for instance, its tremendous profit take from Arabian-American Oil Co., which operates big fields in the Middle East. The firm is jointly owned by Standard and the Texas Co. It's well known that millions in profits are being made out of these East-Asian oil operations.

Despite the millions in the bank and in the hands of stockholders, Standard has flatly refused to grant the union's original demands—and it has spent huge sums on strike-breaking, public relations, and legal fees to help break the CIO strike.

FIRST major break in the companies' ranks came on Nov. 3—the day Tom Dewey learned he wouldn't be President. Four of the companies signed with the union for some of the plants.

As a result, about half the strikers—some 7,500—won back their jobs and 12½ cents an hour wage increases.

But the strike was still in progress for about 7,500 others. Still on strike were Union Oil (which publishes pretty newspaper ads to show how low its profits "really" are); Richfield; Tidewater's plants near San Francisco, in the San Joaquin Valley, and at Los Angeles harbor; and Standard Oil's Richmond refinery.

The 12½-cent increase, which was won in negotiations, is retroactive to July 3.

Three of the firms—Texas, Tidewater and Shell—agreed to withdraw their multi-million dollar legal suits against the union. Standard hasn't yet agreed to that.

Kentucky CIO Urges Removal Of Denham

TWO-HUNDRED delegates to the annual Kentucky CIO Council convention urged the removal of Robert N. Denham as Natl. Labor Relations Board general counsel.

Meeting at Ashland on Oct. 31, the state body by acclamation returned Steelworkers District 25 Director Al Whitehouse to the Council presidency for his eighth term. Elected with him for two-year terms were the following vice-presidents:

William H. Beatty, Louisville; Arthur Bishop, Covington; Alva Bush, Ashland; Leon Carney, Paducah; Raymond Catlett, Louisville; Ernie Dunaway, South Portsmouth; R. E. Lyon, Louisville; John E. Meeks, Louisville; Hagar Patton, Catlettsburg; Emma Sauer, Louisville, and Lillian Yadon, Louisville.

Whitehouse reviewed the accomplishments of the previous year, noting that CIO unions in the state had enjoyed steady growth and were largely responsible for the defeat of restrictive state labor legislation. Council Secy.-Treas. Fred Foss reported enactment of several bills favorable to labor passed, he said, at the instance of the unions.

Among convention speakers were Phil Clowes, assistant director of the CIO Organizing Committee; R. J. Thomas, Natl. CIO assistant organizational director; John Brophy, director of CIO councils; James Robb, Steelworkers District 30 director; George L-P. Weaver, director, CIO anti-discrimination committee; George C. Burton, state commissioner of industrial relations; William B. Taylor, CIO regional director; Martin Wagner, executive director, Louisville Labor-Management Committee, and Nick Marcella, chairman, Clothing Workers Louisville Joint Board.

Supplementing the Council's endorsement of the Truman-Barkley candidacies, Whitehouse broadcast a radio appeal from the convention in which he urged Kentuckians to cast a heavy vote and to stand by the party which, he said, had given wage earners "immeasureable benefits" in social legislation.

Delegates pledged support for the Lake Erie-Ohio River waterway, endorsed the European Recovery Program, sought unemployment insurance for strikers, commended the Natl. CIO stand on Americanism and censured left-wing CIO unions for failure to follow Natl. CIO policy.

Walter Reuther Undergoes Operation

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers is making a rapid recovery from an operation performed at Duke University Hospital at Durham, N. C., last week. His physicians reported a highly successful operation intended to save the union president's use of his arm, shattered by a would-be assassin's bullet last April. Reuther expects to attend the CIO's national convention later this month in Portland, Ore.

HONOR SEN. WAGNER: Robert F. Wagner, Jr., speaking in behalf of his father—Sen. Robert Wagner (D., N. Y.)—voices thanks for the annual CIO citation presented to his father by the CIO Community Services Committee. Award noted Sen. Wagner's contribution to health and welfare of the American people. Wagner's speech, delivered at CIO banquet in New York, was applauded by CIO Pres. Murray (left) and Irving Abramson, chairman of CIO-CSC.

Chest Aids Strikers If Labor Is On Board

RICHMOND, Calif. is just 35 miles away from San Francisco and its side-kick city, Oakland.

For a town of 23,642 population, Richmond has a good-sized CIO membership, most of whom, as oil workers and longshoremen, are pounding the pavement right now.

In San Francisco and Oakland, oil workers and longshoremen are manning picket lines too.

And in all three cities these men who are strikers today have in past years contributed generously to the Community Chest and vigorously pushed the Red Feather campaign within their locals.

Now that the oil workers and longshoremen are themselves in need of relief assistance, they are learning first-hand what the CIO's Community Services Committee, under Leo Perlis, has meant by hammering away on the importance of labor representation on local Community Chest boards.

That labor representation has made the difference between the aid given strikers by the San Francisco and Oakland Red Feather agencies and the "hands off policy" of the Richmond Chest.

LABOR isn't represented on the Richmond Community Chest board; the oil companies are. Soon after the oil workers walked out, the town's merchants received a letter from the Chamber of Commerce, urging them not to assist the strikers.

Perhaps the C of C's campaign took in the Community Chest; perhaps not. All the oil workers know is that when their strike relief committee approached the Chest, they were accorded the old "play dumb" treatment. The Chest, they were told, is just a funds-collecting outfit for its member agencies. It couldn't help the strikers.

Meanwhile, just 35 miles away, the Oakland and San Francisco Chests, both with full-time labor representatives on the Boards, were cooperating with the unions. Without discrimination, strikers were receiving assistance the same as any other needy in town.

BUT in Richmond, only one striker's family has been helped by a Community Chest agency, according to Mrs. Irene Kwas, director of the Alameda CIO Council's veterans and welfare bureau. That agency, the Catholic Aid Society

Pres. Harry Sayre, of the CIO Paperworkers, reports an NLRB election held at the Hoague-Sprague Co., Lynn, Mass. The results were 314 for the union, 6 opposed. The Paperworkers also defeated an attempted raid by the AFL Brotherhood of Papermakers at the Sangamon Paper Mills, Eaton, Ind. Area Director Nicholas Vrataric was in charge. The following Union Shop elections have been won by the Paperworkers:

Beach & Arthur Paper Co., Modena, Pa., 78 yes, 2 no; Container Corp. of America, Anderson, Ind. 198 yes, 4 no. Hinde & Dauch Paper Co., Sandusky, Ohio, 102 yes, 4 no. Hinde & Dauch Paper Co., Gloucester, N. J., 250 yes, 3 no. Gross Photo Supply Co., Toledo, Ohio, 42 yes, 2 no. Hub Folding Box Co., Boston, Mass., 44 yes, 2 no. Minot Folding Box Co. 11 yes, 1 no.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN Van A. Bittner, National Director of the CIO Organizing Committee, last week reported 18 more victories for the Southern Drive. Four of the wins were for Packinghouse, two each for Wood, Auto, Chemical and Stone & Allied. One each went to Rubber, Brewery, Ship, Oil, Textile and Hosiery.

Tennessee Director Paul R. Christopher reports: Lookout Oil and Refinery Co., Chattanooga, Packinghouse Workers-CIO, 105, independent union, 26; Firestone Warehouses, Memphis, URW-CIO, 24, against 4; General Motors (truck division) Memphis, UAW-CIO, 17, against 11; General Motors (parts division) Memphis, UAW-CIO, 25, against, 10; American Zinc Co., Mascot, New Market and Jefferson City, UGC&CW-CIO, 280, IUMSWA-CIO, 120, independent, 83.

Georgia Director Charles H. * * * * * * * * *

A GREAT VICTORY The wisdom of the steps taken by the CIO is proved in the results of this presidential election. The newspapers, editorial writers, columnists, radio commentators, and the so-called public opinion polls, said Truman could not win and Dewey was a sure victor. The New York Journal of Commerce, so convinced of this, came out with glaring headlines proclaiming Dewey victor and urging enforcement of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Added on to these things was the split of the Dixiecrats and the attempt to divide the labor movement by the Third Party. Regardless of all this, the CIO endorsed President Truman and all the liberal candidates. It carried its fight to the membership and the public and was supported by the big bulk of the officers and members of its affiliated unions. Win, lose, or draw, it stood pat. It had said, once the people understood the issues a decision would be on the side of right.

Senator Howard McGrath, Chairman of the Democratic Committee, announced on the air that labor was one of the greatest contributing factors in this victory.

President Truman carried his fight forcefully and gallantly to the people. Some of the bosses of his own party told him they could not win with him. The CIO and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen said we could win with Truman. Jack Kroll, Chairman of the CIO Political Action Committee, consistently said that Truman was winning and would win.

It was a victory for the common man for social progress, civil rights, public housing, health, social security, price control, and most important to the labor movement, the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. The AFL, while not endorsing President Truman, worked with the CIO and the Brotherhoods to defeat the Taft-Hartley congressmen and Senators. It was a crushing defeat for the 80th Congress and the NAM, and their program to crucify labor. It demonstrated it had no such mandate from the people. The issues of the campaign must not be forgotten.

We must continue to organize now more than ever to improve the lot of workers and to improve the lot of the people throughout the nation. We must continue to activize our membership that we have. We must drive on organizing more and more workers, obtaining more and more contracts. This responsibility is ours, all of us.

The victory at the polls, again demonstrates President Murray's wisdom and statesmanship. Our officers and membership of all our organizations supporting CIO policy, fought and worked untiringly in this campaign. I salute them all. Working men and women and the housewives, have proved that they can resist all the powerful forces of greed, power and propaganda, and that democracy can work. You have given hope to the people everywhere.

AT DONORA, PENNA.

Zinc Fumes Blamed In Death Of 19 People

By FRED ROSS

THIS is a tale of terror. It is a tale like Edgar Allan Poe would tell—full of stalking death.

It is a tale of smog that hovered over the industrial town of Donora in Southwestern Pennsylvania—killing 19 persons, sending scores of people to hospitals and causing hundreds to flee terror-stricken from the borough.

After Burgess Chamberon and several physicians cited sulphuric acid fumes from the Donora zinc plant of the American Steel & Wire Co. as a possible cause of the tragedy, officials closed the plant.

(Frank Burke, director of safety and health of the CIO Steelworkers, said that the closing of the plant was not entirely voluntary inasmuch as the Pennsylvania Health Department had ordered it closed until further notice, pending an investigation.)

For four days the streets of the town were in semi-darkness due to the smog. Young and old coughed and spat. Children suffered from upset stomachs and mothers took them home to try to protect them from the all-prevailing smog. The youngest person reported afflicted with respiratory disorder was 4½ months old.

DEATH began to strike Friday night (Oct. 29). Within hours, the ASWC's emergency hospital was filled with choking patients. Oxygen and other medical supplies were rushed from adjoining towns to the aid of persons stricken in their homes.

With death stalking the streets, others were taken to the town's community center, which was converted into a hospital, to the Charleroi-Monessen and Monongahela Hospitals and to hospitals in other nearby towns.

James Lau, superintendent of the Charleroi-Monessen Hospital, drove through the fog to Pittsburgh to get more oxygen tanks when the hospital's supply of the life-saving gas began to run low.

An estimated 300 persons fled from the borough to escape the choking smog.

Eight of the town's eleven physicians—three of them were ill—were kept busy night and day.

Dr. William J. Rongaus, physician of the Donora Board of Health, said that as he went from house to house on one side of a street "giving injections, people on the other side of the street ran out and called for assistance.

"These people were desperate. They couldn't breathe. Not all of those who died were asthmatics, but the majority of deaths were of people who had previous chest illnesses."

Physicians said that many of the 19 died gasping for breath.

Relief in the form of rain stopped the death toll Sunday (Oct. 31).

L. J. WESTHAVE, general superintendent of the ASWC's Donora operations, said he doubted that zinc fumes had any connection with the deaths, an opinion shared by M. M. Neale, superintendent of the zinc works, who said:

"We have not shut down completely but we are going through a process of 'dead firing' during which no zinc smelting goes on at all and ore is not charged in the furnaces.

"We closed down merely to eliminate the fumes until an investigation can be completed. We thought it would be helpful and we don't believe our fumes are toxic."

(Investigations were being made by the Pennsylvania Health Dept., assisted by representatives of the Industrial Hygiene Division of the U. S. Public Health Service and by a firm employed by the company.)

Speaking at a meeting of the Donora borough council which became an old-fashioned town meeting, Burke and Eugene Maurice, director of Steelworkers' District 13, called for a thorough investigation.

Burke said he was fearful that an analysis of air taken by the Pennsylvania Health Department would not reveal the cause of the deaths because when it was made the zinc smelting operations had slowed down and atmospheric conditions had changed.

BURKE said that poisonous fumes resulted from the smelting of "the skimmings, and the residue from the pickling boxes used instead of zinc ore." He pointed out that poisonous sulphuric acid was present in the skimmings and the residue.

The company had been warned by the Forestry Department of Pennsylvania State College that its Donora operation endangered vegetation in the area, Burke declared.

Burke's contention that the zinc plant gave off poisonous fumes was shared by Dr. Sumner B. Ely, head of the Pittsburgh Bureau of Smoke Prevention. Dr. Ely was quoted in the Pittsburgh Press as saying that "the curious fact that more of the people severely affected lived within six to eight blocks of the plant" indicates that the fumes "must have something to do with this."

Dr. William Rongaus, a member of the Donora Board of Health, was more blunt than Dr. Ely. Dr. Rongaus said:

"I feel certain that gases from the zinc works are responsible for it (the smog). It's not right. It's plain murder. These people were murdered."

Smog Victim Treated in His Home

ASWC Ordered To Pay Damage

An Allegheny (Pa.) grand jury 14 years ago awarded damages against the American Steel & Wire Co. because of fumes from its Donora zinc plant, according to the Pittsburgh Press.

John Procz, Forward township, claimed that fumes, zinc dust, sediment vapor and poisonous gases from the mill had ruined his farm.

His heirs and relatives had asked $15,000. They were awarded $6,086.

3 Steelworkers Among Dead

At least three of the 19 fatally stricken by smog at Donora were active or retired members of Local 1758, CIO Steelworkers. They were John Cunningham, 63, active member; William Gardinier, 63, and Sowak Trubalas, 66, both retired. The local has authorized payment of death benefits of $300 each to their families, and is investigating death claims for two other disaster victims, according to Local 1758's Pres. Paul Johnson.

Offers $10,000

THE CIO Steelworkers have offered $10,000 to the Donora Borough Council to conduct an investigation into the causes of the deaths and sickness resulting from the smog and to fix the responsibility for the disaster.

The offer was made in a letter from Pres. Philip Murray and Sec-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers which was presented to the borough council by the union's District 13 Director Eugene Maurice. The letter said:

"It is the belief of the union that a separate and thorough study should be made, first to determine the cause and, secondly, to place the responsibility.

"It would be nothing short of criminal not to take steps now to see that this tragedy does not and cannot happen again."

PUNISHED: Because Joe Singletary was on strike in Rockingham, N. C., no doctor in that town would deliver Singletary baby for fear of retaliation by the Safie mill ers. So, a doctor from Wadesboro, 20 miles away, drove to Rockingham and delivered the child. Here, Mr. and Mrs. Singletary (he's a member of the CIO Textile Union) admire their child. Indict Thomas on Kickback Charge

One of the things that most people didn't expect was to see Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.) sitting firmly behind the eight-ball.

But that's where he—and his Un-American Activities Committee—are this week. And a good many people are wondering when, or if, he'll ever get out into the open for a long time to come.

Thomas—publicity-seeking head of the House Un-American Activities Comimttee until next January 5—was indicted by a federal grand jury in Washington 10 days ago. If convicted on all the charges, he would be liable to 32 years in prison and a $40,000 fine.

The beefy-faced New Jersey Congressman was charged with violating a "false claims statute" by taking salary "kickbacks" from three persons allegedly on his staff.

ALSO INDICTED: Helen Campbell, Rep. J. Parnell Thomas' former secretary, was indicted in the Federal district court at Washington, D. C., with Thomas on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the U. S. government.

New Jersey CIO Council officials, meanwhile, have called upon the 81st Congress to refuse to seat the state's most famous, if not most popular, Representative.

Council Pres. Carl Holderman gave this reason for his suggestion:

"Thomas is a man suspected of criminal intent; he has violated the basic concepts of our Constitution, and he has performed his duties with more attention to the resulting publicity than to his responsibility to the people of the United States."

The indictment said that during a 15-year period starting in 1930, Thomas "unlawfully, knowingly and wilfully combined, conspired and confederated" to defraud the U. S. government of money.

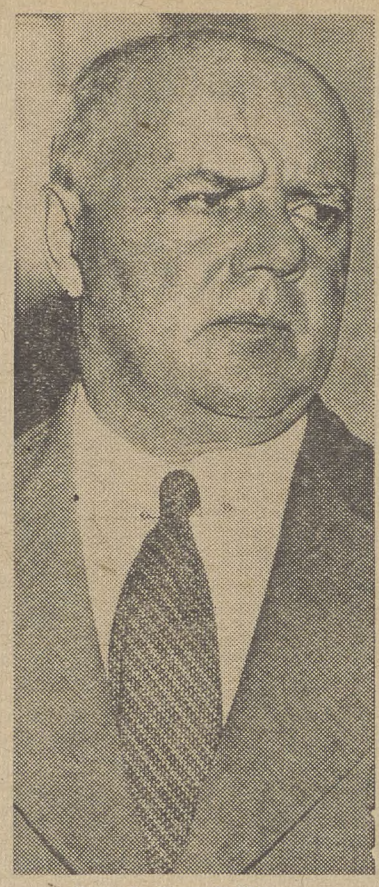
PURPOSE of the conspiracy, the indictment said, was to get pay checks to two women who were not bona-fide employes because "they would not perform any work or services." Indicted with the Jersey Congressman was Miss Helen Campbell, a former secretary of Thomas.

A tip-off to what was coming developed when Thomas declined to testify before the grand jury on constitutional grounds that to do so might incriminate him.

It was the same ground used by numerous witnesses hauled before the Un-American Activities Committee during Thomas' gaudy two-year chairmanship. Unlike the Congressman, however, the wittnesses had no guaranty of a fair trial before judge and jury.

Many of the people whose name Thomas has thrown into the headlines are still waiting for a chance to answer the charges.

One of these is Dr. Edward U. Condon, whom a Thomas committee report once described as "the weakest link in our atomic security chain." Condon, a scientist of high repute, has tried again and again to answer the accusation before the committee, but has been stalled.



Rep. J. Parnell Thomas
Shoe's on Other Foot

New Dealers are worried that the Committee's leadership, under seniority rules, will go to Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.), a close associate of Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.), who is also a member of the group.

Rep. Thomas is scheduled to be arraigned in Washington Nov. 16, with trial to follow some time later.

CIO Invites Truman To Parley

PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN has been invited to address CIO's tenth convention, which opens in Portland, Oregon, on Nov. 22.

The invitation was extended to the President by CIO Pres. Murray and was delivered to the White House just before the President left for his Key West vacation.

In his letter, CIO Pres. Murray wrote:

"You are aware, I am sure, of the deep satisfaction which the members of the CIO have derived from your splendid campaign and from your re-election. The program which you carried so effectively to the people of this country during that campaign was the program which the CIO wholeheartedly endorsed and it was one which evoked the enthusiastic support of the members of our unions.

"It would, therefore, provide us inestimable pleasure to have you address our Tenth Constitutional Convention. I know that your words will be greeted with enthusiasm."

SESSIONS of the convention will be held at the big Masonic Temple in Portland.

This week pre-convention activities get started in the northwest city. CIO's Executive Board will meet Wednesday. Nov. 17, and a number of CIO committees will be assembling for business during the latter part of the week.

One of the principal items on the Board's agenda is a report due to be made by a three-man committee which held hearings on charges against the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

Complaints against the CIO Council in the nation's largest city were filed by officials of the New York State Council and by representatives of a number of international unions. They accused the council of failure to follow CIO policy, of unauthorized political activities, and of interference with the affairs of national unions.

Hearings were held for two days in Washington, last month, with officials of the council and "prosecution witnesses" appearing before the three-man panel named by CIO Pres. Murray.

UOPWA Board Votes To Comply With T-H

CIO Office & Professional Workers locals are voting this week on whether to empower their international officers to file Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavits and financial reports.

Proposal to comply with the T-H requirements was made by the union's executive board last week, reversing its previous policy.

A few weeks before the Board's action, the UOPWA membership voted in a referendum to continue the policy of non-compliance recommended by the executive officers and adopted by the convention last March.

The Board also recommended abolition of the three vice presidencies and accepted the resignation of Sec.-Treas. John Stanley. Stanley was appointed director of organization. The three vice presidents were named division heads, and Bernard J. Mooney, formerly upstate New York Regional director, was named secretary-treasurer.

Along with the policy change, locals will vote on the constitutional amendment abolishing the offices of vice-president. If approved, only the president and secretary-treasurer would be required to file affidavits.

In explaining its policy reversal on the heels of a referendum, the resolution stated: "The referendum, although it reaffirmed the policy of our union, showed a large minority were for compliance. Events since that time indicate that the companies and their agents in our ranks have succeeded to some degree in confusing sections of our membership and diverting their attention from the main objective—fighting the companies to ensure decent collective bargaining and higher standards for the members of our union."

Prudential and Metropolitan insurance companies refused to bargain with the union.

Both companies used as their excuse for refusing to bargain the fact that the union's officers had not signed T-H affidavits and that other unions are seeking representation rights.

Prudential has petitioned for NLRB election.

Economic Outlook Says

Fewer U. S. Families Able To Save

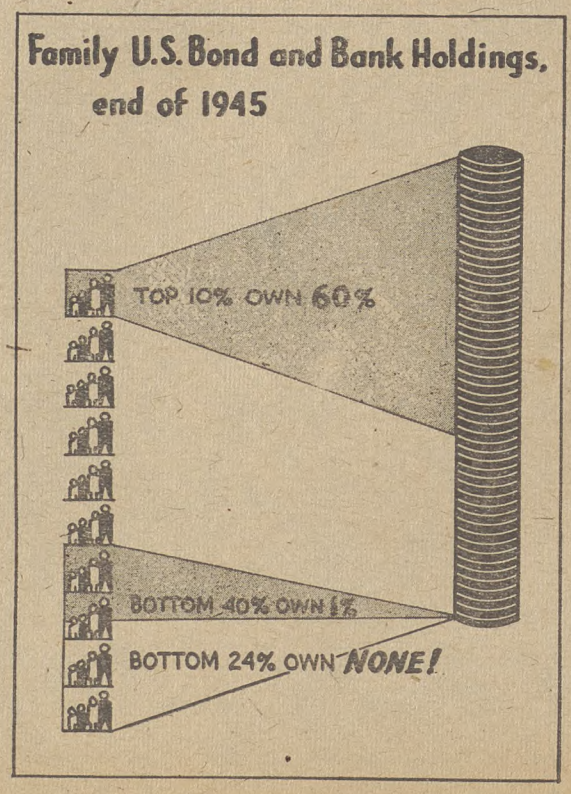
THE CIO Economic Outlook has warned that millions of American families have been forced to use all their savings, and that the "ability to save and the ownership of accumulated savings" is being confined to fewer American families.

Since Congress scuttled OPA, the Outlook said, "five to six million American families have cashed their last U. S. bonds. Among families who earn less than $5,000 a year, the rate of 'dis-saving' (spending more than you earn), has been rapidly rising . . . Today, only the top families are substantial savers."

The Outlook said that voters in the November elections knew that the Republican 80th Congress "had enabled the wealthy to increase their savings," and they voted for President Truman and Democratic Congressional candidates in order to get "wise economic policies that benefit the mass of American people."

The share of savings held by the top-10% income bracket has risen from 46% in 1945 to 77% in 1947, the Outlook said.

While this concentration of savings ownership has been taking place, some 13,500,000 families used up about $11 million in savings, and another 4 million families—"largely . . . unskilled and aged persons"—had no savings nor credit standing on which to draw, the Outlook noted.



ACLU Protests Cory Ruling

The American Civil Liberties Union has protested an NLRB trial examiner's ruling in the Cory Corp. (Chicago) case which held the CIO Electrical Workers guilty of an unfair labor practice for peaceful mass picketing. The civil liberties group said that it is asking NLRB to reconsider the case.

At the same time the ACLU declared that it fears there is a dangerous trend developing to consider picketing "coercion" rather than the legitimate exercise of free speech.

While reiterating its position that picketing which denies access to a struck plant is illegal, and not an exercise of free speech, the ACLU pointed out that there was no question of improper conduct raised against the Cory strikers.

Labor Secy. Tobin:

PREDICTS PROMPT REPEAL OF T-H

Secy Tobin: Death For T-H

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IF LABOR Secy. Maurice J. Tobin is still batting 1.000 as a prognosticator, repeal of Taft-Hartley is a surety and it will be "prompt and swift."

That was the Secretary's prediction at his first press conference following the election. One of the few men in high public office who predicted Pres. Truman's re-election, Tobin said, "I think there's a mandate for repeal of the (T-H) Law." He said it was one of the main planks in the Democratic platform and in Truman's campaign. "I think the people understood that when they voted."

He described the law as "unfairly slanted against the American worker."

Asked about chances for passage of the repeal measure, since a sizeable number who voted for T-H still remain in both houses, Tobin said he knew of "quite of number" who have changed their mind.

The President's State of the Union message to Congress in January will urge repeal of Taft-Hartley, Tobin predicted.

Approval of a higher minimum wage bill by the new congress was also foreseen by Tobin. Another matter close to his heart—the Labor Dept. appropriations—also stands to fare better in the 81st Congress. The previous Republican Congress slashed the Department's appropriation so as to impair the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and reduce effectiveness of the Department's administration of the Wages & Hours Act, Tobin stated. An increased appropriation would afford workers more protection against violators of the Wages & Hours Act and increase the services of BLS., he said.

IN THIS interim period between the election and resumption of Congress in January, Tobin was not the only one speculating on what the 81st Congress will do. The Nation's Capital was swarming with rumors, bets and guesses as to how much of the President's program would be able to get through.

Truman's civil rights program was given the toughest sledding by most guessers. Although the GOP was committed in its 1944 platform to a civil rights program, Republicans in both houses combined last year with Southern Democrats to stymie the anti-poll tax, anti-lynching and Federal Fair Employment Practices bills.

In the 81st Congress, the votes of Republicans, along with those of liberal Democrats, would be required to override the objections of Southern Democrats.

Success of the President's program may hinge largely on the House Rules committee, which, under the chairmanship last session of GOP Rep. Leo Allen, Illinois, hogtied the housing bill and other liberal measures. What the committee lineup will be when the Democrats reorganize the committee is anybody's guess.

Chances for passage of a comprehensive housing bill seemed to most Washington observers fairly good. Last year, after Senate approval and with a majority of House members said to be committed to the bill, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill remained in the House Banking & Currency and then in the House Rules committee until the end of the session.

Next session not only housing, but such legislation as taxes, price control, and rent control—all of which must first clear the Banking & Currency Committee—will stand a better chance under the committee chairmanship of Kentucky Rep. Brent Spence.

NLRB Rules

Union Shop Illegal Without Election

TWO NLRB decisions last week placed in jeopardy all union security clauses put in operation without benefit of an NLRB union shop election and paved the way for wholesale inter-union raids.

Immediately hit by the rulings were the CIO Steelworkers at the C. Hager & Sons Mfg. Co., St. Louis, Mo., and the CIO Electrical Workers at General Electric's San Jose, Calif., plant.

The Steelworkers case arose from a petition by the International Association of Machinists for an election at the plant. The CIO union had signed a union shop agreement on Aug. 22, 1947, the date Taft-Hartley became effective, without first seeking an NLRB poll or requiring dues checkoff cards.

The Board ruled that the union shop clause in the agreement is illegal and ordered an election as requested by the IAM. The poll is to be held in 30 days, with the Steelworkers barred from the ballot. Philip Murray and other Steelworkers officials have refused to sign the non-communist affidavits.

In the UE case, the Board overruled both the company and the union, who argued that their contract was signed on April 1, 1946, before Taft-Hartley became law. The agreement, they said, automatically renewed itself on Jan. 1, 1948, thus preventing an NLRB representation election until the contract's expiration.

The Board ignored these arguments, ruled the maintenance-of-membership contract illegal, and ordered an election in 30 days. The petitioning IAM will appear on the ballot. UE, a non-complying union, will be barred.

Another NLRB ruling has added such picketline calls as "I'll crack your head" or "beat hell out of you" to the Taft-Hartley list of "don'ts." This case involved an independent committee of shoe workers at the Perry-Norvell Shoe Co., Huntingdon, W. Va., and the AFL Boot and Shoe workers.

The independent committee had launched a strike in an effort to oust the AFL group, which had held a contract with the company without ever having held an election to determine the preferred bargaining agent.

Overruling the AFL's complaint, the Board found it legal to strike for recognition where no union has been certified by the NLRB, but ordered the strikers to "cease and desist" from pushing or threatening non-strikers.

Wages Up 30%, Prices 35%

Despite three post-war rounds of increases, wages are still lagging behind the cost-of-living, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports.

Although factory workers' pay increased an average of 30% since V-J Day, BLS said, "rising prices have more than offset the increases in gross weekly and hourly earnings, and have largely cancelled out the advance in wage rates."

In comparison with the 30% pay increase, the consumers' price index for moderate income families in large cities rose about 35% in the same 3-year period, BLS noted.

Sour Grapes

The Scripps-Howard Washington News, two days after election:

"Incidentally, we suspect that more union members than ever before refused to tell pollsters how they intended to vote. That may have accounted for the big 'undecided' figure in the polls—the figure which, as the surprised Dr. Gallup has pointed out, now appears so largely in the Truman-Barkley column."

Supreme Court To Rule On T-H Affidavit Clause

THE U. S. Supreme Court has agreed to review the "non-Communist affidavit" of the Taft-Hartley Law.

The ruling will be on the language of Sec. 9 (h) of the law, which requires that all international and local officers—as defined in union constitution and by-laws — must sign affidavits declaring they are not Communists before their union or local can use the services of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The case came to the Supreme Court as a result of a 2-1 ruling of a special Federal District Court in New York which sustained a ruling of an NLRB regional director that the CIO American Communications Association could not be placed on a union election ballot because its officers had not signed the affidavits.

The ACA brief declared that:

(a) The section of the law abridges freedom of speech, assembly and press, guaranteed by the 1st and 5th Constitutional amendments; (b) the section is a bill of attainder (which is legislation aimed to penalize some particular person or persons, which is specifically barred by the constitution), and (c) the section is so vague as to conflict with the 5th Amendment.

A number of union officers, including CIO Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray, an avowed anti-Communist, have refused to sign the affidavits on the grounds they are an invasion of private and Constitutional rights.

Grasso To Attend UNESCO Meeting

Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso of the CIO Paper Workers sailed Nov. 6 from New York on the Queen Elizabeth to attend the third general conference of United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to be held in Beirut, Lebanon, Nov. 17-Dec. 11.

Grasso will attend the conference as a technical adviser on labor to the U. S. delegation, as substitute for National CIO Research & Education Director Stanley Ruttenberg who was unable to be present.

Dr. Milton Eisenhower, president of the University of Kansas, is head of the American delegation. Julian Huxley is director general of UNESCO.

CIO Joins In UE Law Fight Against Atomic Commission

THE CIO will join in the suit filed by the CIO Electrical Workers to obtain a reversal of an Atomic Energy Commission order which directed General Electric to cancel a collective bargaining contract with the electrical union. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in announcing the decision to join the suit, said the AEC order "goes beyond the requirements of security and is a dangerous precedent."

Murray said the CIO is "keenly aware of the security considerations which are necessarily involved in the activities of the Commission," and recognize the "imperative necessity for for protecting the highly secret work being done in atomic energy installations from disloyal and subversive persons."

But, he pointed out that workers engaged on atomic energy jobs have been security-cleared, and the CIO "is at a loss to understand" why breach of a union collective bargaining agreement is necessary.

"If the Atomic Energy Commission asserts this unprecedented power, then any other agency or government may likewise take it upon itself to command employers to violate collective bargaining agreements," Murray asserted.

The suit stemmed from two recent AEC orders. One, issued Sept. 27, ordered GE not to recognize the UE at its new Knolls II Atomic Power Laboratory, Schenectady. Another order, on Nov. 1, directed GE to withdraw recognition of the union at the Peak St., plant, Schenectady.

The union's suit asked for an injunction to restrain breach of the contract, and sought $1,000,000 damages from the corporation and the five members of AEC, David Lilienthal, Lewis Strauss, William Waymack, Robert Bacher and Sumner Pike.

REP. THOMAS INDICTED

Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, who "tried" many Americans in the headlines, is going to have his own trial in court.

He will have full opportunity to exercise the constitutional rights which he denied to others.

He will have a chance to confront his accusers and have them cross-questioned by an attorney of his own choosing.

That is as it should be.

However, if our judicial system operated along the lines of the House Un-American Activities Committee which Thomas heads, he already would be behind bars.

On numerous occasions the CIO News attacked Thomas and his committee. Our complaint was against the committee's tactics—not against its stated purpose of exposing disloyal Americans.

We, of course, did not know then that Thomas would be indicted by a Federal grand jury on charges of receiving salary "kickbacks" from his congressional employes and with filing fake pay vouchers with the House of Representatives.

So our feeling that Thomas was unfit to head a congressional committee did not result from any new "insight" with which we were endowed following his indictment.

The Nov. 2 election paved the way for Thomas' removal as committee chairman. The courts, if he is found guilty, will take care of his removal from public life.

Our chief concern is over the future of the House Un-American Activities Committee, its damnable theory of guilt by association and its habit of trying to serve as prosecutor, judge and jury.

The new house should either abolish this committee or see that it is reconstituted in such a manner that it is a model of the Americanism it is supposed to protect. ★★★

NO WONDER WE WONDER

A lot of people who had absolutely nothing to do with it are going around patting themselves on the backs and telling how they elected Truman to office and gave the Democrats control of the House and Senate.

Not content with taking full credit for the election, they are talking loudly about what "we're going to do" when the new Congress goes into session.

This causes us to wonder whether those who climbed on the bandwagon after Nov. 2 will soon be trying to sell the public the idea that Harry Truman didn't do any campaigning on his own.

We can't keep from wondering about some other things, too.

For example, we wonder whether employers will keep referring to the Look Magazine poll as proof that trade unionists really like the Taft-Hartley Act.

We wonder whether Dr. George Gallup and Elmo Roper will conduct a couple of scientific polls to determine what the American people think about polls.

We're curious about whether the political "experts" will remember just prior to the 1950 elections how it felt to eat crow in 1948.

We're curious, too, about the NAM's new propaganda line. There will have to be a new one, you know, and it can't have "victory" as its theme.

We wonder if there was anybody in the country—beside President Truman—who was happier on Nov. 3 than PAC Director Jack Kroll.

Excuse us, please, if we seem to rub it in a bit—but being on the winning side in an election is simply wonder-ful!

'Experts' Now 'Explaining' It

Many Interpretations of Democratic Victory As Poor As Predictions

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE guys who did the worst guessing about the election have been busy since Nov. 3 "explaining" what the Democratic victory means.

Some of the explanations are as fantastic as the prognostications which preceded them.

Maybe eating crow and "experting" at one and the same time caused part of the confusion.

A few of the crow-eaters came right out and said it: "A majority of the voters preferred Truman and his New Deal programs to Dewey and his Old Guard program."

But most of them didn't.

They quibbled and hemmed and hawed—and one of the nation's top anti-labor commentators blamed Dewey's defeat largely on his "cold personality."

LET'S leave Dewey's personality out of it and see if we can draw some sharp conclusions about the election.

One thing is completely clear:

The nation's voters kicked the extreme leftists in the teeth and swatted the extreme rightists in the seat of the pants. They expressed a preference for liberalism over conservatism.

The Progressives, established largely to fight the European Recovery Program, and the anti-civil rights Dixiecrats were soundly repudiated.

THE chief backers of the Dewey team—those who supplied the heavy financial "sugar"—belong to what can be loosely termed the "NAM crowd."

The most active supporters of the Democratic team were the trade unions. Farmers, though not organized politically on the same scale as labor, played an important role in electing Truman and other Democrats.

Thus the retention of Truman and the elimination of the GOP leadership of Congress can be listed as defeat for the brand of thinking which dominated the 80th Congress.

This defeat was a real victory for labor.

SOME of the commentators were saying by nightfall of Nov. 3 that the Truman victory was not a mandate for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

And some of them were saying privately that Truman's re-election meant the beginning of state socialism.

They were wrong on both scores.

Repeal of T-H was one of the important planks in the Democratic Party platform—and it was one of the points Truman stressed time and again throughout his campaign.

The party was pledged to the enactment of badly needed social legislation but not to substituting socialism for capitalism.

IF you want to sum up the election in broad, general terms you can do so by saying the nation preferred the New Deal to the things the Republicans wanted to substitute for it.

In expressing such a preference, the people thumbed their noses at the Communist Party-line tripe peddled by the Progressives and the bigotry peddled by the States Righters.

There are valuable lessons to be learned from the election results.

Truman got out from behind the political 8-ball by coming out slugging in favor of a pro-labor New Deal program.

Democrats gained control of Congress because the Republicans they replace were trying to emasculate the New Deal and hog-tie labor.

The Republicans lost because they were playing ball with the special interests and trying to keep the "average citizen" out of the game.

These are lessons that shouldn't be forgotten.

Guild Charges

Editor Said, Be My Spy

THE Denver (Colo.) Post unit of the CIO Newspaper Guild has filed charges with the NLRB accusing the Denver Post management of unfair labor practices, unit officers announced.

Two specific cases of intimidation and "an act of espionage" by Alexis McKinney, managing editor, are alleged to have been committed against Guild members.

In the complaint citing "espionage," McKinney is charged with having urged a Guild member to turn informer on other members of the union by furnishing management with confidential information about Guild meetings early in 1948. Names of all employes taking part in the discussions, and specific remarks made by them, were requested by McKinney, the complaint states.

Post management is further accused of having discriminated against one long-time Guild member by repeatedly demoting him. This employe, with approximately 20 years' service with the Post, has held many responsible editorial positions and his competency is considered beyond reproach by the Guild. In the last demotion suffered by this employe, the vacancy created by his removal was filled by the Post publisher's son, E. Palmer Hoyt Jr.

He Was Very Brave ---Or So It Seemed

HE was a mild-mannered, middle-aged man who looked like he would hardly know the meaning of violence.

She was an eager-beaver listener—a young woman who liked to discuss psychology.

They were talking about fear, and he was trying to convince her that men who appear to be meek but act tough frequently generate more fear than men who both look and act tough.

He wasn't getting very far with his argument—and then he told the following story:

THE CIO decided to attempt to organize a plant in a town that had the reputation of being extremely hostile to organized labor.

The organizers selected to handle the job were picked carefully. They were even-tempered, good-natured men—

The director of the local campaign knew that a couple of huskies were good insurance against the violence he hoped to avoid.

He instructed his staff to laugh off any abusive treatment it might receive and said, "Regardless of what happens, don't lay a hand on anybody in town unless you have to act in self defense to keep from getting badly hurt."

IT was tough going from the very beginning—and it was hard for the organizers to smile when being taunted and cursed by foremen and supervisors who were openly fighting unionization.

Within a few weeks the CIO men were beginning to get tense and jumpy. After being insulted on the streets they would return to their hotel rooms and declare to each other that "the next guy who calls me a dirty '————— is going to get punched in the nose."

The situation became worse as time passed.

About two weeks before the date set for an NLRB election at the plant the CIO sent in some extra organizers.

At about the same time, word reached the organizing director that the company had hired two men—brothers with a reputation for violence—to beat up any CIO men they could catch out on the streets after dark.

The organizers quit working in pairs at night and started going out with no less than four in any one group.

The brothers were very much in evidence, but they started no trouble. Four to two must have been considered poor odds.

AT this point in his story the mild-mannered man said, "I told the fellows they were nuts to put up with such treatment and they asked me what they could do about it.

"I told them I'd fix the little red wagon of those two big birds and they just laughed at me. But I had the last laugh.

"I was with the last group of organizers sent in and I felt sure those tough borthers had never seen me. I counted strongly on that.

"I saw those two guys on a corner the next evening. I yanked my hat brim down over my eyes like a movie tough, jammed my right hand into my overcoat pocket as if I had hold of a cannon and walked right up to them.

"Covering them with my imaginary gun, I said out of the corner of my mouth, 'You mugs would look a lot better in a coffin than walking around on the street. If either one of you lays a finger on one of my boys I'll let you have it in the belly!'

"I turned my back on them and walked away. They hurried in the other direction and we never saw them again."

The young woman, slightly breathless, asked, "How did you ever get up enough nerve to do it?"

"Nerve?" asked the mild-mannered man. "You don't need nerve when you've got 14 angry organizers lined up across the street [illegible] you—ready to move in if trouble [illegible]ts."

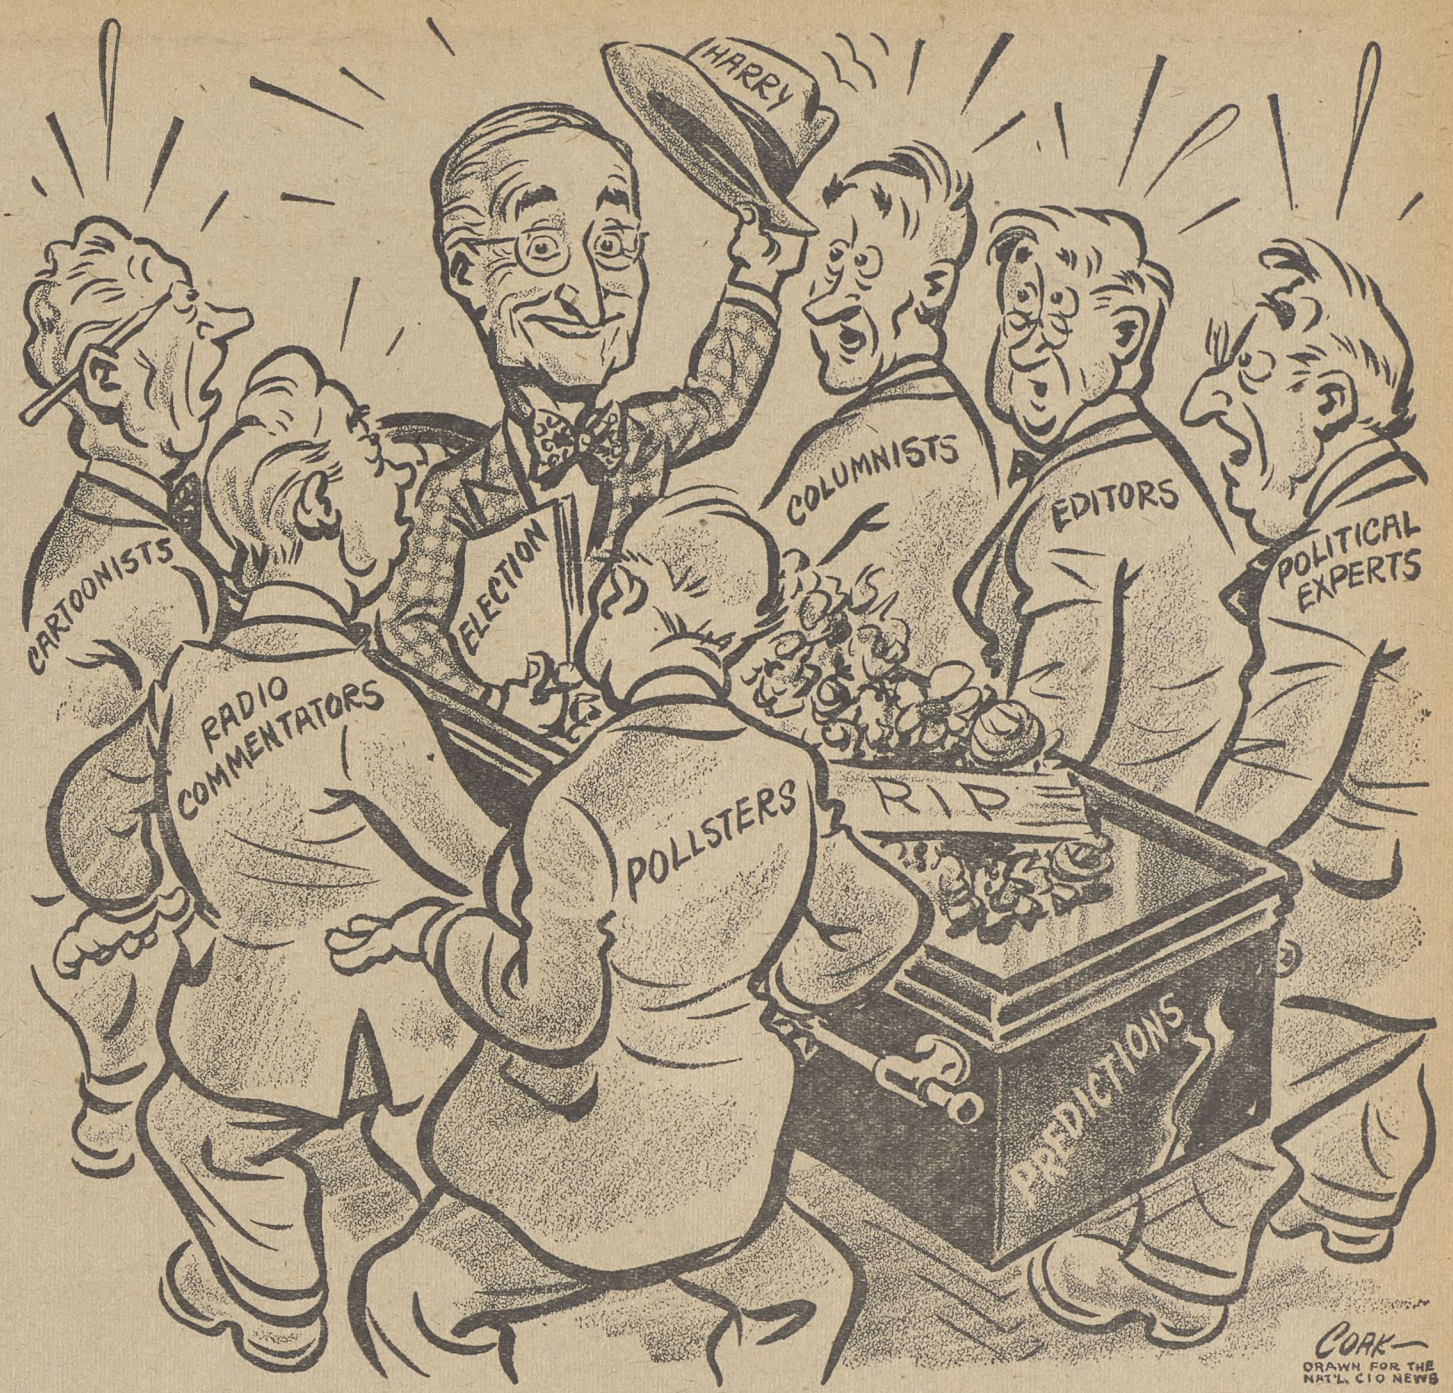
News of His Death Greatly Exaggerated



Civil Rights a Federal Problem, Says Humphrey, and We're 172 Years Late

By Hubert Humphrey

U. S. Senator-elect from Minnesota, in Graphic Survey

This year, for the first time in history, both major political conventions have promised to enact a full range of legislation designed to close the gap between profession and practice in the field of civil rights.

Because our fundamental democratic tenets are still under constant fire, this program has become a matter of high moral strategy. But even without this challenge, civil rights legislation has become a compelling political and economic necessity.

Under the urgent pressures and exertions of war we learned many lessons. We found that discrimination in employment deprived us of precious production; that year-to-year denial of job opportunities for many of our citizens had robbed our economy of skilled manpower; that segregated housing, hospitals and schools were expensive; that a Jim Crow army was an inefficient anachronism.

These lessons were not lost on us as a nation. All over America a search for new solutions began to stir. This culminated last year when a committee of distinguished citizens examined the entire civil rights question at the behest of Pres. Truman. The committee presented a full slate of recommendations. The President submitted requests for legislation to Congress.

Almost immediately, the whole question of civil rights legislation became charged with political controversy. After a year of that controversy, two significant facts have emerged.

First, the American people are civil rights conscious.

The second is that the objectives of the President's report have won overwhelming approval. This is evidenced by the platforms of both major political parties. In the case of the Democratic party at least, approval came by no perfunctory parliamentary nod. Testimony of the seriousness with which the Democratic party took that pledge was the secession of the Dixiecrats.

The big "split" turned out to be a splinter which strengthened the Democratic party by attracting many new supporters.

Discounting the hard core of opposition which travels under the raggedy yellow banner of White Supremacy, the main line of criticism against the President's recommendations has come from persons who would prefer "gradualism" as against what they charge is a blitzkreig presentation of a "package deal."

The problem of tactics may properly be discussed by any sincere supporter of the civil rights program. However, I have been in politics long enough to know that democracy, operating at top speed, rarely gets beyond gradualism in its peacetime lawmaking. If we boldly stake out our goals and needs, the cumbersome legislative processes of the nation, state and city will gradually swing into line. If you start out shooting for gradualism, the legislative process is apt to produce a studious backsliding into the status quo.

To those who say we are trying to rush the issue of civil rights, I have said, and I still maintain, that we are 172 years late.

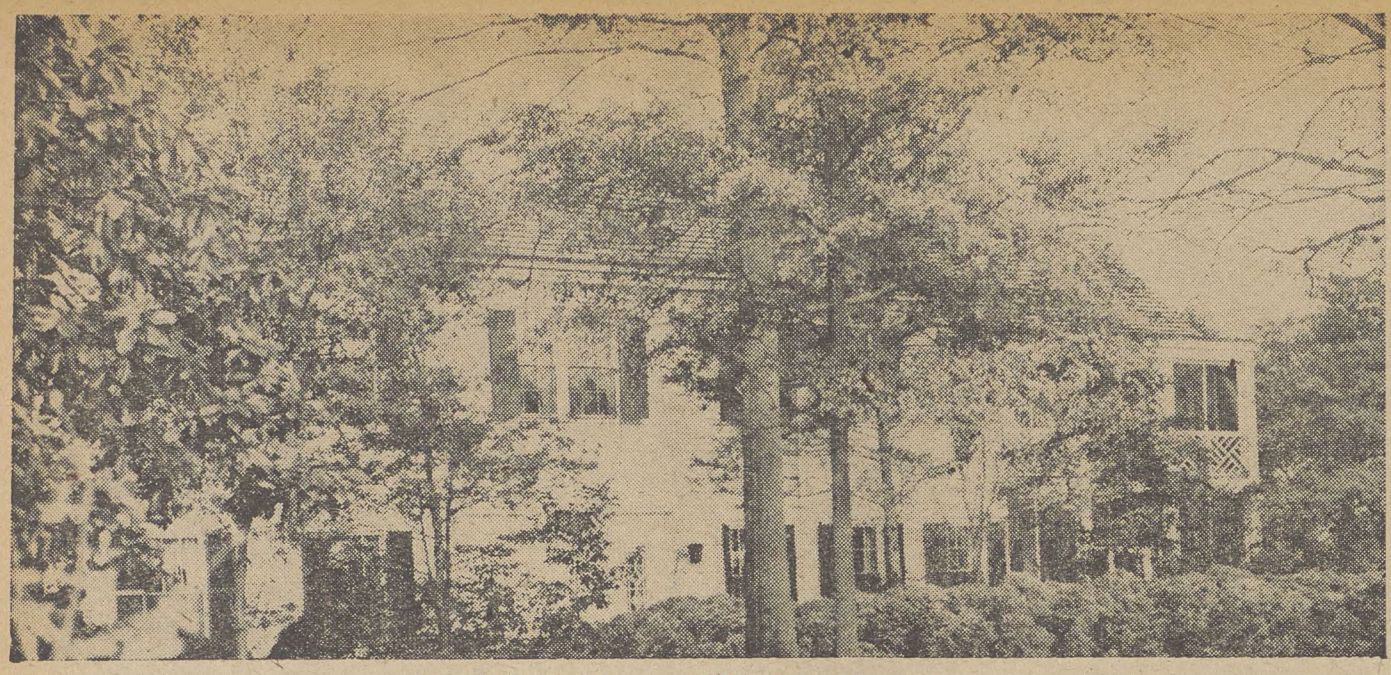
A more oblique line of attack comes from those who maintain that civil rights legislation will not work until we get everybody "educated." Then presumably, we would not need it at all.

As one who has been a teacher, I share the American faith in formal education. But I have also had some experience as Mayor of Minneapolis, where I learned of the profound educational value of the traffic ticket, the fire law, the inspections of the Health Department, and yes, the Fair Employment Practices ordinance.

In factories, mills and department stores, many Minneapolis workers have become acquainted for the first time with Negroes and Jews. Strained feelings about "minority groups" are disappearing.

Important, too, is the fact that our city's FEPC has focused the attention of trend-setting citizens in the fields of employment, housing, hotel and theater management on the whole problem of discriminatory practices.

Southerners must understand that this problem is not theirs alone. Civil rights legislation has become a federal problem because in some way or other every state in the Union, not just those of the South, has denied to some of its citizens the full rights of American citizenship.



THIS IS WHERE A DIXIE BOSS LIVES

MANSION: This is the home of Charles Cannon at Concord, N. C. Self-styled "philanthropist," this industrialist is a rabid union hater. His vast empire is one of the largest in the South. Now, take a look at the opposite side of the page to see the residence of sharecroppers—in need of more than philanthropy.

MEDIEVAL: This is one of the oldest textile mills in the South. Note the medieval towers and the bell atop the center tower. Many southern employers would like to treat workers medievally.

'You See

By WILLIAM WEISS

This is the story of "Operation Dixie" as seen by one of the "Buck privates" who's been in the thick of it since it started.

When you look at the Southern Drive you see many things—

Secret midnight meetings of workers . . . wholesale firings . . . stretchouts and blacklists . . . endless picketlines in the rain and under the burning sun . . .

Mimeograph machines and a million leaflets—"Union Meeting Tonight" . . . the stench of paper and rayon mills, the fields of cotton, the great tobacco warehouses . . . the whine of a million spindles and the crash of falling timber . . .

The roar of a sawmill, and the soft, drawling voice, "I think I'll wait awhile before I join up."

Yes, all that, and the beautifully landscaped home of a mill owner—and, a half mile away, the miserable, unpainted shacks of his workers.

The Southern Drive can be a dismal hotel room in a hostile town . . . snarling company attorneys . . . segregation laws and police brutality—"Stay off the streets after dark, 'Nigger', or else!" . . . stately churches and unfriendly pastors . . . physical violence . . . citizens' committees and "loyal employe" associations.

Sure, there are friendly pastors, too, and decent cops, and citizen groups which go along with the CIO program—but, being human, we're more inclined to talk about those who slap us in the face than those who give us a pat on the back.

YOU look at the Southern Drive and you see many things—

Self-ordained preachers, working for management, preaching hate of "those outsiders" . . . the maddening complacency of textile workers, trained from childhood to believe that mill owners are all-wise, that "outsiders" can bring them only harm . . . "Bloody" Gastonia and Elizabethown, memorials to the textile strikes of 1929 and 1935 . . .

Trucks topheavy with big bales of cottton . . . Pentacostal Holiness ministers who claim the letters "CIO" are "the mark of the beast" . . .

Company stooges and Labor Board elections . . . Editor "Parson Jack" Johnson and his labor-baiting "Trumpet" . . . a winning situation turned into a disastrous rout when the employer shuts down his mill the day before the election and has a "heart to heart" talk with his employes . . .

Operation Packing Box

The headquarters staff of the CIO Organizing Committee was using packing boxes for desks when "Operation Dixie" began in the summer of 1946.

It was months before some of the state and area directors were able to obtain offices from which to operate.

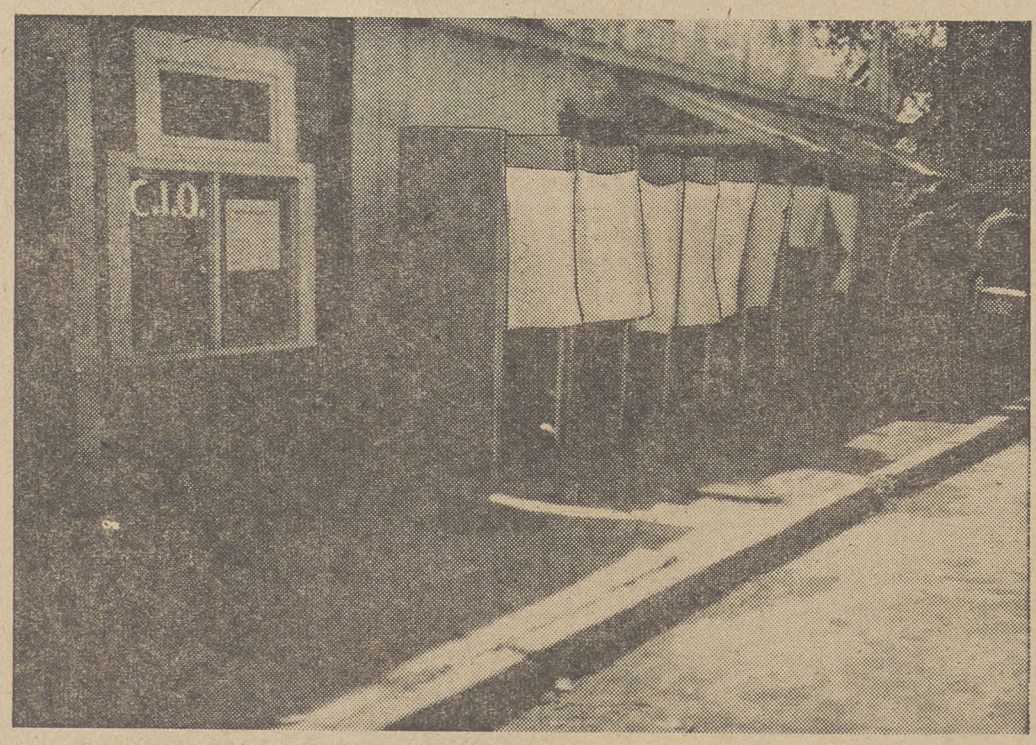
Most of the men and women hired as organizers had had no previous organizing experience.

* * *

Within six months Committee Dir. Van Bittner and his assistants had created a smoothly functioning organizing team that operated in many cities and small towns in 11 states stretching from Northern Virginia to West Texas.

Since early last year hundreds of local volunteer organizers have been giving assistance to the Committee staff.

The work is paying off, as the story — by Bill Weiss — on this page shows. The South is looking up.



OPEN-AIR: The NLRB had to go to the unusual procedure of holding an open air election at a Georgia plant. The NLRB had hired a local building. The employer, who had fought the CIO union with every possible means, prevailed upon the building owner to lock his place up tight so that the election could not be held. The NLRB set up its booths outside the CIO Hall. P.S. We won!

It is greater than the men who hate what it advocates—a better way of life for Southern workers, greater prosperity for all of the South, liberty, freedom and dignity for men and women who toil with their hands.

It will go on—in one form or another—for years to come.

The militant CIO approach to problems has captured the imagination of many Southerners who are more interested in eliminating the region's shortcomings than in making excuses for them.

The CIO has made more progress in the field of race relations than any other group that has operated in the South. It has eliminated the North-South pay rate differential in some industries and narrowed it in others.

THE political demagogs and the Southern managers of industries owned in the North and East dislike—and in some cases hate—the CIO.

For years the demagogs have fanned race and religious prejudice and then capitalized on it.

The Southern managers, paying low wages, have provided a threat to the unionized plants in the rest of the country.

The CIO already has become a potent liberal political force in some parts of the South—and its continuing growth will sharply curb if not eliminate the great strength of Southern reaction.

Its drives to organize the unorganized—plus the contracts it has negotiated—is eliminating the unfair competition which comes from a low-wage area.

Boss Crump over in Memphis learned about the effectiveness of CIO political action in the recent primaries and elections.

DESPITE the Taft-Hartley Act and bitter employer opposition, the CIO Organizing Committee has added 900 new locals and 450,000 new members to the CIO rolls since Operation Dixie began.

A total of 159 petitions for certification are now on file with the NLRB, and 127 active local organizing drives are under way.

A new day is dawning for Dixie. Much has been accomplished, but —as Committee Director Van A. Bittner puts it—"the greater part of the job remains to be done."

There are about 6,000,000 industrial workers in the 11 Southern states. About 950,000 of these belong to the CIO.

There are still many to be organized, and there will be even more if the South continues to expand industrially.

My prediction is that the organizing job still ahead will be accomplished—and I'm not one of those smart "experts" who elected Dewey to the presidency before the people had a chance to vote!

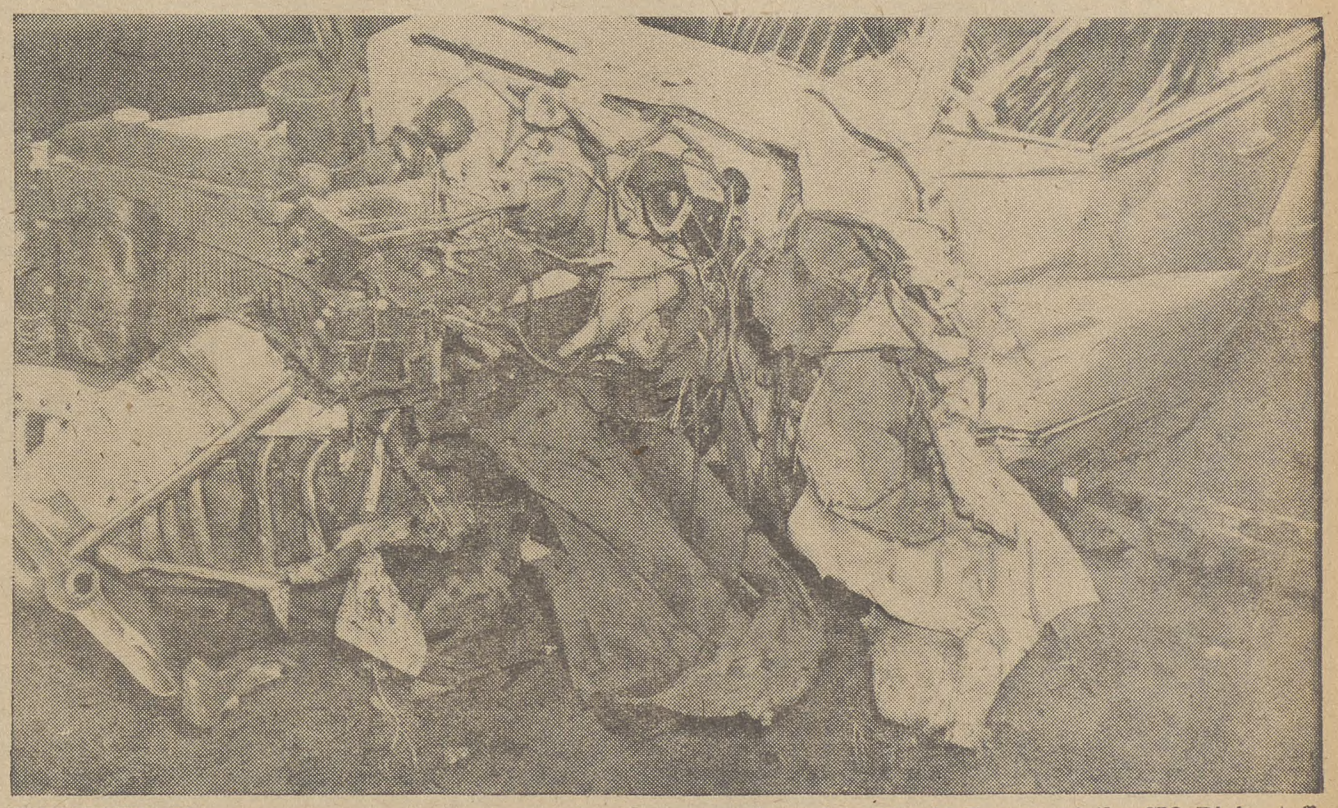
THIS IS WHERE A DIXIE SHARECROPPER LIVES

HOVEL: Sharecroppers live in unbeliveable squalor and poverty. Despite their tawdry surroundings, they don't lose hope that someday they'll own their own homes— but few ever obtain them. In this home, there are no electric lights, no running water. The toilet is the outside variety. The hovel is unpainted.

THE PINCH: The tall gent in the center (profile with hat) is Bill Weiss, author of the article on this page. He is being arrested on charges of violating a Gastonia, N. C., city ordinance prohibiting distribution of leaflets. CIO won a legal fight to have the ordinance declared unconstitutional after Weiss was arrested seven times.



DYNAMITE: This auto wreckage shows what anti-union elements can do to an organizer's car. Dynamite was expertly placed in the most vital portion of the car. This car belonged to Harold Turner, of the CIO Dixie staff. He's still on the staff, proving that even dynamite can't kill the spirit of Operation Dixie.

How It Was Done:

PAC; The Farmers, The People Worked

JUST how did the vote get out—the vote which repudiated the 80th Congress and backed Pres. Truman's program?

Well, we of the CIO know best how our people did their share of the job, we know what other labor groups contributed and we have some knowledge of what the farmers and liberal groups did.

Before the election, PAC Dir. Jack Kroll said we'd have 80,000 fulltime workers in action on Nov. 2. Reports now show that there were more than 100,000 fulltime PAC workers in action. There is no estimate on how many scores of thousands did parttime work.

Now, as to literature and leaflets. The "wise" guys of the Republicans and the "wise" guys of the Wallaceites said we were laying down on the job. Well, we admit we didn't throw literature around with the reckless abandon of the Wallaceites. But, we sent literature where it would do the most good. Close to 50,000,000 pieces of literature were sent out by either national or local PAC groups.

IN addition, PAC put on 800 radio shows. Four platters were prepared and they were played extensively. PAC also had eight spot-platters — four for registration, a non-partisan appeal, and four for Truman and Barkley.

Were these blockworkers and others well-trained in their work? They were, by use of a film strip which showed them how it could be done and by its use of a movie trailer.

There was a close relationship in most areas between the CIO and AFL, and with the brotherhoods and some independent unions.

In Massachusetts, for instance, the AFL provided platters with music by Vaughn Monroe and others (services contributed by courtesy of the Musicians Union and others), which all groups of labor used widely to crush the anti-labor referenda. The result there is well known. It was a slaughter.

Also in Massachusetts, young aggressive AFL and CIO workers handled election districts. Oldtime politicians sat in amazement at the results.

Americans for Democratic Action were busy in many states.

LAST, but not least, was the cooperation between labor and farmers. An example of this was in Iowa. There, the various labor groups and the Farm Bureau Federation worked in close harmony, particularly in the primaries, where they succeeded in defeating a Republican governor, a Congressman and several legislators. Farm groups did a bangup job all through the heavily-agricultural areas.

And, don't forget John Q. Citizen. He just didn't let the Gallup Poll decide for him.

Plain Dealer Unable To See What's Plain To Be Seen

WHEN it comes to putting oneself far out on a limb and sawing it off, the daily press of America has no peers.

On Oct. 9, less than a month before the election, the Cleveland Plain Dealer took its editorial pen in hand and cried:

"Persons familiar with the Ohio political situation must have been surprised when they read a dispatch from Washington quoting Jack Kroll, head of the CIO-PAC, as saying that Ohio's 25 electoral votes were in the bag for Pres. Truman.

"Their bewilderment was probably complete when they read another dispatch from Princeton, N. J., in which Dr. George Gallup reported that (his) poll gave 51% of the vote to Gov. Dewey, 42% to Pres. Truman . . .

"It might be well for the members of the CIO to save those predictions and compare them with the actual results. In that way, they could obtain some evidence bearing on the reliability of their so-called leaders."

Members of the CIO did save those predictions. When, on Nov. 3, they compared them with the actual results, they found that "so-called leader" Kroll was right, very right. Ohio was indeed in the bag for Truman.

Jack Kroll, in addition to being national PAC director, happens to be CIO president for Ohio. After the election, the Ohio State CIO executive board—with Kroll not voting—unanimously adopted a letter to be sent to the Plain Dealer. It said:

"It's easy to guess wrong on political elections. Many of us do on occasion. So, we are not unduly critical of your wrong guess, as such.

"We do, however, deeply resent the tone of your poor guess, the low manners of your prognosticating editorial.

"Your bitter scorn of workers and their unions shows out of your every sentence. Divisiveness, insult, smear and calumny leap out of your every word.

"Why you assume this vengeful attitude we do not know. But we do know this; you were wrong. And you were wrong because you don't understand the people.

"Jack Kroll was right and he was right because he believes in the American people. He believes in their inherent decency.

"You scorned the common people."

Tireless Tobin

Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin certainly has the right to be pleased with the election results.

Sworn in on Friday, Aug. 13, Tobin managed in the 90 days before the election to make more than 150 speeches or radio talks, in 16 states from Massachusetts to California.

No one on Tobin's staff will venture a guess on the miles he covered during those hectic days.

Tobin stepped out as candidate for governor of Massachusetts on the Democratic ticket, to take a long chance that his tenure as Labor Dept. head wouldn't die inauguration day.

Wallace Failed To Win The Negro Vote

EVEN up to the day of the election, Henry Wallace was confidently predicting that the vast bulk of the Negro vote would go to him.

Henry was miles off in the estimate of his total vote; he was even further off in his estimate of the Negro vote, as returns from all parts of the land show.

Take St. Louis as one example. That city has a large Negro population, most of it concentrated in the 4th, 6th, 18th and 19th Wards. Here is the vote for those wards:

Ward	Truman	Dewey	Wallace
Fourth	6719	3009	97
Sixth	6199	2854	64
Eighteenth	7400	3418	179
Nineteenth	7349	3070	75
Total	29,667	12,351	415

Thus, Wallace received only .97% of the vote in these predominantly Negro areas.

The St. Louis Argus, a Negro paper which was the only newspaper in St. Louis to support Pres. Truman, points out another significant fact. It says:

"Most conclusive evidence of the sweep was seen in the 6th Ward. This ward was the only one in the city to go Republican in the Roosevelt sweep of 1936 and had remained Republican for more than 24 years."

The Argus reported that "in the predominantly Negro wards of Kansas City, Truman held a 3 to 1 lead."

The newspaper declared that the "courageous Truman, who never backed up from his statement on civil rights made to Congress last February, went in on the strong vote of the working people and the Negro, as well as many liberals of the middle and upper classes."

Tom's Tie Gets Toledo Papers Hot Under Collar

TOM BURKE, Congressman-elect from Toledo, Ohio, like many another man in politics, wears no man's collar.

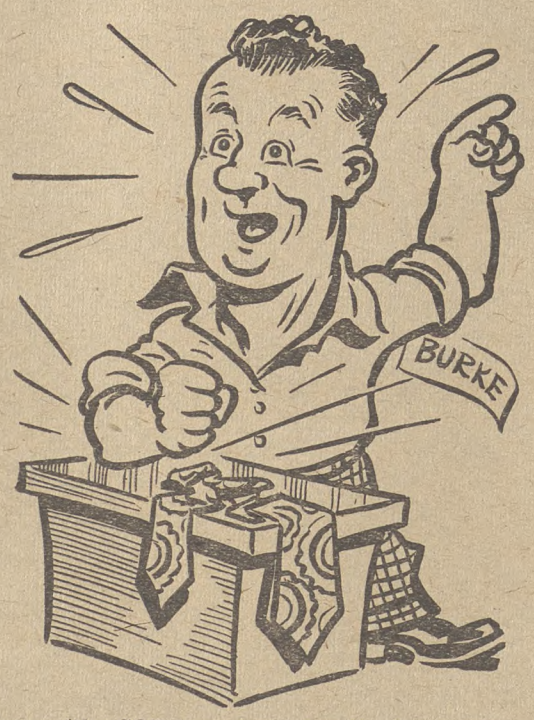
In fact, one of the things his opponents dragged up against him was a charge he wore no man's tie, either.

Tom Burke has long held the confidence of the voters of the Ohio 9th District. He was elected to the State Legislature and to City Council before winning a congressional seat Nov. 2. And, he long has held the confidence of labor, for he has been elected to officerships in his own union, the CIO Auto Workers, and as secretary-treasurer of the Toledo Industrial Union Council. In the city council, he was named Vice Mayor under Mayor Michael DeSalle.

But, the Toledo Blade and the Toledo Times just can't stand the thought of Tom Burke being elected to anything. The papers had a pretty tough time trying to think of ways to oppose Burke. Under the guidance of Publishers William and Paul Block, Jr., they finally stooped to this journalistic low in editorials:

"But though he is partial to labor generally and to the CIO in particular, it does not seem to us that Mr. Burke treats workingmen entirely right in the matter of his personal appearance. On some occasions the man who would be a Congressman dresses like a normal human being. If labor is to be present, though, he generally leaves his necktie off. It's either ostentatious or condescending.

"And this little necktie trick, trivial though it seems, may best illustrate the chief difference between these two candidates for Congress. Homer Ramey (the GOP incumbent) has his shortcomings, far too many of them. But Tom Burke is a phoney."



Then, the voters gave their answer to the Blocks. They elected Burke by an 11,000-vote majority. Now, who's a phoney?

Ching Names Three Representatives

Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, has announced the appointment of three district representatives.

The district representatives will be the director's official representatives in the field, and will perform liaison functions between the national office in Washington, D. C., and the regional directors to whom Ching has delegated full authority for the day-by-day running of the regional offices.

They will be available as Commissioners in the more important labor disputes which the Service may be called upon to mediate.

The three district representatives whose appointments have been announced are as follows:

Howard E. Durham, who has been director in the New York City and Boston, Mass., regional offices of the service; Clyde M. Mills, who has been a commissioner of conciliation since 1942 and who was the representative of the service in the labor disputes at Oak Ridge, Tenn., during the last year; William F. White who has been director in the St. Louis, Mo., regional office of the service.

Getting A (Party) Line on Results Of Election

Perhaps you've wondered how the Wallaceites would attempt to explain the colossal and humiliating defeat Henry suffered at the polls.

For your information, many Prog backers are using the line enunciated by George Morris in the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party, one of Wallace's chief backers: "Most Wallace supporters in trade union ranks voted for Truman. They did so because they saw no other 'practical' alternative to one of giving Truman a chance to make good on some of the torrent of promises that poured out of him during his whirling vote-getting tour.

"That doesn't mean that millions turned away from Wallace. They simply felt that there is more value in a vote for one who could win, even if they were skeptical of his promises, than there is in a vote for a good man who you are sure won't get in.

"Wallace received the cheers and credit for the issues, Truman the votes."

WE DON'T FEEL A BIT SORRY

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

CONTENTS of a notebook in the calm of the days following election:

CONNECTICUT: When Chet Bowles takes over as Governor, he'll have a State Senate which is Democratic for the first time in many a year. There'll be 23 Democrats and 13 Republicans. The House'll be Rep., however.

WASHINGTON STATE: The Democrats dropped the governorship, when Mon Walgren lost in an upset, but have an easy control of the legislature. It'll be: Senate—26 Dems., 16 Reps.; House—Dems. 65, Reps. 30.

COLORADO: Gov. Lee Knous (D.) will have his party in control of the House, but the GOP has the Senate.

ARIZONA: The 19 Senate seats will be all Democratic. The House is Dem. by 58 to 6.

SOUTH DAKOTA: Here, Gov. Dewey carried the state by little more than 51%, almost an upset in itself. The Dems. won 8 Senate seats, compared to none before and gained 5 House seats for a total of 9.

UTAH: The Democrats lost the governorship when incumbent Herbert Maw fell, but kept the legislature.

BERT MILLER

IDAHO: Pollsters and other "experts" had predicted that because of the defection of Sen. Glen Taylor, who went off singing with Henry Wallace, Idaho was a sure bet for the Reps. But, Truman took the state and Sen. Dworshak (R.) will not be needing that Washington residence from now on. Winner over him is Bert Miller (D.).

OREGON: Portland, scene of the imminent CIO convention, was carried by Truman. In Multnomah County (Portland) Truman had 84,588 to Dewey's 80,783.

Four AFL men were elected to the state legislature with CIO and Brotherhood backing. Four of the county's five senatorships were won by labor-backed men, including Richard Neuberger, frequent Sat. Eve. Post contributor.

PAC officials estimate that CIO registration had risen from 30% of its members in the spring to more than 80% by election time.

OHIO: Cleveland sent an entire Democratic delegation to the State House. William R. Van Aken, daddy of the anti-labor Van Aken Bill, was decisively defeated for reelection.

RHODE ISLAND: Three CIO men have been elected to the State House in this state where labor in politics is not a new sight (U. S. Rep. Fogarty is a member of an AFL union.)

The three legislative winners are John L. Lewis (no kin) of the Steelworkers, and Ralph Petrarca and Samuel Azzinaro of the Textile Workers.

MICHIGAN: Gov.-Elect G. Mennen Williams did not carry a Democratic majority for either State House, but can have his vetoes of illiberal bills sustained. He'll have 9 senators (up from 4) out of 32 and 38 representatives (up from 5) out of 100.

CIO Auto Workers members elected to the legislature include Intl. Rep. Ed Carey, Financial Secy. Jack Fuller of UAW Pres. Reuther's home Local 174, Tracey Doll, past president of the Wayne County CIO, and Patrick J. Doyle.

In a race to fill a vacancy in Detroit's Common Council, Edward D. Connor, backed by CIO, won.

Just the day before election, Rep. Fred Hartley, lameduck coauthor of the Taft-Hartley Law, snuck through a side door of Detroit's Book-Cadillac Hotel to avoid pickets who were demonstrating against him in front of the inn. Once inside, he told glowing businessmen that T-H would be made even stronger by the 81st Congress, which he just knew was going to be anti-labor.

MISSOURI: In Truman's home county of Jackson, a labor man was elected public administrator. He is Perrin McElroy, business agent for the AFL Building Trades Council.

An amendment enabling cities of more than 40,000 population to establish pension plans was approved by the state's voters. The amendment was sponsored by union employes of the Springfield transit and electrical plants, who had lost their pensions when the city took over public utilities.

FREAR

DELAWARE: The duPont dynasty is feeling mighty low, chum, as a result of the Democrats winning the governorship and the senatorship. Going into the Senate for the next six years at least is J. Allen Frear (D.), who runs a milk business in the state capital at Dover. Out and back among his duPont in-laws will be C. Douglass Buck (R.)

Labor Men In Congress

There'll be a fairly large group of new labor union members in the 81st Congress. They include these Democrats:

Tom Burke, 9th Ohio, a member of the CIO Auto Workers.

Hubert Humphrey, Minnesota, a member of the American Federation of Radio Artists.

Roy Weir, 3d Minnesota, executive secretary of the Minneapolis AFL Central Labor Union.

George Rhodes, 13th Pennsylvania, president of the AFL Federated Trades Council of Berks County, Pa., and a labor editor.

Leonard Irving, 4th Missouri (Truman's home district), a member of the AFL Hod Carriers & Common Laborers' Union.

Andrew J. Biemiller, 8th Wisconsin, former AFL organizer.

Richard Bolling, 5th Missouri, former vice chairman of the American Veterans' Committee, formerly a union organizer and instructor at the Highlander Folk School.

Humphrey will go to the Senate, the others to the House.

Israel Laborites Greet Murray

Four members of Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor, greeted CIO Pres. Philip Murray before setting out on a tour of the nation.

The delegation seeks to raise a fund of $10 million to aid workers and immigrants in Israel.

A memorial from their organization, which with members' families numbers a third of the Israeli population, read in part: "Israel has come into being because our ancient people, the Jewish people, is inspired by the ideals of prophetic justice.

"Organized labor has been the chief instrument to realize those ideals in our generation. Histadrut is building a cooperative commonwealth that will give comfort and dignity and security to the hundreds of thousands of Jewish survivors of Hitlerism and the oppressed sectors of Jewry in Arab lands."

Death Sentence For Editor Protested

The executive committee of the CIO Newspaper Guild of New York has cabled Premier Themistokles Sophoulis of the Greek government in Athens protesting the death sentence of Manolis Glezos, editor of the Communist paper Rizopastis.

According to information received by the Guild, Glezos was convicted and sentenced solely on the basis of an editorial he printed a year ago, when the Communist paper was legal. The editorial was written by the general secretary of the Greek Communist Party.

CIO Represented At Military Parley

The CIO was represented last week and this week at the Joint Orientation Conference of the National Military Establishment. Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey attended the opening sessions and the reception at Washington, D. C.

Stanley Ruttenberg, director of education and research, attended subsequent sessions at Washington and went to Pensacola, Fla., and Fort Benning, Ga., on a tour of Military Posts. He left Fort Benning for Portland, Ore., to attend the CIO convention.

Barkin In England On ERP Mission

Solomon Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile Workers has arrived in London to study British textile production for the Economic Cooperation Administration. When he left the U.S., TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said the union is happy to lend one of its experts to help in the Marshall plan program. "The broad experience in industrial problems gained by trade union representatives should be more often called upon by government agencies," Rieve declared.

Wilson Sued By UPWA

A $1,100,000 damage suit against Wilson & Co. has been filed by the CIO Packinghouse Workers in the U. S. District Court.

The damage suit, an amendment to an original complaint against the company filed on May 6 while the nation-wide meat strike was in progress, lists damages for the International Union, eight local unions and 400 employes.

In this latest action, the union restates its charges that the company "engaged in a course of continued and widespread violation of the terms and provisions" of its contract with the union.

Typos' Fight Impresses Tobin

Boston, Mass., union printers gave Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin some ideas on how they feel about the typos' long strike in Chicago.

It was the day after election, and a jubilant Tobin walked into the composing room of the Boston Post to talk with AFL Typographical Union members.

"We're going to repeal the Taft-Hartley act," he told them.

Then one of the printers started talking. "Maurice," he said, "we're paying eight bucks a week to keep our Chicago strike going—and we're damned happy to pay it! But the Taft-Hartley act made it necessary to pay it."

A day later, the secretary of labor was still marveling, according to his brother, James Tobin.

"Think of it," he quoted the secretary as saying. "Eight bucks a week, and happy to pay it."

He's Fighting CIO Oil Union:

Reese Taylor of California—Hard-Working Union Buster

He's Brought Turmoil To Oil

19th Century Tactics For Open Shop, Low Pay Used by Industry

By HARVEY O'CONNOR & RAY DAVIDSON

TAKE a look at Reese H. Taylor.

Big, blustery, powerful. An old-fashioned "Baron of Industry." A hard-driving, hard-talking man.

He was born in wealth—his father was a leading Southern California industrialist. He's president of California's big Union Oil Company.

Apparently he is the architect of the "California Plan" for union busting, which was outlined in detail in the last issue of CIO News. He is recognized as spokesman for the oil industry on the West Coast.

Reese Taylor rules Union Oil Co. with all the arrogance he can muster in his tough, six-foot-four-inch, 240-pound frame.

He lives in grandiose splendor in an eight-room, $1,000-a-month bungalow in Pasadena's Huntington Park Hotel. (Yes, in Southern California, you can rent a bungalow within a hotel—they build 'em on the horizontal there.)

Time Magazine on April 26, 1948, described Taylor as a "lusty backslapper." Without denying the accuracy of this description, a stenographer in his employe recently said of Taylor's noisiness around the office:

"It's just Reese Taylor making a new kind of oil again—turmoil."

This Reese Taylor is the man who in past years and particularly in the past months has been leading the California fight to break CIO's Oil Workers Intl. Union.

19th Century Stuff

Taylor's record of union-busting is in the books. Hundreds of pages of the LaFollette Committee reports, Parts 49-53, are devoted to the union-killing measures of Los Angeles in the infamous Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

Reese Taylor was a key man in those activities.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association didn't have much success in its 1936-37 efforts to keep Southern California open-shop. Eventually, its program was largely stopped or withdrawn to the background.

BUT Reese Taylor didn't give up. In 1948, he saw a new chance to vent his wrath on unions. With Dewey (it said in the papers) riding high, with the "awful 80th" Congress following the NAM line, Taylor judged that it was time to unlimber the union-busting tools of an earlier day and kill an upstart labor union. He opened his big guns on the Oil Workers Union when it struck his two refineries and several other West Coast oil companies Sept. 4.

It's 1937, Coast Time

Most of us realize that this is 1948—almost 1949.

Not so a group of powerful oil companies out in Los Angeles. They're fighting the plucky CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union with 1937 stuff—old-fashioned arguments, old-fashioned strong-arm tactics, old-fashioned goons.

The strike of oil workers in southern California is a reminder that many corporation executives would like to go back to old-fashioned "law of the jungle" methods of dealing with unions.

Reese Taylor of the rich Union Oil Co. is such a man. Believe it or not, he's spokesman for the industry in southern California.

The methods he uses are described here by two staff members of the CIO Oil Union. The methods he uses were examined—and found bad—ten years ago by the LaFollette Committee. The LaFollette Committee was a special Senate committee to investigate violations of civil liberties; it was headed by the liberal Sen. LaFollette of Wisconsin.

It found many corporations trampling on civil rights—but none more violently than in Los Angeles.

It did happen in 1937; it is happening in 1948.

It is happening in Los Angeles; it could happen in your home town.

That's why this is an important story.

Taylor's industrial career began as superintendent of Llewellyn Iron Works in Los Angeles in 1924-29. (He was a director after 1925). This company, through a merger, became Consolidated Steel in 1929 and in the new firm Taylor later became president. Taylor stepped into all these jobs largely because of his father's influence.

Llewellyn Iron Works had an anti-union history all its own. Reese Llewellyn, for whom Reese Taylor apparently was named, was one of its founders. Reese Llewellyn, too, was long a leader of the open-shop fight.

You can see the training Reese Taylor got as a subordinate of Reese Llyewellyn.

For Open Shop, Low Pay

It was in 1936-37, after Llewellyn Iron Works became Consolidated Steel, with Reese Taylor as president, that Taylor made his greatest contribution to open-shopism.

It was in those years, too, that it became evident that the leaders of Union Oil Co., present leader of the drive against OWIU, were also the leaders of the Merchant and Manufacturers campaign for open shops and low wages.

In 1936, Los Angeles had a wage scale averaging 10c under that paid in San Francisco. Average wages in Los Angeles were 72-73c an hour. Industrial unrest was acute. Strikes occurred in meat packing, canning, furniture, trucking and maritime industries.

Los Angeles industrial leaders balled their fists to protect the city's "reputation" as a low-wage, open-shop industrial city.

The LaFollette Committee, investigating later, found that leading members of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the M & M met to plot their course against labor storms.

The C of C decided to channel all union-busting through the M & M. The M & M on the other hand decided to close its lobbies in Sacramento, Washington and the local city hall. The Chamber sent out a letter referring to M & M as the "battle front" organization for open-shop operations.

M & M, said the Chamber, would concern itself with the "spectacular features of the direct fighting tool."

Back of this M & M strategy were men either high in Union Oil, or soon to be. Sparkplug was S. M. Haskins, president of M & M, leader in many other employer organizations—and a director of Union Oil.

On his right hand was Reese Taylor, president of Consolidated Steel, later president of Union Oil.

Another team member was L. P. St. Clair, then president of Union Oil.

Secret Committee

Early in 1936, Haskins set up the "Special Advisory Committee" of M & M—sometimes known as "The Secret Committee of Five"—to spearhead the union-breaking drive. Included on this committee were Haskins, Taylor, Neary and St. Clair—our Union Oil friends.

M & M then put the pressure on merchants and manufacturers in the Los Angeles area for funds to carry on the fight. Some 20 fund-raising committees worked on the task. They levied assessments of $5 per employe against the employers. M & M receipts rose in 1937 to $100,000.

KEY to the M & M strategy was the liberal use of "detectives." M & M had no hesitancy in signing a "labor contract" in one case—with Glen C. Bodell, head of a detective agency, who was to furnish the strong-arm boys.

It was time to streamline not only strike-breaking, but strike-breakers. Under the old system of hiring thugs, honest employers were charged as much as $10 a day for low-type operatives who were, in M & M minutes' terminology, "costly and unsatisfactory."

So M & M improved on this. Seeing the practical business aspects of a "labor contract," it signed a contract with Bodell Oct 22, 1936, for exclusive rights on his agency for strike-breaking. It provided $6 a day for operatives, $8 a day for "crew captains" and lieutenants, $500 a month and overhead expenses for Bodell.

On Skid-Row in downtown Los Angeles, M & M opened an establishment called "Open Shop Labor Temple" to recruit strike-breakers.

Pattern Set In '37

M & M early in 1937 in the truckers' strike laid the pattern for the oil strike of 1948. To get the law on the employers' side, they sent non-union trucks into their harbor area for the deliberate purpose of agitating trouble and building up cases for prosecution as a basis for an injunction. They got the injunction.

1937 Rough Stuff Still In Style

Secret Committee Pattern Set That Year Is The Taylor Touch

During the Pacific Freight Lines strike, Bodell's agency supplied 175 guards and spent $91,000 of M & M money in less than two months, LaFollette committee reports show.

In another strike, M & M saw to it that the employers signed agreements not to sign contracts with a union, as a condition of support. Penalty to employers for signing labor contracts was to be 4% of total sales with a $5,000 minimum forfeit.

On the public relations front, M & M and the Chamber of Commerce urged industry support for an organization called "Southern Californians, Inc." Union Oil, for example, gave this outfit $15,497, the record shows.

During this time, Taylor and Neary were busy up and down the coast trying to organize a Pacific Coast Economic Council, but it foundered on the rocks of San Francisco-Los Angeles civic rivalry. San Francisco open-shoppers resented the efforts of upstart Angelenos to organize a Pacific Coast united front.

M & M met considerable opposition among employers. Typical was the following case:

The Laundry Owners Alliance protested vigorously to M & M Manager Fysh because he was supplying strike-breakers to the Westrobe Laundry. Conditions there, said the Alliance, were a shame to the Laundry industry, with women working 48 hours a week and more for $7 to $8 and men faring little better.

By 1939, M & M reputation had become so bad that the head of the industrial relations department suggested to the board that M & M stop being a "police department," although "we must not abondon our efforts to block unionization of employes."

2 Major Firms Still Hold Out

SETTLEMENTS achieved with six major oil companies leave Union Oil and one Standard Oil plant as the only major bitter-enders in the two-months-old California oil strike.

Still on strike are some 3500 CIO oil workers, made up as follows:

- 2200 at the Wilmington and Oleum refineries of Union Oil.
- 1000 at the Avon plant of Tide Water Associated (The company's other plants are under contract and in operation).
- 150 at an Ohio Oil plant.
- 40 at the Lloyd Corp.

The major issue in the way of settlements continues to be the rehiring of strikers accused by the companies of violence.

One of the most lucid examples of the strike-breaking potentialities of the Taft-Hartley Act occurred at the struck Standard Oil plant at Richmond. There, strikers voted to return to work without a contract to protect their voting rights in an NLRB representation election. The Board ordered the poll in the midst of the strike. Under T-H, strikers who have been replaced by strikebreakers would be disfranchised, but the replacements could vote. To vote for their union the Oil Workers had to cancel their strike.

Since Unions Have 'Baby Banks'

YOU DON'T HAVE TO GO TO LOAN SHARKS

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

DID you ever have to borrow money in a hurry from a small loan company to meet an emergency? Or buy a car, or furniture, or an electrical contraption on time because it would take a blue moon to squeeze enough out of your pay envelopes each week to pay cash?

You have plenty of company if you belong to the U. S. debtors' club, for it has a huge membership. Statistics show that many millions of Americans are paying off loans of some kind or another. The amount of interest exacted in these transactions is staggering.

Not many small-time borrowers realize just how high the interest is on installment purchases or on money loans at an advertised rate of 3 or 3.5% a month. There are often hidden charges—for investigation, inspection, examination, brokerage, service, insurance, etc.—which are confusing to understand and run the cost of the loan up much higher than the borrower expected.

Money lending on a large scale has a pretty high overhead. Morris Plan banks, pioneers since 1910 in the small loan business, are said to figure that it costs about $12 to handle a consumer loan. On a $100 loan, therefore, if this figure is correct, the money lender would have to get 12% interest before making any profit at all.

That's in the legitimate loan business. Then there are the loan sharks.

A FEDERAL grand jury in San Antonio, Texas, several years ago brought in an indictment alleging that 400 small loan offices in the South, West and Southwest charged interest rates ranging from 60 to 1000% on loans from $5 to $60, with the average ranging from 120 to 240%.

A U. S. Dept. of Justice attorney testifying before a Congressional committee during the war stated that $500,000,000 was lent at an interest rate of 30 to 40% annually, and that a million was lent at 120 to 240%.

Some witnesses at a New York State legislative committee hearing in January, 1948, testified that they had to pay interest as high as 290% on cars bought through New York finance companies.

It's not necessary, however, to be victimized by loan sharks or pay high interest rates to loan companies run for profit, as some five million workers, farmers and other modest-income Americans have found out.

These are the members of 12,000 credit unions—cooperative savings and loan banks—run by the members themselves on a non-profit basis, which have been organized in every state in the union and in the District of Columbia and Hawaii under Federal or state charters.

SOMETIMES called peoples banks, or baby banks, these 12,000 credit unions have assets totaling more than $500 million and control about 10% of the credit loan business in the U. S.

Maximum interest rates in credit unions are 1% a month on the unpaid balance, in contrast to the 3½% monthly interest which loan companies may charge legally. The 1% rate is set by the Federal Credit Union Act under which credit unions chartered by the Federal government function. Most states have similar laws.

The Federal Act passed in 1934, was amended in 1940, 1946 and 1948, and administration of the Act, originally under the Farm Security Administration, was switched to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and in July, 1948 was put under the Federal Security Agency.

THE Act defines a Federal credit union as a cooperative association "for the purpose of promoting thrift among its members and creating a source of credit for provident or production purposes."

Seven or more persons may set up a credit union, provided the membership is "limited to groups having a common bond of occupation, or association, or to groups within a well-defined neighborhood, community, or rural district."

The amount of a loan is limited to $300 without security. Larger loans must have adequate security. Repayments are made weekly, semi-monthly, monthly or according to other schedules agreed upon, usually over a period of 10 months or a year.

The par value of the shares is set by the Act at $5 each. Savings by credit union members are made in the form of share purchases, but deposits to be applied on share purchases may be made in amounts as low as 25c, and may be withdrawn at will. Loans are made out of the accumulated savings.

Net earnings may be returned to members in the form of a dividend if they so vote, except that 20% of the net earnings must be set aside as a reserve fund for possible bad loans. A dividend rate of 3 or 4% per year is commonly paid by well-established credit unions. A limit of 6% a year is set by the by-laws.

A credit union is managed by a board of not less than five directors, a credit committee of not less than three members and a supervisory committee of three members, all elected by the members.

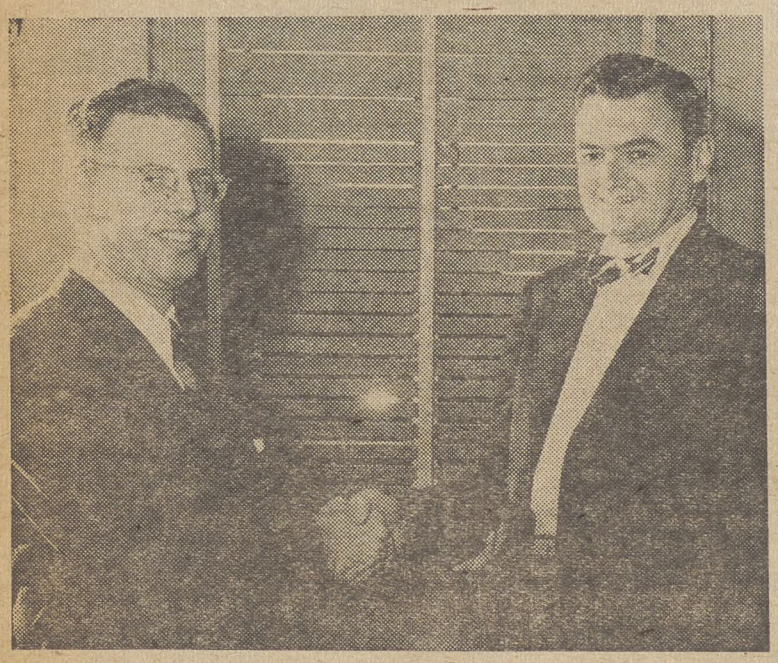
Run as it is by and for the members on a cooperative, non-profit basis, the credit union would seem to be a natural for organized labor, for it fits well into the trade union's program and policies. Like the CIO, credit unions oppose discrimination, and open their membership to anyone in a particular group, regardless of race, color or creed.

A number of labor unions already have their own "baby banks," and although they make up but a small proportion of the total number at present, interest in the movement has been growing rapidly since the end of the war.

THE United Auto Workers has 150 locals which have credit unions, and is promoting the movement actively through its Education Dept.

The Credit Union National Association, formed in 1934, is the central organization of the movement in this country, and services some 12,000 groups from its headquarters in Madison, Wis. CUNA provides literature and the aid of expert organizers wherever needed, and acts as a general informational and promotional agency.

Its official monthly paper, "The Bridge," keeps credit union members and officers informed of current issues of interest to the CU movement.



ADDED TO STAFF: General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg of CIO and the Steelworkers (l.) welcomes Thomas E. Harris, who has been appointed an assistant general counsel of the CIO and the steel union. Harris recently was in charge of litigation for the Office of Alien Property, Dept. of Justice, but had held several other assignments both with the government and in private practice.

TWUA Pres. Rieve

Blasts ILO Appointment

PRES. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has protested the selection of the president of a struck textile mill as an employer delegate to the International Labor Organization textile conference.

In a letter to Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, Rieve said the selection of Herbert H. Schell, president and general manager of the Sidney Blumenthal Co., Shelton, Conn., was "unfortunate."

More than 600 members of TWUA Local 315 have been on strike at the plant since July 30 when the company suggested contract changes which would have restored conditions prevailing in 1939.

"Despite numerous plans on the part of government mediators to find a satisfactory solution to this strike, the company has remained obdurate and undeviating in its position and unresponsive to any appeals to find a rational solution to the differences which have arisen," Rieve said.

"Frankly, I'd suggest lowering the prices of our new cars so that we can afford to buy them ourselves!"

TO PROBE DISASTER: Chairman John Duda of the Donora, Pa., Borough Council, (l.) accepts a check for $10,000 from Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers. The check was presented by the union to finance a probe of the death of 19 during the smog that hung over the town. Duda is USA Local's treasurer at the Donora Zinc Works of the American Steel & Wire Co.

Jouhaux Gives Political Angles in French Strike

STRONG political overtones to the strike of French coal miners were pointed out last week by Leon Jouhaux, leading French union official and a member of the "Workers' Strength" movement.

In a letter to CIO Pres. Murray, Jouhaux that "neither I nor my comrades of the Workers Strength would accept, for any reasons whatsoever, any restriction of the trade union liberties which we regained after so many hard struggles and sacrifices."

But the miners' strike, Jouhaux wrote, was launched by Communist trade union leaders "for reasons which are only the pretext for a social agitation ordered by the Cominform at a moment when the UN Assembly meets in France."

"This strike had for its first objective the sabotage of the Marshall Plan, as Benoit Frachon, secretary general of the Communist CGT (General Federation of Labor), formally declared," according to a report on the situation which Jouhaux forwarded to Pres. Murray.

"Its second objective was to impose the return of the Communists into the French government," the report said. Jouhaux said that that objective had been openly proclaimed by a Communist member of the Chamber of Deputies.

It added that satisfactory amendments to an unpopular decree of the French Ministry of Production—issued a year ago—would have easily been possible, and that assurances had been made by "competent ministers of the government" that regulations would be changed.

"But the Communist trade union leaders failed to let this fact be known to their members and sympathizers," the report declared.

The Workers Strength report noted that statements supporting the strike made recently by John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers were obviously based on "noble ideals . . . and high human sentiments." It said the Lewis statement is being "exploited by the Communist press" of France and the strike has political causes which Lewis "certainly" did not know.

U. S. Labor Leaders

Visit Plants In England

AMERICAN trade union representatives on the Anglo-American Joint Production Committee have had a busy time these past few weeks. After a series of full committee meetings the U.S. labor leaders began touring British plants in industries with which they are familiar.

Upon arriving in London, the four union men sat down with eight British labor spokesmen, eight British employers and four American business men for the first series of meetings of the U.S.-British committee that is designed to help improve England's production techniques.

After a week of discussions the American members left London to inspect British factories. President Harvey Brown of the Int'l. Association of Machinists-unaffiliated is studying electrical engineering and machine tool shops, while CIO Auto Worker's Educational Director Victor Reuther visits auto and tire factories.

Pres. Lee Minton of the AFL Glass Bottle Blowers is touring Great Britain's textile industry, and Assistant Grand Chief A. J. Harkins of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen is investigating work practices in the radio, food and pottery industries.

A Chip Off Old Block

Mrs. Gladys Allen, wife of a staunch union member of Local 449, CIO Auto Workers, Rockford, Ill., hadn't seen son Tommy, age 8, around the house.

Hearing voices from the garage, she knocked on the garage door, and inquired what was going on.

"Go away!" floated back Tommy's indignant voice, "This is a union meeting!"

When Dad came home that evening he was delighted to find that Tommy, as chairman, had conducted a union meeting with six of his playmates. Presumably they were laying plans to handbill the corner grocery store which no longer, due to the inflation, sells penny

Perrine Named URW Organizing Head

Fleet Perrine, former District 1 field representative, was named CIO Rubber Workers' organizational director by the URW executive board at its last meeting at Pittsburgh. He succeeds N. H. Eagle.

SOMETHING FOR YOUR MEMBERS

COMPLETE COVERAGE!

You owe it to your members to give them complete coverage of the 1948 CIO Convention—which they can only get in The CIO News.

On the basis of present orders, The CIO News is planning a heavy press run of the special convention issue, dated Nov. 29.

Orders already received are beyond all expectations.

Order now! Don't run the risk of getting your order in after the supply is exhausted.

Special Rates

● BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1,000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1,000 and 2,000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2,000. Extra special rates for very large orders.

In sending the lists of addresses for your bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each of these addresses.

● INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1,000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1,000 and 2,000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2,000. Extra special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged for by sending us mailing strips, not more than 2½ inches in width

George De Nucei, CIO Regional Director, Columbus, Ohio, reports that a union shop election held at the Nestle Milk Co., Marysville, Ohio, resulted in 124 for, and 4 against. RWDSU Intl. Rep. Jerry Hughes was in charge.

De Nucci further reports that in the first decertification election held in Columbus, the AFL Chemical Workers at the American Oxide plant were defeated by a vote of 88 to 26. CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers have been on strike at the plant for over 100 days. The company refused to renew its contract with the union because the union had not complied with the Taft-Hartley Act.

Martin Gerber, Director, Region 9, UAW-CIO reports the following elections: Black-Mill and Lumber Co., Midland Park, N. J., UAW-CIO 61, independent union 15, no union 1, void 2; Remington Rand Corp. Syracuse, N. Y., UAW 610, IAM 57, no union 109. This latter campaign was under the direction of UAW, Sub-Regional Dir. Wm. F. X. O'Mealia.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Director of Organization, IUMSWA, reports that in an NLRB election among the office workers of Todd Shipbuilding Co. at Hoboken, N. J., 38 votes were cast for IUMSWA, 37 against; eighty-five were eligible to vote, 75 votes were cast. A Natl. Mediation Board election was held at Long Island Railroad for marine engineers and firemen. The results: eligible to vote 44, URRWA-IUMSWA 24, AFL 16, void 2. In a card check conducted by the Natl. Mediation Board, among the marine engineers, firemen and oilers of the Erie Railroad Co. 106 cards were recorded for the URRWA-IUMSWA out of 134 eligible to vote.

All roads lead to Portland, Ore. The CIO Executive Board will meet there this week and the convention committees will start to function preparatory to the opening of the CIO Convention.

The great labor victory in the election has created more hope and determination to build our industrial democracy and many matters of vital importance will be decided at the coming gathering.

The results have demonstrated again the wisdom of President Murray and the majority of the CIO Executive Board. We can look forward to the shackles of the Taft-Hartley Act being removed and a further growth and development of a democratic trade union movement, the bulwark of all our Democracy.

FTC Finds Viscose Firm Misrepresents

An attack on misleading tests of consumer goods was contained in an FTC order aimed at the American Viscose Corp. of Wilmington, Del. The corporation was ordered to "stop misrepresenting the nature of standards under which products containing its rayon yarn or fibers are tested and approved."

American Viscose does send its materials to be tested by the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau, Inc., the FTC found. However, the fabrics are then tested by the bureau according to standards set by American Viscose itself. No independent agency has anything to do with setting the fabric testing standards.

CONVENTION: The 10th constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations is being held this week at Portland, Ore. Above, you see that city, with lovely Mount Hood in the background. To the left, a group of spectators listens intently to convention proceedings. To the right is CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who again is presiding over the gathering.

Murray To Convention:

PAC WORK HIGHLIGHTED CIO's YEAR

"THE re-electon of Pres. Truman was clear indication that labor and all the American people stand solidly behind the principles of the New Deal, and want those principles translated into constructive action," Pres. Philip Murray has reported to the 10th CIO Constitutional Convention.

The report, a 107-page document covering every phase of CIO activity, hailed the "magnificent achievements of our PAC, which played so tremendous a role in organizing the vote for Truman and for a liberal Congress."

Murray said PAC activity smashed "evil effort" by "scheming reactionaries to wipe out the gains of the past few years." It paves the way, he said, for Congressional action on a program "which now has the full and clear endorsement of a large majority of the people.

"The campaign showed that our PAC is now recognized—as we in the CIO have long regarded it—as a permanent political force of major importance. Its future is assured," Murray predicted.

The report on PAC—written before the November 2 election—said that labor political activity in 1948 had "reached its greatest peak and . . . was on a sounder basis than at any other time in the history of our country."

MURRAY noted the "cumulative effect" of concentrated labor political effort during the past few years. He said that "professional politicians on all levels sought the advice and counsel of our political action people and candidates for office were more anxious than ever before to get our views on important political issues. In hundreds of instances members of CIO unions themselves ran for public office and in many cases were elected to city, county and state office or were appointed to city, county and state positions."

The growth of labor's political organizations, Murray declared, makes apparent the fact that CIO members are becoming "increasingly aware of the necessity of continuing political action, on a year-round basis, as an integral part of trade union activity."

Economic developments have followed a steady pattern, Murray said, since the end of the war, although "we have done all in our power in the past year to reverse the trend of skyrocketing prices and inflated profits."

The CIO's 1948 wage policy, he declared, was pursued with "the express hope of restoring lost purchasing power which had been eaten away by rising prices."

He said that CIO would continue to press for development of a stable, full-employment, full-production economy supplanting the present high-price, low-production system.

The report sharply criticized the 1948 Federal tax bill and said CIO would continue to "advocate the adoption of a sound and effective tax program which would promote full employment at a fair wage, full production, and mass purchasing power.

THE largest single section of the report —20 pages—was devoted to a sharply critical analysis of the workings of the Taft-Hartley law and of various state anti-labor statutes.

"Labor's experience under the act fully substantiates its charges that the law is vicious and unfair," Murray declared. He charged that a deliberate propaganda campaign has attempted to "keep from the American people the grim story of what this Act is and what it does," and that "glib propagandists" have sought to convince the public that the law "actually benefits labor."

But, he pointed out, "the tremendous industrial unrest which the Act has bred, the chaos and resentment at the plant level which it has brought into being, the provocations and arrogance of plant management which it has encouraged . . . cannot be concealed or explained away by the NAM's glittering propaganda.

"The record is making clear (1) that the Taft-Hartley Act is promoting organizational strikes on a widespread scale, and (2) that it is giving employers new strike-breaking weapons."

Nevertheless, Murray reported, "this concerted attack has been successfully resisted by all of our affiliates and in nearly every instance CIO unions have continued to grow."

The report showed that CIO received 92,041 votes to win 475 of 792 collective bargaining elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board; that it won 2,729 of 2,761 union shop authorization elections in which CIO unions participated between August 22, 1947, and July 31, 1948; and that it won 24 of 40 elections conducted by the National Mediation Board among railway, airline and railway terminal employes in which CIO unions participated.

The report noted that the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, which had started as a loose conference of 22,000 workers, has developed into a strong, tightly-knit group of 76,000 members, with other large groups in the process of affiliating.

Some 855 local unions have been established through activities of the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive, President Murray noted; and in addition 159 petitions for NLRB elections are pending.

He said that membership gains from the Southern Drive are fast approaching a half-million, and that the "CIO has exerted an influence in the South far out of proportion to the number of new unions that have been granted recognition as bargaining agencies. . . . This is particularly true as regards wage rates and civil liberties."

THE European Recovery Program's success "seems assured in the face of extreme foreign and domestic opposition," Murray declared in a review of CIO's support for ERP legislation and its cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Administration.

With active labor participation now assured in ECA, Murray reported, "CIO officers intend to work closely with our democratic fellow trade unionists in the participating countries, in the true tradition of international solidarity of labor, so that rehabilitation of people and reconstruction of communities may earlier bring us to world peace."

The course of the World Federation of Trade Unions—to which CIO is affiliated—was stormy as a result of differences among affiliated national centers on such questions as ERP and the German crisis, Mr. Murray pointed out, and as a result many WFTU meetings were "rendered nearly valueless."

The CIO legislative program, adopted at the Executive Board's meeting early in September, is one "to which we will devote our full energy in the months ahead," President Murray predicted.

The 13-point program on domestic issues calls for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and re-enactment of the Wagner Act; an anti-inflation program and "recapture of excess profits;" passage of a comprehensive housing bill; enactment of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights; improved coverage under the Wage-Hour law, and lifting of minimum wages to "at least $1 an hour;" strengthened and improved social security; an adequate national health insurance program; federal aid to education; a restored and strengthened Department of Labor; upward revision of veterans' benefits; support of the Tennessee Valley Authority and other projected river developments; a farm program including reasonable price support, farm credits, soil conservation, and improvement of rural living standards; and extension of reciprocal trade agreement authority on a long-range basis.

Other highlights of the report:

Health, Welfare & Pension Plans: Murray indicated that until present "grossly inadequate social security plans" are improved, labor will "have no choice" but to seek the attainment of "sufficient security for workers through collective bargaining."

Guaranteed annual minimum wages are a highly desirable goal, particularly if an expanding defense program leads to "economic dislocations."

Sharply cut appropriations for the Dept. of Labor have "deprived unions of proper service" and steps should be taken to restore the Department's stature on a basis of equality with the Depts. of Agriculture and Commerce."

Millions Are In Dire Need Of Housing

WHILE millions of American families are in dire need of decent housing, the large part of the new homes built this past year continue to be priced far beyond what the average citizen can pay, Pres. Murray reported to the convention.

In spite of the nation's critical housing needs, the report declared, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill which made provision for the construction of 100,000 low cost housing units a year, for five years, was prevented from being brought to a vote by the Republican leaders in Congress, in alliance with a powerful real estate lobby.

Instead, the totally inadequate Housing Act of 1948 was "scrambled together in the final moments of the session" and was passed Aug. 6 this year, the report said. This act, the report declared, assured the home construction and home finance industries of every possible protection against loss.

Although not all members of Congress share the blame, the report said, "Congress failed miserably to meet the needs of millions of citizens whose housing circumstances were disrupted by the war," and "it failed in its obligation to aid the cities and states clear the slums and redevelop blighted areas."

One section of the bill which passed, however, may be of some benefit to those who need homes, for government insurance of loans for government insurance to loans made to housing cooperatives—90% for non-veterans and 95% for veterans. The CIO committee expects to make use of this provision by fostering cooperative organizations among CIO members.

The report said that the Rent Control Act of 1948, although inadequate, offers some small protection for tenants by (1) requiring that Area Rent Control boards be truly representative of all elements in the community, and (2) by requiring landlords to inform tenants that the signing of a lease with an increased rent is voluntary.

The report warned that a drive to end all rent controls on the scheduled expiration date, April 1, 1949, has been started, and urged that efforts be exerted to extend the present provisions of the Act for those areas where protection is still needed.

Alabama TWUA Aids Fight On Dixiecrats

Representatives of 15,000 Alabama members of the CIO Textile Workers Union pledged their full support to Gov. "Big Jim" Folsom in his court action to make the state's electors cast their vote for President Truman.

Reactionary state Democratic party leaders had given his place on the ballot to the Dixiecrats. TWUA Washington Representative John Edelman told the meeting that the Democratic Natl. Committee is bouncing members who didn't support the Truman-Barkley ticket.

The Future

Pres. Murray on the future of PAC:

"It is reasonable to expect that the dollar-drive of 1949, which will be started early next year in preparation for the 1950 Congressional and State elections, will reflect even further the attitude of CIO members," who gave so well in 1948.

CIO Board Discusses Election At Pre-Convention Session

THE CIO's 51-man executive board met in Portland, Ore., for several hours Nov. 17, in a discussion of what CIO Pres. Philip Murray described as "routine administrative matters."

Questioned by a battery of reporters after the session in the Masonic Temple, Murray said it was "a reasonable assumption" that board discussion of a report on the greater New York Industiral Union Council would come up before a second pre-convention board meeting.

Murray said there had been "general discussion of the whole election situation" at the Nov. 17 meeting. Replying to a reporter's query whether there had been mention of the Third Party, Murray said smilingly, "No."

It was believed the New York Council matter had been held over because of the necessary absence from the earlier meeting of a number of CIO officials.

Among those not present were Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Pres. Hugh Bryson of the Marine Cooks & Stewards, and Pres. Harry Bridges, of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, who have been negotiating with West Coast waterfront employers to end a two-month dock strike; Pres. Samual Wolchok of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes, whose union convention is meeting in Michigan; and Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union.

THERE were few significant changes in the membership of convention committees proposed by Pres. Murray and ratified by the Board.

Van A. Bittner, Steel union vice-president and head of the Southern drive, heads the resolutions committee, as he has done in the past. Secretary of the committee—a post filled in other years by Lee Pressman, CIO Counsel who resigned early this year—is Joseph Curran, Natl. Maritime Union.

The important Constitution Committee is headed by Frank Rosenblum, CIO vice-president and secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Secretary of this committee is George Baldanzi, Textile Workers' executive vice-president. Rosenblum and Baldanzi held those posts last year.

President Truman, who has been invited to address the convention, has not yet indicated whether he will be able to make the trip to Portland. Murray said that Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin, Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.), Supreme Court Justice Douglas and Walter White, exec. secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will speak.

Murray had a busy pre-convention speaking schedule. On Nov. 18 he talked to members of the Portland Press Club at noon, addressed a banquet of members of the Americans for Democratic Action in the evening, and spoke at the banquet of the Oregon State CIO Council, whose convention opened that day in Portland.

Members of the Multnomah county Republican organization also heard a CIO speaker. He was Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, who complimented the Oregonians on sending Sen. Morse to Washington.

He deplored the fact that more men like Morse are not nominated by the GOP throughout the nation.

Research Dept. Backed Up Fight For Pay Increases

EFFORTS of the CIO Dept. of Research & Education have continued to be directed mainly toward aiding CIO unions in bargaining for higher wages and in promoting a national program to stabilize prices, CIO Pres. Murray reported to the convention.

Ruttenberg

As part of the drive, CIO economists were busy running down facts and figures to disprove the overwhelming flood of arguments that high profits are essential to the economic system and that labor is to blame for the inflation.

Pamphlets, radio speeches and a monthly bulletin, the Economic Outlook, have been some of the means used to back up CIO policies.

The educational division, in charge of Associate Education Director George Guernsey, used every available educational technique to extend the understanding of the CIO's program. Activities included regional conferences and leadership training institutes; quarterly meetings for educational directors of CIO Internationals and Councils, and extension of the film division.

The department also did extensive work for the establishment of a nation-wide workers' education program as provided by the Labor Extension Service Bill.

Stanley Ruttenberg is director of the Department.

Hillman Foundation Grants 6 Awards Totaling $30,000

THE first grants from the Sidney Hillman Foundation went to four universities for scholarships, to Dr. Frank P. Graham for his "selfless public service," and to British author Harold J. Laski for a lecture tour of the U. S. next spring.

A total of $30,000 was allocated from the million-dollar foundation, which was set up in memory of the late Sidney Hillman, leader of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and one of the founders of the CIO's Political Action Committee. After Hillman's death in 1946, the Foundation was organized and funds raised from unions, employers in the garment industry, and Hillman's many associates in public life.

For 1948-49, ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky announced that $5,000 had been granted to Roosevelt College in Chicago, and $2000 each to New School for Social Research, New York City; the School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., and Howard University, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and chairman of the World War II Labor Board, was awarded $1000.

For the Laski tour, up to $10,000 will be granted, to cover a series of lectures on "the role of trade unions in the U. S." and to pay for publication of the talks. An additional $4000 for research projects, awards still open, was allocated.

Retail, Wholesale Union:

Wolchok Wins; Opponent Pledges Support

By E. W. MURPHY

SAMUEL WOLCHOK has been elected by an overwhelming vote to the presidency of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes' union, a post which he has held since the union's inception in 1937.

The union's fifth biennial convention, held last week in Grand Rapids, Mich., chose Wolchok by a vote of 55,143 to 7382 over George R. Donahue, of New York. Donahue is national president of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists, but was seeking the RWDSE office as an individual and not in his ACTU capacity.

After the vote, the group led by Donahue pledged its support to Wolchok, particularly in the drive to bring back into the union membership of New York locals which seceded under left-wing leadership.

WOLCHOK, who has been active in organizing department store employes since 1912, declared the convention would be a turning point in the union's affairs. He outlined a program of continued organizational activity, with emphasis on Canada and the South, he reported steady progress in organization at the large Eaton store at Toronto.

He said "the Communist Party, which guides the actions of dissident elements, has singled out our union in an attempt to disrupt the CIO." He declared the defections have obscured the RWDSE's accomplishment of adding 20,000 members in the past two years.

The international has gone to court in an attempt to tie up the funds of the seceding locals, which had 23,000 members. The convention also created three vice presidencies to be filled by representatives of the locals as soon as they can be reconstituted.

Wolchok expressed confidence the international would defeat the dissidents in an election to be held soon at the Stern store.

The convention set up an action committee of the top officers and eight vice presidents to handle the New York situation.

OTHER officers chosen (their term was extended from two to three years):

Secretary-treasurer: Alvin Heaps, World War II veteran from Chicago local 15, succeeding John Cooney, New York.

Executive Secretary: Martin C. Kyne.

Vice Presidents: Cooney, Jack Altman, John Horan, Jerome Kaplan, Martin Koppel, Samuel Lowenthal, G. D. Procopio, Irving Simon, Julius Sum and Irving Trosty, New York; Max Greenberg and George Braverman, Newark, N. J.; Martin Janow, New Haven; David Chaney, Earl F. Wolfman and George Worrall, Detroit; Frank Parker and John Schulter, Birmingham, Ala.; Milton Weisberg, Pittsburgh; Harry Tuvim, Boston; Leonard Levy, Los Angeles; Thomas B. McLachlan and Norman Twist, Toronto.

Both the administration and the Donahue opposition issued statements condemning the action of Lawrence Steinberg, for leading a secession movement in Toledo on the eve of the convention.

Steinberg was reported to have made a public statement that the convention would be "packed."

In reply to his charge, the RWDSE executive board invited CIO Pres. Philip Murray to send an observer to prove that Steinberg's charges were untrue. Murray declined because most CIO staff members were tied up in pre-convention work at Portland, Ore.

Associated with Donahue were Joseph Kane, business manager of Local 25, and Joseph McCarthy, business manager, Local 906, both of New York.

The Donahue group attempted to give rank and file representatives of the seceding locals a full vote based on the locals' membership. Wolchok said such a move would play into the hands of the Communists. The convention upheld his contention. Five rank and filers from the seceding locals were seated and given a vote apiece.

KANE, in nominating Donahue, declared his group was loyal to the union no matter who won the election. He offered his followers' services in attempting to win back a right wing St. Louis local which took steps to quit the union six months ago.

The convention voted to hold a referendum on a constitutional provision to bar from union office any adherent to the Communist, Nazi or Fascist parties or any group advocating overthrow of the U. S. government by violence.

This issue split the constitutional committee evenly. When it came to the floor as the last action of the convention, many of the more than 700 delegates had left due to travel reservations. The move carried with a bare quorum voting 143 to 98 in favor.

The convention earlier had condemned Communism as a threat to all wage-earners.

The delegates also demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law, a shakeup in the State Dept. to provide a firmer policy toward Russia, admission of Israel to the United Nations, more liberal social security and public health measures, anti-lynching and anti-poll tax legislation, federal aid for education and repeal of anti-labor laws now on the books in 30 states.

The convention also increased the international's per capita from 50 to 60c a month but rejected a constitutional amendment to set a $2 monthly local dues minimum. The present minimum is $1.50.

BIG JOB AHEAD

There is a strong inclination on the part of Truman supporters to count their legislative eggs before they're hatched.

Many of them assume that the new Congress will jump at the chance to enact into law the program the President advocated during his campaign.

In doing this they are making a bad mistake. They are discounting—or completely forgetting—the forces in Congress opposed to various portions of the Truman program.

Don't get us wrong. We're not predicting that Congress will toss the President's legislative plans into the ashcan. Far from it.

We're merely saying that it would be foolish for the voters who put the Democrats in power to ignore the realities of legislative procedure—to ignore the anti-civil liberties bloc in Congress—to ignore the need for reminding some of the lawmakers that they have a mandate from the people.

It is a reasonably clear mandate and the Democratic voters should not permit it to become clouded.

And it won't become clouded if the "folks back home" keep reminding the men and women who were elected that the "do nothing for the people" attitude of the GOP leadership of the 80th Congress caused many political heads to roll.

Perhaps it's our fear of being over-optimistic (as the Republicans were) which causes us to paint the slightly dark side of the picture. There is another side——

THEY FOLLOW VOTE TRENDS

Senators and congressmen, with some notable exceptions, swing in their own thinking toward liberalism or conservatism in the same way that the electorate does—and this is bound to have considerable influence on the 81st Congress.

The Nov. 2 election demonstrated a strong swing toward liberalism and a strong swing away from the type of thinking which dominated the special interest lobbies in the last Congress.

And, then, there's that little business known as "party regularity," which has considerable influence on the lawmakers.

One group of the more liberal Republicans has announced that it will not be bound during the next two years by the "party regularity" influence of the GOP Old Guard.

Then there's good reason to believe that some of the reactionary Southern Democrats will fall in line with the Truman leadership.

Add to these elements the fact that the Democrats have control of the White House and both branches of Congress and the picture looks good—mighty good—from labor's standpoint.

GOP WILL TRY TO LIBERALIZE PARTY

The fight that will take place within the Republican Party during the next few years is likely to be as bitter—if not as noisy—as the battle which went on this year within the Democratic Party.

Many of the younger Republicans are fed up with the GOP Old Guard. They said so privately before the Nov. 2 election. They're saying so publicly now.

This group feels that the Republican Party must be liberalized if it is to achieve any real success at the polls in the future.

This feeling will exercise considerable influence in the upcoming legislative session.

The bad trouncing the Dixiecrats took will offer encouragement to Southern liberals and have a "softening up" effect on Southern Democrats who behaved like Old Guard Republicans.

It will be an interesting show to watch.

It's A 'Victory' Convention

Labor No Longer Being Shoved Deeper Into Doghouse By The Republicans

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU get tired of dodging brickbats, trying to roll with the punches, fighting a defensive battle.

Yes, you get tired, and disgusted, and disheartened. You wonder how long you're going to have to continue fighting with heavy odds against you.

Then you wake up one morning and find the voters have dropped a ton of bricks, so to speak, on the brickbat heavers.

You jut out that sagging, battered chin, throw back your shoulders, pat your colleagues on their backs and declare:

"Boy, this is wonderful!"

And it is.

OUT here in Portland, Ore., where the CIO is holding its 10th convention this week, you get the feeling that labor has been given a new lease on life.

Delegates talk optimistically about the future, about repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, about the growth of the union movement.

Some of them, perhaps, are too cockey about it—but it's normal to be a bit cockey when you back a long-shot who wins.

The realists are trying not to let their enthusiasm run away with their better judgment. They know it's a long way from a Nov. 2 election victory to enactment of the program outlined in the Democratic Platform.

But they know, too, that the first part of the battle already has been won.

IT'S not hard to close your eyes and visualize the doghouse in which the CIO would be miserably reposing had the Republicans won the election.

You can do some pretty good guessing about the "improvements" that would have been made in T-H if the GOP had gained control of the White House and retained control of Congress.

And you shudder when you think of how Big Business would have thrown its weight around.

You open your eyes, see happy unionists milling around and you know that fear is no longer present in them.

It's a good feeling.

THERE will be many victory celebrations before the convention closes next Friday — and many of those participating will forget for the moment how it felt when they believed they were fighting a battle on principle with little chance to win.

Others will recall that it took considerable courage to go out and fight for a Presidential candidate who had been counted down and out by all of the "experts."

There will be some who will declare in a "rub-it-in" manner, "I said all along that Truman would win!"

And those who hear such a declaration won't really care whether it's true or false.

It's that way when you suddenly start uphill after a hard, two-year downhill fight.

BECAUSE this is being written before the convention gets into full swing it's impossible to discuss the problems which the delegates will tackle.

But one thing is certain: Many of the problems that existed on Nov. 1 were swept into obscurity or whittled down in importance by the way the nation voted Nov. 2.

There are still problems, however, and there will continue to be problems as long as labor fights for improvements.

There will be another election in less than two years—and the group that lost in 1948 isn't going to crawl off into a corner and forget the importance of gaining control of Congress.

There will be a battle on Capitol Hill early next year when Truman places his legislative program before the lawmakers.

This column could go on and on, but, darn it, this is convention week and I'm going out to look for a noisy victory celebration!

GOP Ignored Pledges, Wrecked Labor Dept.

IN its haste to sabotage labor's gains, the 80th Congress lambasted the Dept. of Labor, leaving it a hollow—very hollow shell of its former self.

The majority of the 80th Congress, as most CIO members remembered on Election Day, was composed of Republicans. Those Republicans ignored their party's 1944 platform pledge to strengthen the department.

The convention report of Pres. Murray had this to say of the Labor Dept.:

"Further budget cuts were imposed, and the U. S. Employment Service was transferred to the Federal Security Agency over labor's protest and the President's veto.

"In the fiscal year 1947 the Department was given an appropriation of $33 million. The following year its appropriation was cut to $20 million. This year it was slashed to $14 million, or less than half of what it received three years ago.

"Three years ago the Department of Labor employed 7,000 people. Today it can afford to keep only 3,300 on its payroll.

"How does the Department of Labor's situation compare with the two departments that serve business and the farmers? For the fiscal year 1949, the appropriation for Labor is $14,258,150. The Dept. of Commerce will be given almost 13 times as much, $179,792,500. And the Dept. of Agriculture will receive more than 50 times as much, $730,994,708.

"This is a most deplorable situation, which we have sought to avert through testimony before Congressional committees and contacts on Capitol Hill. Labor, as a result, is deprived of proper service.

"A dangerous tendency to ignore labor has been demonstrated by the Hoover Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. It did not invite a single CIO representative to serve on any of its committees, although many big corporation officials are members."

Elect CIOer To School Board

For the first time in 28 years—and the second in the history of New Orleans, a woman has been elected to membership on the Orleans Parish School Board.

She is Jacqueline McCullough, editor of the Labor News Digest and a public relations consultant. She defeated her opponent by more than 10,000 votes, despite the fact that he had machine backing.

The mother of two youngsters in New Orleans public schools, Mrs. McCullough has a 10-year newspaper and radio background and has handled CIO public relations in the New Orleans area for more than a year.

He Preached And Preached And Preached

HIGH in the ranks of the CIO is a man who once preached an unplanned sermon to a skeptical, armed "congregation."

He did it despite the fact that he had not studied for the ministry and that his listeners were not welcome at the meeting.

Those who had been invited didn't show up—and those who came brought their shooting irons along.

So he stood in the pulpit and preached and preached and preached as the sweat rolled down his body.

IT happened back in those rough-and-tumble days when shooting organizers was considered by some industrialists as the best way of avoiding "labor trouble."

Our man had been assigned to a particularly rough district to aid coal miners in their efforts to form a union.

The mine owners set up an effective blockade and sent out word that any organizer found in the region would be shot.

Many plans for secret meetings of the miners were made and then discarded. Then the organizer worked out what he considered the perfect scheme.

But it wasn't.

INFORMATION that a young preacher would conduct services at a certain church on a certain Sunday was passed from miner to miner throughout the district.

Those "in the know" were told that the "religious service" was actually going to be a union meeting and that the "preacher" was in reality a union organizer.

The audacity of such a maneuver appealed to the union-minded miners and they made plans to be there in full force.

The day of the meeting finally arrived.

THE organizer, wearing the best black frock coat he could buy, got up before dawn, hired a horse and buggy and drove for some distance through the hills before arriving at the church.

He congratulated himself on the fact that he had been able to run the blockade without interference.

Feeling confident, he entered the empty church and started going over in his mind the things he would tell the prospective unionists.

Time for the meeting to start finally arrived and the church was still empty, save for the organizer.

More time passed and the church pews remained unoccupied.

Something had gone wrong.

THE organizer suddenly made his mind that he'd better start moving—and quick. Just then the "congregation" walked in the door.

Mine guards, carrying their guns in plain sight, took seats near the front of the room.

The organizer looked for a safe exit and found none. Then, as calmly as he could, he welcomed his audience, opened his Bible and began preaching.

He preached—and he preached—and he preached—and then he preached some more.

Finally he ended his sermon, folded his Bible, bid his audience farewell, walked out of the church and drove away.

He left behind a group of men who didn't know whether he was a minister or a labor organizer—a group which didn't act because of its indecision.

Describing the event years later, the organizer said:

"They could hear the preaching I was doing out loud but they couldn't hear the praying I was doing silently." A. L. S.

COAK—
DRAWN FOR THE NAT'L. CIO NEWS

We Must Press For Enactment of MVA

The reactionary temper of the present Congress prevailed during the sessions of 1947 and 1948.

While CIO representatives and others had spread on the records of several committee hearings the true facts and many sound arguments which pointed to the need of such an authority, it became apparent that additional educational work had to be done.

It was also clear that more comprehensive facts and figures, and indeed an alternative program to the Pick-Sloan Plan, worked out to some extent in concrete detail, were greatly needed.

As a result, the Regional Committee for an MVA—on which the CIO, along with the AFL, the National Farmers Union, the Missouri Farmers Association, Rural Electrification Cooperatives and others are represented—decided to undertake a comprehensive program.

It employed a competent engineer, Jerome Locke, a former colonel of the Army Engineers, who undertook to make a thorough engineering survey and submit recommendations.

Drafts of the engineering study are available as an indication of the best way of harnessing the river resources in the Missouri Valley. Beyond peradventure, this scientific report shows that the Pick-Sloan Plan, thus far the official Government plan for the valley, is impractical.

It becomes very clear that there is not enough water in the river to carry out both the Pick-Sloan plans.

A study prepared by Stephen Raushenbush of the Public Affairs Institute, of which Dewey Anderson is director, was issued earlier and confirms the general Locke conclusions.

IN the opinion of our CIO people, there can be only one conclusion: that the navigation proposal should give way to irrigation. It is not as if there were no railroads in the valley; on the contrary, the region is well enough supplied. True, many farmers believe railway rates would be reduced by water competition.

However, it is the theory of our regulation laws that such reductions should be accomplished by our public regulatory bodies. If these regulatory bodies are not functioning properly, then we should make such changes as may be needed. We should not abandon the field or feel called on to tackle the problem by indirect methods which sacrifice some other vital interest.

At the very least, if the navigation features are not eliminated entirely, some alternative proposal, such as that contained in the Locke report, must be included. The report of the regional Committee suggests that in place of a free-flowing channel, there be constructed on the lower part of the river a slack water canal with locks, following the river through most of its course, though departing from the river bed at certain points.

This would be more like the type of canal familiar a century ago. This proposal should be very carefully examined by the proper congressional committees or administrative agencies as an alternative to the complete elimination of the navigation feature.

THESE studies show that the kind of slap-dash, haphazard, so-called planning which has characterized the official programs for the river thus far is not consistent with the welfare of the people of this country.

It becomes all the more apparent that the only way in which an integrated development of the resources in any river valley can be achieved is through the use of a unified agency like TVA. Our membership everywhere and all our organizations should continue to press for the enactment of MVA legislation, and also for similar agencies on the Columbia, Arkansas and Ohio rivers, and in the Central Valley of California.

There are two ways to get at the problem of floods; one by the erection of dams, and the other by reforestation and erosion control.

It is a question of emphasis and judgment as to how much importance should be attached to each factor, but now that the engineering aspects of the TVA have been largely completed it would seem desirable for TVA to place greater emphasis on the social and biological as distinguished from the engineering phases of its responsibilities.

To say this is not to overlook the importance of the established federal agencies operating in the fields of soil conservation and forestry. These two problems, particularly forestry, are essentially nationwide problems, and particularly so where they involve enforcement measures.

The mere provision of cheap electric power in a given river valley is not enough. We need to establish democratic control over the migration of capital into the developed rivers, with special attention to the size and location of industrial plants and the residential communities dependent on them.

Too many CIO members in the Tennessee Valley are having to travel as much as fifty miles to work, and the same on return every day.

Murray Reports

All We Said About T-H Is True

MORE than a year's experience with the Taft-Hartley Act has substantiated labor's charges that the law is "vicious and unfair."

Thus, reported Pres. Philip Murray in his summary to the CIO convention of the Legal Department's activity, "the record is making clear

- "That the Taft-Hartley Act is promoting organizational strikes on a widespread scale; and
- "That it is giving employers new strikebreaking weapons."

The report cited example after example of T-H inspired violations of civil rights, increased use of injunctions against unions, NLRB attempts to enlarge the strike- and union-busting provisions of the Act, NLRB employer favoritism and interference with normal collective bargaining procedures.

Goldberg

In support of his contention that the law is increasing the number of strikes, Murray noted that such stoppages rose, in the second six months of 1947, when the Act became effective, to 17.2% of all strikes in comparison with 13.6% in the pre-T-H first half of the same year.

Nevertheless, the report stated, "The country today is being flooded with a propaganda campaign concerning the impact of this law on the law movement. Day after day we are informed by glib propagandists that the law has actually benefited labor, that it is merely designed to curb a few powerful labor leaders and that it has conferred untold blessings upon the rank and file.

"The tremendous industrial unrest which the Act has bred, the chaos and resentment at the plant level which it has brought into being, the provocations and arrogance of plant management which it has encouraged, the growing number of established collective bargaining relationships which it has destroyed, the revival of government-by-injunction which it has made possible on a widespread scale—cannot be concealed or explained away by the NAM's glittering propaganda."

A number of NLRB and court actions were cited to illustrate the complex new strike-breaking procedures handed employers by the law:

PERRY-NORVELL SHOE CASE: This case demonstrated how employers use the mere threat of government intervention to intimidate strikers, how strike-breaking injunctions are obtained before the union's guilt is established, how quickly the NLRB acts on an employer complaint in contrast with its molasses-in-January approach to a union complaint, how NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham views all strikes as conspiracies.

Cops Arrest Woman Striker

The report stated: "In that (Perry Norvell Shoe) case, the employer filed a charge on Aug. 27, 1947, alleging a jurisdictional strike, a breach of contract, and other claimed violations of the Taft-Hartley Act. Thereafter, on Oct. 6, 1947, upon consultation with the NLRB General Counsel's office, the employer filed an amended charge claiming a violation of the union coercion and restraint provisions of the act. On Oct. 8, 1947, this charge gave rise to a complaint issued by the NLRB General Counsel's office.

"On Oct. 21, 1947, a hearing was held. However, on Oct. 20, 1947, the company fired all the union leaders in the plant and notified its striking employes that 'a complaint has been issued by the Board charging the union with certain unfair labor relations practices. The Labor Relations Board issued this complaint yesterday and made a thorough investigation into the facts by its own investigators.

" 'We feel that you should know this and that the United States government has intervened into the matter. We intend to reopen the factory at 7 a. m. in the morning of Thursday, Oct. 23, 1947.

" 'Your failure to appear on the day and hour set for the reopening the plant will indicate that you no longer want your job and you will be replaced.'

"Completing the pattern, the employer obtained an injunction from a state court on Nov. 19, 1947, curtailing the picketing of his plant.

"On Dec. 12, 1947, the trial examiner found, contrary to the contentions of the company and the NLRB General Counsel, that the strike did not violate the contract, that there was no union misconduct on the picket line as contended by the office of the NLRB General Counsel, and that 'on the whole it will be difficult to find an instance of a strike as peacefully conducted under circumstances as provocative of violence.'

"Finally, the trial examiner ruled that the NLRB General Counsel's theory of union responsibility was unsound and improper.

"The union leaders have been discharged on the basis of the complaint, the employes have been intimidated on the basis of the complaint, the employer has adopted a martyred pose in a state court and obtained an injunction on the basis of the complaint, and a trial examiner has ruled that there was no basis at all for the complaint! . . .

"The union engaged in a strike which was not prohibited by any provision in the law. The General Counsel first argued that the strike was illegal because it exerted pressure upon the employer. He then argued that the strike was in violation of a collective bargaining agreement—a contention which was rejected by the trial examiner—and therefore the non-striking employes were coerced in the exercise of their right not to strike.

"In short, the General Counsel urged a theory which implied that any strike was coercive of the rights of non-strikers. In rejecting this contention, the trial examiner stated:

" 'The ultimate logic of the theory advanced by the General Counsel would seem to be that all strikes are outlawed by the Act, whether there is a collective bargaining agreement or not; for by the terms of Section 7 of the Act, employes have the right to refrain from, as well as to engage in, the concerted activities enumerated therein.

" 'A peaceful organizational strike, where there is no collective contract, may operate just as effectively to violate the right of non-striking employes to refrain from the concerted activities, and to interfere with their relations with their employer, as an equally peaceful strike during the term of a collective bargaining agreement. If the latter constitutes restraint or coercion, does the former, with the result that all strikes become unlawful under the General Counsel's construction of Section 8 (1) (A), despite Senator Taft's statement that NO strikes are outlawed thereby.

"The Perry Norvell case illustrates attempted enlargement of the coercion provision of the act on the basis of theory that a strike by a union coerces non-members. In his attempt to bring peaceful picketing under federal ban, the General Counsel's office has also developed the theory of intra-union coercion that peaceful picketing coerces members of the union."

SUNSET LINE & TWINE CASE: Here the NLRB ruled all mass picketing, however peaceful, "coercive" and thus illegal. Murray reported:

"In cases of so-called 'union coercion' on the picket-line the Act has been used in situations in which if misconduct did in fact occur an obviously appropriate forum would be the local courts and law enforcement agencies. This provision has had the effect which was freely predicted by labor of imposing upon unions not merely a double liability but a triple liability. The same course of conduct which would give rise to local police action is now being used as a basis for state court injunctions and federal cease and desist orders.

"The flavor of the kind of conduct

One Injunction Against Employer

Three types of federal injunctions can be obtained against unions, CIO Pres. Murray noted, 29 of which were sought by Denham in the first year of the T-H law's operation. In contrast, two were sought against employers, only one of which was granted.

Commented Murray:

"It should be made clear that the injunctions obtained under the Taft-Hartley Act have been extremely broad and repressive in their scope. When these injunctions are addressed to picketing they almost invariably seek the abandonment of all picketing. They do not confine themselves to limiting either the conduct or the message or the number of the pickets. When they are addressed to the act of striking they bluntly require that the strike be abandoned under the penalty of a contempt proceeding."

Oil Strike Scene: T-H Makes Police Eager To Use Tear Gas

'Violence Against Unions Growing' Under Taft-Hartley Act

A DANGEROUS product of the T-H Act and the atmosphere it has generated "is the growing use of lawlessness and violence against unions and union members," said Murray's report.

"Since the last convention of the CIO, state police and troops have been used against strikers on no less than seven different occasions."

The unprovoked police attack upon striking CIO Packinghouse Workers in Kansas City, Kans., last April was one such example.

Basing his assertion on a St. Louis Post-Dispatch story, Murray noted that:

"1. Police acted in response to open pressure from the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce, which issued an ultimatum to the Mayor demanding the police "get tough" with the strikers.

"2. Without a court order, police took it upon themselves to reduce the number of pickets on the line from about 15 to 10, then, wielding night sticks, they ordered other strikers standing idly on the sidewalks nearby to get into their union hall. When some of the strikers were slow in moving, the police struck them with their clubs.

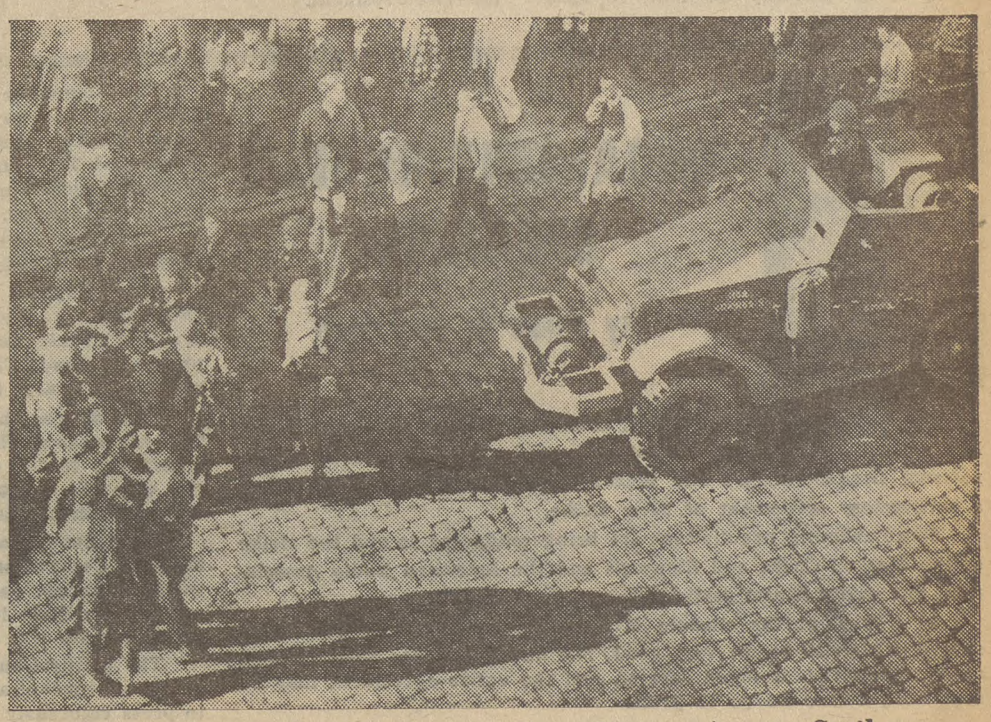
"3. Then police broke into the hall and continued beating men and women until all had fled the building. Assistant Chief Eli Dahlin admitted he lost control of his men. The hall was wrecked.

"4. No arrests were made.

Striker Beaten By Kansas City Cops

The day before the police attack upon the strikers, the Chamber of Commerce called upon the Mayor demanding that he instruct the police to act against the strikers. The police chief received orders to change the tactics of the police and he reluctantly agreed to crack down upon the strikers.

"As a result of the completely illegal actions of the police ten persons were hurt seriously enough to go to hospitals and about 40 others, including taxicab drivers and other passersby, suffered injuries."



Packinghouse Strike Scene: Guardsmen Arrest Strikers

which coercion charges address themselves may be obtained from this comment of the trial examiner in the Sunset Line & Twine case:

"'Having created a situation wherein human emotions might reasonably be expected to escape ordinary decorum and restraint, the Company may not then stand aside in innocence, aloof and without responsibility for conduct of individuals among the crowd. The General Counsel points to the presence there of two or three union officials. There is no evidence, however, that they were there BEFORE the police had arrived.

"'Furthermore, Gouvea, the Company superintendent, admitted that he also was there, moving freely about among the milling crowd. Under the circumstances, the Examiner is of the opinion that the respondent Unions may not be held to be accountable for the behavior of persons in this situation, which clearly was not of their making. Furthermore, not only subordinate officers but the heads of the city and county law enforcement bodies were also on the ground. They witnessed the events.

"'Yet, so far as the evidence shows no individual was formally charged, hailed into court, or found guilty of any misconduct. In effect the General Counsel urges the Examiner to recommend that the Board seek from a Circuit Court of Appeals an order requiring a local and an international union to 'cease and desist' from engaging in acts which although witnessed by them, the State, County and City police apparently considered of so little significance as to warrant not even police court action.'

"In its decision over-ruling the trial examiner the Board went so far as to hold that the conduct described in the part of the trial examiner's report quoted above constituted 'coercive' mass picketing for which the union was responsible."

THE WROUGHT IRON RANGE CO. CASE: In contrast with its rigid interpretation of "coercion" by unions, the NLRB in this case demonstrated its extreme tenderness for employers, according to the report.

Here the Board "found a blatant course of anti-union letters and notices to be privileged under the statute.

Included in the employer's conduct on the eve of the representation election was a representation that the company was their 'bargaining agent'; a warning to the employes that election results will 'bear directly on your welfare and the welfare of those dependent upon you'; that 'the company means to win this election'; that a defeat of the union will be 'a vote of confidence in the company.'"

THE TIMES SQUARE STORES CASE gave rise, said Murray, to "one of the most disturbing decisions of the Board.

A group of individuals filed charges during a strike that the employer was aiding a rival union in violation of the law. At the instance of Denham, the Regional NLRB director dismissed the charges on grounds that the individuals were agents for a non-complying union Immediately afterward, an election was held in which the striking union was not allowed to participate or to have observers, nor were the replaced strikers permitted to vote.

Under T-H, employes striking for economic reasons are barred from voting if they have been replaced by new workers.

Accordingly, the strikers challenged the replacements' ballots, on grounds that they had no right to vote, since the strike was not economic, but caused by the employer's unfair labor practices.

Murray reported that the Board ultimately ruled that it could not consider the unfair labor practices against the employer because the General Counsel had dismissed the charges. "Thus, even though the strike was not an economic strike, the Board arbitrarily called it an economic strike because only the General Counsel could issue a complaint that it was an unfair labor practice strike," Murray said.

T-H ACT Spells L-i-t-i-g-a-t-i-o-n

With the enactment of Taft-Hartley the CIO Legal Dept. was plunged into constant court litigation, Pres. Murray said. One case, testing the constitutionality of the T-H ban on union political expenditures, went to the Supreme Court, which held that the law's authors could not have intended this to interfere with freedom of the press. Constitutionality of the section thus remained undetermined.

Murray said the Legal Dept. will "actively participate in any litigation which reaches the Supreme Court in order to secure a determination that this entire gag upon political activity is in violation of the Constituton."

Murray On PAC:

'Membership Increasingly Aware'

HOW did labor perform its gigantic task in the 1948 election?

Many political "experts" were stunned by the results of Nov. 2. But, thousands of PAC workers, cooperating with and aided by other labor members, farmers and liberal groups, knew the answer. They had done the work.

Pres. Murray is telling the convention:

"Striking similarities exist between national and international union organization and political organization. Attention to detail and strong local organization are essential to both. There are also, however, striking differences. Trade union strength grows in proportion to the strength of the whole organization, while political organization, because of the nature of government, is strong only in terms of the strength of individual units.

"The election of a liberal mayor in one city does not necessarily insure election of a liberal mayor in a neighboring town, nor does the election of a progressive-minded senator in one state affect the character of the senator elected in the neighboring state.

"For this reason your PAC has intensified its efforts, started immediately after the 1946 elections, to build organization on the local level and to improve constantly these organizations.

"The record 1947, which showed clearly that results can be achieved in areas in which this kind of activity is carried on, was the guide for 1948."

FIRST came the primaries in which we were very active:

"The 1948 primary elections offered further proof of the fact that organization at the local level is the key to success and use of that key resulted in some spectacular victories being scored by labor.

"Among the notable victories were the defeat of Gov. Robert D. Blue and Rep. John W. Gwynne in the Iowa Republican primaries together with the defeat of anti-labor spokesmen in the state legislature; the defeat of Sen. Tom Stewart (D., Tenn.) and 'Boss' Ed Crump; the defeat of anti-labor candidates for governor and judge in Florida; the election of the PAC-endorsed gubernatorial candidate in North Carolina in an unprecedented run-off election; and the upsetting of Rep. Wirt Courtney (R., Tenn.) and Rep. John R. Riley (D., S. C.).

"A summary of the primary elections shows that two incumbent U. S. Senators, both of whom voted for the Taft-Hartley Act, were defeated for renomination by PAC-endorsed candidates. In the House of Representatives 15 incumbents, all of whom voted for the Taft-Hartley Act, were defeated in the primary elections. In 11 of these cases they were beaten by PAC-endorsed candidates.

PAC Workers Getting Out The Vote

"In no instance did a member of the House or Senate who voted against the Taft-Hartley Act lose in the primaries, despite, in some cases, strenuous opposition from the national officials of the Republican Party.

"CIO political activity after the primaries was concentrated in 24 states, 11 gubernatorial races, and 118 congressional districts.

"The selection of areas for concentration was on the basis of three factors. They were (1) number of CIO members in area: (2) strength of local organization; and (3) political history of area, including candidate's record and margin of votes in the last election.

"At the Democratic Convention in Philadelphia, 56 CIO members were present as delegates and alternates. It was their activity which influenced to a large measure the writing of the outstandingly progressive Democratic platform.

"On Aug. 31 the CIO Executive Board declared its endorsement of Harry S. Truman for President and Alben W. Barkley for Vice-President.

"Groups with different political objectives were frustrated in their attempts to confuse and divide PAC organizations, and in no case did they succeed in diverting the attention of PAC from the course outlined by the CIO Executive Board in January, 1948."

HOW was the campaign financed? Listen to Pres. Murray:

"All activities of PAC were financed by voluntary contributions from CIO members. The contributions reflected accurately the amount of political activity in the various national and international unions and, in some instances, there was great activity. The amount of activity and contributions was not commensurate with the number of members.

"In view of the fact that 1948 was the first year in which your PAC operated entirely on voluntary funds, the record of financial contributions is a good indicator of the worth of the political action carried on in prior years.

"A charge was made for literature prepared by CIO-PAC, based on a figure approximately 25 percent below the cost of preparation, printing and shipping. Millions of individual pieces of literature, including a 'Speakers Book of Facts' with reference material on all the issues of the presidential campaign, were prepared and distributed.

"In addition, your PAC produced four 15-minute radio platters, dealing with prices, housing, civil rights and Taft-Hartley; and one platter with eight spot announcements emphasizing the importance of registration and voting. These were distributed without charge.

"Coast to coast network time was also purchased by PAC.

"Research facilities which were widely used by all CIO organizations were also maintained by the PAC. "

THIS is the way Murray sums up his section on PAC:

"PAC believes that 1948 political activity by labor reached its greatest peak and that it was on a sounder basis than at any other time in the history of our country.

"Professional politicians sought the advice and counsel of our political action people, and candidates for office were more anxious than ever before to get our views on important issues. In hundreds of instances members of CIO unions themselves ran for office and many were elected to city, county and state office or were appointed.

"From the growth of local labor political organizations it is apparent that the membership of the CIO is becoming increasingly aware of the necessity of continuing political action, on a year-round basis, as an integral part of trade union activity.

"The record of the 80th Congress did much to prove the merit of CIO contentions that gains won through collective bargaining can be lost in the legislative halls of Congress and in state capitals.

"The determination of certain groups of employers to use the force of government to weaken and eventually destroy our union is matched by an equal determination on the part of the CIO membership, as evidenced by its participation in the political activities of our organization, to prevent the wresting of the powers of government from the hands of the people.

"The history of our country, together with the history of other nations in the world, indicates that when the power of government falls into the hands of one person or a small group of people, the people of that unhappy nation suffer the loss of their liberty and their economic status rapidly deteriorates. The evidence of history similarly indicates that when the power of government is rooted broadly in the mass of the governed, economic and political democracy flourish and the well-being of the nation is guaranteed."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

The writer and R. J. Thomas, Assistant Director of Organization, have been in San Francisco during the past week assisting the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union to bring about a satisfactory settlement of their strike.

Simultaneously negotiations are being conducted to end the strike of the Marine, Cooks and Stewards and the American Radio Association. The writer is also participating in these conferences.

At this point the chances of a speedy conclusion to the Longshoremen's strike seems very good. The hiring hall has been secured, union recognition is taken care of, and the entire agreement may be completed before we go to press.

We expect to conclude the MC&S strike at the same time.

The Telephone Traffic Employes' Organization of Northern California and Nevada is conducting a membership drive preparatory to entering into negotiations for a new contract with the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. This union is an affiliate of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee and covers the 11,771 telephone operators in this region.

All TWOC affiliates in this area are cooperating in the effort and a number of CIO field representatives have been assigned to assist.

The campaign was drawn up in conference between Maria A. DeMartini, president of the TTEO; TWOC Vice Chairman Ernest Weaver; Frank Murphy, president of the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers; Tim Flynn, CIO Regional Director, and Harold Ash who was in charge for the CIO.

This membership drive should be an example for all campaigns. The enthusiasm with which members of the ACEW and UBTW have joined the leader of the TTEO in signing up new members points the way for conducting future drives. Much credit is also due the various chairmen and representatives of TTEO.

From San Francisco the writer will proceed to Portland to attend the CIO Convention. There is great interest throughout California in this convention, particularly after the important part CIO played in putting the State in the Truman camp despite the fact that Dewey's running mate was a native son.

The political successes throughout the country and the election of so many representatives and senators again makes it possible for CIO to press vigorously for legislative gains and repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Reitman Resigns From PAC Staff

Alan Reitman, former Political Action Committee public relations director, has resigned from PAC.

Reitman joined the PAC staff in 1944, became its public relations director in 1945 and held that position until May of 1948, when he left Washington because of ill health and went to New York to receive medical treatment.

Later he was assigned to the New York PAC staff, from which he resigned last week. In a letter to PAC Director Jack Kroll he said, "While my health has improved considerably, there is still need for treatment which will require my being in or around New York City."

Security Contracts Advocated

WHILE the CIO has been in the forefront in the fight for adoption of an adequate and well-rounded program of social insurance based on legislation, it recognizes that such a program cannot fit every situation.

So, Pres. Murray informed the convention, we urge the use of collective bargaining to gain specific social security plans.

"The events of the past two years have done their share to make it clear that the people are not always well served by their legislators," Murray declared. And, "any move by workers to protect themselves against the hazards which they face would be bitterly opposed by employers."

He referred to the Steelworkers' attempt to foil a plan of the Inland Steel Corp. to fire—without a penny's compensation—workers at age 65.

He said it is perfectly clear that under present laws employers must bargain with unions on social insurance issues. Since employers have that realization, Murray warned that the "major battleground will be in Congress."

The CIO's Committee on Social Security last year fought for a broad legislative program. Congress, as usual, ignored the people's needs.

ANOTHER topic on which Murray touched, which is closely allied with social security, is the issue of guaranteed annual minimum wages.

Noting that though corporations are piling up exorbitant profits, Murray said "this fabulous income is not being set aside in trust funds to permit guaranteed wage payments to workers during the unemployment which we must expect when the inflationary boom bursts."

Noting also that farmers' incomes are being supported through the parity price program, and that millions of professional and salaried groups are assured of steady incomes through more or less formal arrangements, Murray declared:

"Guaranteed incomes to workers would provide an underlying stability to the nation's economy that would in the future prove of tremendous value in terms of healthy lives and a strong democracy."

'Way Down South It's CIO

IN DIXIELAND, the CIO is taking its stand, to live, not die.

One of the most glamorous activities of CIO has been the Southern Organizing drive of which Van A. Bittner is the head.

BITTNER

It has been a godsend to the South. Industrial freedom has risen by leaps and bounds.

Says Pres. Murray in his convention report:

"The drive has resulted in establishment of 855 local unions. There are currently 159 petitions for representation elections pending before the NLRB. In an additional 122 plants the organization is fast approaching a majority status. Initial organizational efforts have been made in several score other plants.

"The membership gain, both through new members and expansion of already existing locals, is fast approaching the half million mark as a result of the Southern Drive. This more than doubles CIO in the South, which was 400,000 before the Southern Drive was launched two years ago. Thus, the CIO Organizing Committee has accomplished more organizationally in the 29 months of its existence than was accomplished in the 11-year span prior to the drive.

"One of the important "by-products" of the campaign has been in the field of civil liberties.

"The CIO Organizing Committee has gone into court on many occasions to battle against local ordinances which abrogated freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. In not a single case has it lost a court decision.

"The campaign also has done much to foster improved race relations and to eliminate abusive treatment of South Negro workers."

Ex-GIs Came Out 2d Best

"WHEN Congress had to make a choice between the needs of veterans and the powerful interests, it was the ex-GIs who came out second best," President Murray reported in the section of his report on veterans.

"Nothing was done," the report continued, "to provide public housing or any of the other significant features of the original Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill.

The report pointed out that not a single item in the 10-point veterans' program adopted by the 1946 CIO convention was included in legislation passed by Congress.

Despite the fact that only 300 veterans had to become involved in litigation to get their jobs back and despite comparatively full employment, "the average veteran has not reached a status of financial security," the report said.

As proof of this, Murray said that by last Aug. 30 seven and a half million veterans had cashed bonds worth just over one-half billion dollars and that since V-J Day approximately eight million ex-GIs had to claim readjustment allowances for unemployment.

To overcome the hesitancy of employers to hire disabled veterans, CIO is seeking to have additional states set up second-injury funds, which would safeguard employers from any additional compensation claims resulting from the injury of the ex-GIs on the job.

Critical Era In Publicity

Due to the critical foreign and domestic situation, the CIO publicity and public relations program was of necessity expanded in 1948.

A major part of the publicity department's efforts were devoted to combatting the trend exemplified by the 80th Congress, according to Pres. Murray in his convention report.

Hundreds of publicity releases, frequent press conferences, arrangement for magazine articles, answers to thousands of queries, distribution of numerous pamphlets prepared by other CIO departments, the Union News Service, a weekly clipsheet, many mimeographed releases, pictures, mats and a weekly editorial information - prediction feature called "Inside America" — all these were undertaken by the department.

The CIO News was, of course, a major undertaking. Its circulation has increased steadily. The 1948 "Voting Guide" was a popular feature.

GE Indicted

General Electric Co. and three other companies have been indicted by a federal grand jury at Cleveland, Ohio. The charge: conspiring to monopolize the $10,000,000 street electric lighting industry.

Train 1000's To Aid Needy

IN cooperation with both public and private social service agencies, the CSC has trained thousands of CIO members as union counsellors, Pres. Murray reported to the CIO convention.

Operating in plants in 58 cities across the country these counsellors have assisted members and their families in obtaining aid and advice on matters of health, recreation, child care, evictions and other family problems. In addition to its community work, the CSC has a program of overseas aid under which it works closely with foreign relief agencies, including CARE and the United Nations Appeal for Children. During 1948, the Committee alone was instrumental in providing food and clothing amounting to $100,000 to needy trade unionists in foreign countries.

The CIO Community Service Committee's award to the American who has done the outstanding job in the field of health and welfare legislation was given this year to Sen. Robert F. Wagner, states Pres. Murray's convention report.

The Committee also presented the Senator with $10,000 to establish a scholarship fund in his name, for students in the field of labor and social welfare.

U. S. Heads For Bust --Murray

"WE ARE going in the wrong direction," CIO Pres. Philip Murray warned in his economic report to the CIO convention.

The seeds of depression are being sown, he said, in the soaring "unearned profits of inflation" and descending real earnings of workers. If a slump is to be averted after such "temporary props" as government foreign and military expenditures disappear, we must meanwhile establish a healthy economy at home, the report stated. This can be achieved, Murray continued, by taking steps to insure that:

"(1) Consumer income does not suffer. That is, that prices do not outstrip wages and that a halt is brought to declining purchasing power. This requires the establishment of controls over our price structure to prevent unnecessary price increases.

"(2) Business and industry be prevented from reaping all of the benefits such as they have done in recent years. This requires the adoption of an excess profits tax to remove exorbitant profits.

"(3) Essential materials, commodities and foods get to the proper places, the proper people, at the proper time. This requires the necessary authority to allocate, ration and control inventories.

"(4) The price structure is not frozen at the present level, but downward price adjustments take place. This requires that an all-out attack be made on monopoly and monopolistic practices to stop the practices of creating unemployment in the midst of a general prosperous economy.

"(5) The bottom does not fall from underneath farm income. This requires that a floor be placed underneath basic farm commodities.

"(6) The welfare of industrial workers is protected. This requires a floor under wages of at least $1 an hour, social security legislation and other similar measures to protect the industrial worker.

"(7) Our American people are properly housed. This requires low-cost public housing.

"(8) Capacity in basic industries is sufficient to meet all present and foreseeable demands. This requires an all-out program of plant expansion to increase capacity in such basic industries as steel, electric power, etc."

THE 80th Congress failed to take any of these steps. As a result, the economic picture today looks like this, according to the report:

"Our mass production economy must build and maintain mass markets for its products. Consumer income must expand with the ability of our economy to produce. However, the opposite is happening. We are going in the wrong direction. Real earnings are going down. Accumulated savings are being wiped out. Consumer debt is at an all-time high.

"While the great corporations and the wealthy further enrich themselves with unearned profits of inflation, rising prices are robbing the bulk of the American families of the means to consume goods and services that must be absorbed as our national output increases. Here is the seed germ of the next depression."

CIO Plays Vital Role In Marshall Plan

THE CIO's campaign for an adequate and just European Recovery Program was one of the primary activities of the CIO in 1948, CIO Pres. Philip Murray reported to the convention in Portland.

Int'l. Relations Dir. Mike Ross

In fulfillment of the decision of the Boston CIO convention to support the Marshall Plan aid for the reconstruction of Europe, he said, the CIO worked long and hard to help shape the final form of the ERP.

As a member of the President's Committee on Foreign Aid, headed by W. Averell Harriman, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey vigorously presented at many of the committee sessions, the view that European recovery was essential to the interests of American democracy and the American labor movement.

CIO members also served as representatives and advisers on the eight working sub-committees. The Harriman Committee's final report became the framework for the bill which passed Congress.

During the weeks of House and Senate hearings on the bill, Murray and Exec. Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the Textile Workers testified at length on the need for sufficient American aid to help rehabilitate Europe, to bring order and stability out of social movements of those countries, and to promote prosperity for Europeans and Americans.

The final bill, passed in April, was endorsed by the CIO, Murray stated, "as a sincere expression of the American people's desire to help European recovery without infringing on their economic and political independence."

Murray's report on the International Affairs Dept. outlined the important role the CIO continued to play, after the passage of the bill, in the Economic Cooperation Administration set up by Congress to administer the Foreign Assistance Act.

LABOR MEN ON STAFF

Paul Hoffman, who was appointed ECA administrator by Pres. Truman, named two labor men as his Labor Advisers on all matters of policy affecting organized labor. They were Clinton S. Golden from the CIO, and Bert M. Jewell from the AFL.

The CIO also loaned Ted F. Silvey of the CIO headquarters staff to ECA to serve as executive assistant to the labor advisers, and arranged with the American Newspaper Guild for the loan of ANG Pres. Harry Martin as Special Labor Information Adviser to Harriman, who is ECA's Special Representative in Europe. Martin is stationed at ECA's headquarters in Paris.

The CIO is further represented by President Truman's appointment of Sec.-Treas. Carey on the ECA Public Advisory Board, which is required by law to meet at least once a month under the personal chairmanship of the Administrator.

Other CIO'ers appointed to ECA jobs include Alan Strachan, Auto Workers, with the mission in Greece; Michael S. Harris, Steelworkers, French mission; John M. Hutchison, San Francisco Newspaper Guild, asst. labor information specialist in Paris; and Richard N. Kelly, Auto Workers and James H. Toughill, Philadelphia, Newspaper Guild, both as writer-reporters on Harry Martin's staff in Paris.

Another phase of the CIO's support of the U. S. foreign aid program described in Murray's report, involves meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions and conferences with European trade unionists. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is CIO representative on the exec. bureau and a vice-president.

Pursuit of the CIO's policy of working toward world trade union unity became increasingly difficult amidst the divisions and strains in international affairs, the report explains, and the course of the WFTU continued stormy, rendering WFTU meetings nearly valueless.

Following the failure to achieve cooperation among trade union centers in relation to ERP within the framework of the WFTU, the CIO, at the invitation of the British Trades Union Congress and the Benelux trade union centers (Belgium, Netherlands, Luxembourg) attended a Trade Union Conference on the European Recovery Program held March 9-10 in London. The AFL and two large unaffiliated U. S. unions also were represented at the Conference.

The CIO was represented at the meeting by Secy.-Treas. Carey, Intl. Affairs Dept. Director Michael Ross, and Elmer F. Cope, CIO's asst. secretary of the WFTU.

The London meeting voted to establish an ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee to support the recovery program and to represent the interests of workers in its operation. At a second meeting of the Committee held in July, also in London, the American unionists urged European trade unionists to participate more actively in Marshall Plan work.

CIO representatives at this meeting were David McDonald, Steelworkers; John Grogan, Shipbuilding Workers; Victor Reuther, Auto Workers; Elmer Cope and Michael Ross.

The July conference re-elected its continuing Committee and agreed to open an office in Paris as an information center, and to coordinate relationships of national trade union centers with the ERP Advisory Committee.

The CIO is also represented on the Anglo-American Council on Productivity, set up on the initiative of the British, through cooperative action of the Trade Union Congress and the Federation of British Industries. Four American labor officials and four industry representatives were named to work with six men from British labor and six from industry.

Victor Reuther, Auto Workers education director, was appointed to participate for the CIO in the Council's work, as one of the four U. S. Labor members. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers president, who was named first, was forced to turn down the appointment because of pressure of union work.

At the request of the ECA British Mission Chief, Solomon Barkin, Textile Workers research director, was granted a six weeks' leave from his union duties to make a study of the textile industry in Great Britain. Barkin sailed later in October and is now engaged in the project.

MANY ACTIVITIES

In addition to meetings of the WFTU and the ERP Trade Union groups, several other foreign missions have been undertaken by the CIO. John Brophy was appointed as adviser to the U. S. Delegation to the Intl. Trade Organization Conference in Havana, Cuba; Elmer Cope attended meetings of the United Nations Economic & Social Council in Geneva, Switzerland, and Michael Ross was the CIO's fraternal delegate to the first postwar Austrian Trade Union Congress. Ross also represented the CIO on a trip to Germany sponsored by the Trade Union Advisory Committee on International Affairs established in 1947 in the Dept. of Labor.

ERP Adviser Clinton Golden

CIO contact and working relations with the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization (UNESCO) is maintained through the CIO's representative, Stanley H. Ruttenberg, new Research & Education director. Ruttenberg replaced Kermit Eby on UNESCO, when Eby resigned from his CIO position to go to the University of Chicago.

Cooperation with the trade unions of Latin-American is carried on by a special CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs, headed by Jacob Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

During the past year, the Committee has vigorously protested the violation of basic rights of labor in some Latin-American countries, particularly in Cuba, Chile and the Dominican Republic, and has decided to send Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, as a special observer to Latin-America to gain first-hand information of the situation there.

"The CIO has earned during the past years," stated Murray's report to the convention, "the well deserved respect, esteem and friendship of the Latin-American workers. It is proud of this trust and hopes to merit it in an ever increasing degree in the future."

Steel Union Asks Court Decision On Pension

THE CIO United Steelworkers of America is petitioning the U. S. Supreme Court for a review of a decision by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals which in effect prevented the Steelworkers from bargaining with the Inland Steel Corp. for a pension and retirement plan because the officers of the Union had not signed the Taft-Hartley Law's non-communist affidavits.

CIO and USA Pres. Philip Murray has refused to sign the affidavits on the grounds that such a signature would be a violation of his personal rights. Many other labor leaders who are also opposed to communism have refused to sign the affidavits.

In the Inland Steel Case the Seventh Circuit Court ruled that the corporation was bound under the Taft-Hartley Act to bargain with the union on the terms of a pension and retirement plan.

But the decision also said that such bargaining could not be compulsory until the union officers sign the non-communist affidavits required under section 9 (h) of Taft-Hartley. The Circuit Court decision upheld a ruling by the NLRB.

In their petition the Steelworkers declared that the requirements for signing affidavits before a union could utilize the services of NLRB are unconstitutional because:

(1) They violate the guarantee of freedom of thought, speech, etc., of the First Amendment of the U. S. Constitution (2) they are not narrowly drawn and invade basic rights under First and Fifth Amendments (3) they are vague and indefinite and impose tests of guilt by association (4) they constitute a bill of attainder, within the meaning of Article I, Section 9, Clause 3 of the Constitution.

The Steelworkers' petition pointed out the Supreme Court has already agreed to review section 9 (h) of Taft-Hartley Law in a case involving CIO American Communications Association. However, the ACA case involves a collective bargaining election whereas the Steelworkers case involves a question of pension and retirement bargaining.

The petition urged that the cases be heard simultaneously because the broad issues involved affect not only labor but the entire American people.

Union Label Committee

A new departure for CIO in 1948 was establishment of a Standing Committee on Union Labels.

"The union label idea is something in which the CIO as a whole has a substantial stake," Pres. Murray has told the convention.

The committee, as named by Murray, includes: Charles Weinstein, vice president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Edward Hughlett, general recording secretary, Brewery Workers; Martin Grayson, secretary-treasurer, Lithographers; Ernest Hebert, president, Barbers & Beauty Culturists; Samuel Wolchok, president, Retail, Wholesale; Ben Gold, Fur & Leather.

Murray points out that union labels "are of considerable importance in organizing drives."

ELECTION BRIGHTENS HOPE FOR LONGSHORE PACT

A NATIONAL election that promised Taft-Hartley repeal, coupled with a solid strike after seven weeks, put a brand new look on the West Coast maritime stalemate.

Before the election, the Waterfront Employers Association, relying on T-H support and a Dewey victory, refused point-blank to negotiate with elected officials of the CIO Longshoremen and CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards. There was no employer talk of a "speedy settlement."

Immediately after the election the employer line turned somersaults, the management negotiating committee was changed and at this writing final settlement appears imminent.

Heading the union negotiators were CIO Organizational Dir. and Vice-President Allan S. Haywood and his assistant R. J. Thomas. The agreement will be underwritten by Natl. CIO. One issue resolved soon after talks resumed was the coveted union hiring hall, which will remain intact.

Among the issues longest in dispute is the union's demand for a 15c hourly wage increase or 13c with a December 15 wage review. Both increases would be retroactive to June 15, 1948, contract expiration date.

Joint union-management press releases and a statement by the new management negotiating committee underscored the new conciliatory management attitude.

Said John Kilpatrick, of the American President Lines and WEA negotiating committee chairman: "We who represent the employers are here with a new committee, a new outlook, and a desire and determination to negotiate with you a fair and workable agreement."

WHEN THE KIDNAPPERS HUSTLED OFF OLD POP STORM THEY LEFT BEHIND A PIECE OF ROPE -- AND JIM HAS CALLED IN HIS TRADE UNION BROTHERS TO IDENTIFY THAT ROPE -- HOPING IT WILL SERVE AS THE CLUE THAT WILL HANG THE VILLAINS!

NOTHING UNUSUAL ABOUT THIS ROPE, JIM. ORDINARY HEAVING LINE YOU CAN FIND ON ANY SHIP.... WHAT BEATS ME THOUGH IS THE POOR CONDITION IT'S IN.... LIKE LYING OUT ON A DECK IN ALL KINDS OF WEATHER!

AND YOU'D NEVER LET HEAVING LINE JUST LIE AROUND AND ROT, WOULD YOU?

NO SAILOR WOULD, JIM! ESPECIALLY A UNION MAN WHO KNOWS HIS BUSINESS AND TAKES CARE OF THE GEAR!

AND THAT MAY BE A CLUE.... AT LEAST I FEEL THERE'S SOMETHING IN THAT --- IF I COULD ONLY FIGURE IT OUT!

WELL, YOU WON'T BE NEEDING US ANYMORE FOR A WHILE, JIM. WE'VE GOT A LITTLE CELEBRATING TO DO, YOU KNOW.... WE WORKED PRETTY HARD RINGING DOORBELLS ALL THROUGH THE ELECTION CAMPAIGN....

SURE, MIKE.... AND THE RESULTS SHOW THAT IT PAYS TO RING DOORBELLS! I'LL CALL YOU AS SOON AS THERE IS SOMETHING NEW TO REPORT!

WE'VE BEEN CRACKING OUR HEADS OVER THE ROPE CLUE.... AND GETTING NOWHERE. WHY SHOULD A HEAVING LINE BE LEFT ON DECK TO ROT? IF I COULD ANSWER THAT QUESTION....

MAYBE THE CREW WAS DRUNK.... NOPE! THE UNION WOULDN'T STAND FOR THAT KINDA STUFF....

BUT WHAT IF THERE WAS NO CREW ON THE SHIP?

NOPE! WHAT KIND OF SHIP WOULD THAT BE? WITHOUT A CREW---

OH, THERE'S PLENTY OF SHIPS LAID UP IN THE RIVER.... WE BUILT THOUSANDS OF THEM FOR THE WAR -- AND NOW THE SHIP-OWNERS DON'T WANT THEM USED IN COMPETITION....

THAT'S IT!

THERE ARE A COUPLE OF HUNDRED SHIPS TIED UP IN THE RIVER.... IN MOTHBALLS -- AND RUSTING AWAY! WHO GUARDS THEM?

OH, JUST A COUPLE OF OLD TIMERS WORK THERE AS WATCHMEN....

AND THAT'S WHERE THE HEAVING LINE COMES FROM! SOMEWHERE ABOARD THOSE SHIPS MUST BE THE KIDNAPPERS HIDEOUT.... THAT'S WHERE THEY GOT THE ROPE TO TIE UP POP, AND THAT'S WHERE THEY'LL GO WHEN THINGS GET TOO HOT FOR THEM!

CAN YOU HANDLE A MOTORBOAT? KNOW WHERE WE CAN RENT ONE?

SURE.... ON BOTH COUNTS!

THEN COME ON! WE'RE GOING ON A BOAT RIDE.... AND I THINK WE'LL BE COMING HOME WITH POP!

CIO Rises Despite T-H

THE Big and Little Taft-Hartley laws plagued CIO's organizational efforts this year, but the concerted attack was successfully resisted.

One of the means by which industry and its Congressional and State stooges hoped to wreck labor was the Taft-Hartley provision requiring NLRB votes over the union shop. But, from Aug. 22, 1947, to July 31, 1948, the CIO won 2,729 out of 2,761 union shop elections in which it participated.

That's a victory percentage of 98.88 per cent.

The Organization Dept., which is under the direction of CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, now has 37 regional directors, 6 subregional directors, 71 field representatives and 3 national representatives. There are also 39 field representatives, paid by CIO, who are assigned to various affiliated unions.

In his report to the convention, Pres. Murray had this to say of our various unions and organizing groups:

Auto: "Won 125 NLRB elections involving 55,000 workers; 120 new local charters."

Textile: "Now represents 470,000 workers. Many mills, particularly in the South, resisted bargaining even after elections were won, as high as 30 at one time stalling or refusing to bargain."

Clothing: "Made substantial gains in increased wages, and additional paid holidays, extended its social welfare programs, sponsored millions of dollars of additional cooperative housing."

Steel: "In the 2130 locals, there are 936,000 members. Since last convention, 108 companies have signed first agreements."

Shipbuilding: "Participated in 21 NLRB elections, won 17."

Electrical: "Membership once again reached all-time high."

Woodworkers: "Dues-paying membership showed a 10.7% increase."

Stores: "Issued 41 new charters."

Phone: "Developed from a conference of leaders to a strong, closely-knit organization with 11 functioning affiliates."

Optical: "Have made solid gains despite T-H."

Playthings: "Increased membership by approximately 65%."

Radio: "American Radio Association chartered in May. New agreements retain hiring hall."

Gas, Coke: "Increased its dues-paying members."

Brewery: "In Philadelphia, a collusive effort by AFL Teamsters and employers was crushed."

Lithographers: "Reduced hours of 90% of industry to less than 40 a week."

Communications: "Continued to operate in four closely allied fields."

Transport Service: "Has plans for considerably extending membership."

Furniture: "Has made substantial gains."

Cooks and Stewards: "Has organized four new steamship companies."

Shoe: "Plagued by runaway shops, it has managed to organize nearly every one as rapidly as they moved to unorganized areas."

Oil: "Won 45 representative elections and 104 union shops."

Rubber: "Notable progress in organizing the unorganized."

Fishermen: "Increased its membership 6%."

Packing: "Heavy problems . . . several hundred local officers and many active members discharged, blacklisted and face jail sentences following the long strike. Nevertheless, has made a truly spectacular comeback."

Utility: "Has chartered 20 new locals."

Stone: "Has chartered 14 new branches."

Paper: "Has secured bargaining rights in 26 plants."

Office Workers: "Renewed contracts or won increases for virtually all its members."

Public Workers: "Has held own despite many adverse circumstances."

Longshoremen: "Has faced severe employer attacks, and has maintained full strength."

Glass Workers: "Organizational activities have involved nearly 7000 members."

Maritime: "Despite struggle within union to prevent political domination, many newer steamship companies signed up."

Barbers: "Organized new locals in four states."

Engineers: "Marked slack in shipping made membership gains lower."

Growing CIO Councils Expand Endeavors

THE steady growth of industrial union councils — the CIO's good right hand in state and local areas—is shown by the fact that we now have 39 state councils and 247 city and county councils.

The latest state council is that in Louisiana. Since they first were set up, the councils have grown to be one of the most important cogs in the CIO wheel. At first, councils were concerned mainly with organizational work. Now, they are still concerned with that endeavor, but have added a multitude of duties as a serious part of community and civic cooperation.

John Brophy Directs Council

Council Activity: Awarding Scholarship

Pres. Murray has told the convention:

"Once the foundation of industrial unionism had been laid in steel, in automobiles, and other basic industries, responsibilities for the progress of new organizing fell more exclusively on the shoulders of the organizing committees and internationals, with the assistance of the regional offices. The councils turned their attention on the state level to state legislation and on the city and county level to contacts with local governments. They also threw their weight into the effort to get progressive legislation in Congress.

"Broadening out into the political field, many of our councils acquired invaluable experience in getting the membership of their locals registered for election purposes and mobilizing on election day. With the setting up of the National PAC, the work of the Councils and their respective PAC's throughout the country was greatly intensified.

"Another field of constantly growing importance for our Councils is that of union education. Greater and greater attention is being given to summer schools, training institutes, and the like, by our state organizations.

"Of equal importance is the field of public education. Particularly in our big cities, our councils have a responsibility to be good citizens in the sense of full participation in the activities of the public school system.

"The task of maintaining good public relations on behalf of our local organizations in each community is also part of the responsibility of our Industrial Union Councils. Public education can be viewed as a part of the general problem of public relations. It involves presenting a true picture of labor's cause to the great numbers of business, professional and farming people whose own interests, properly understood, are identical with the interests of the industrial workers.

"Council Dir. John Brophy called the annual conference of State councils in December, 1947, at the time of the Labor Dept.'s conference on labor legislation.

At the CIO conference the representatives consulted in preparation for the Labor Dept. meeting and thereafter reviewed all phases of the continuous work of the state organizations.

80th Congress Was An Unpleasant Sight

TO the CIO Legislative Dept. went the unhappy task of watching at close range the havoc the 80th Congress wreaked on the American people.

It was not a pleasant sight.

"It is painfully clear that many members of the House and Senate voted as outright reactionaries on almost every 'vital issue,'" the convention has been told by Pres. Murray.

Cowan

"Never before have industry and 'privilege' lobbies conducted so well organized and intensive a drive to obtain legislation harmful to the consumer and detrimental to the wage earner."

It is interesting to note that while the number of staff members assigned to legislative work by CIO affiliates was the smallest number in years, "the number registered by industry and trade associations soared to well over 1000," Murray said.

Here is a thumbnail of legislative activity:

TAFT-HARTLEY

"The CIO called for repeal of Taft-Hartley. Several bills were introduced; none was able to gather the momentum necessary to get out of committee.

"In May and June of 1948, Sen. Ball's special Joint Congressional Committee on Labor Management Relations — the 'Watchdog Committee' — conducted hearings ostensibly to find how T-H was working out in practice. It became evident from the start that Ball's purpose was to provide a forum for more stringent legislation. After presenting a body of factual evidence that the law was proving harmful to labor and to the economy as a whole, CIO witnesses argued for outright repeal.

MINIMUM WAGE

"It is a startling fact, which the general public tends to overlook constantly, that in the face of this national economic upsurge the federal minimum wage remains at the ridiculous and outdated figure of 40c an hour or $16 a week.

"There appeared at FLSA hearings a group of lawyers intent on misleading the public on the so-called 'overtime on overtime' issue. Much of the time of the hearings was taken up with a carefully calculated effort to confuse what was essentially a simple matter—that of paying regular time and a half rates for overtime on hourly rates to which certain routine bonus payments had been added.

SOCIAL SECURITY

"It was the understanding of the American people at the time that the admittedly limited provisions of the Social Security Act of 1938 were enacted that Congress intended to extend the law and increase its benefits as soon as the necessary factual experience was developed. Up to the present time, however, Congress has evaded and side-tracked improvements.

RENT CONTROL

"It can be stated without exaggeration that the efforts of the CIO Legislative Committee, more than any other group, were responsible for the continuance of some type of rent control legislation. In some respects the law, which will expire in March, 1949, is an improvement over the previous interim measure. The local advisory boards are required to be "representative in character."

AID TO EDUCATION

"The CIO testified in support of plans to provide federal financial aid to improve state school facilities. While taking no position on the controversial issue of aid to private as well as public schools, the CIO urged acceptance of a compromise to permit use of the federal funds in each state in accordance with their own legislative pattern.

"This compromise was passed by the Senate in the second session. It was buried in the House, however, by order of the Republican leadership.

U. S. EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

"The CIO actively supported the President's Reorganization Plan No. 1, which would have permanently located the U. S. Employment Service and Unemployment Compensation within the Labor Dept., where it belongs.

"Despite strong support from the field, both Houses passed H. Con. Res. 131, a resolution disapproving the Reorganization Plan and allowing the transfer of the USES to the Federal Security Agency.

LABOR EXTENSION BILL

"Hearings on the Labor Extension Service Bill were conducted by Senate and House committees. This bill, which has tremendous support from all unions and from many educational and community groups, would establish a labor education service for wage earners. It would bring federal and state funds to those universities and colleges which establish extension classes in cooperation with the unions. It was not enacted.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

"This is the program to which we will devote our full energy in the months ahead:

"T-H repeal and reenactment of Wagner Act; anti-inflation program; housing; civil rights; improved FLSA; strengthened Social Security; health program; aid to education; strengthening of Labor Dept.; veterans' aid; support of TVA and other developments; good farm program; extension of reciprocal trade system."

PORTLAND, OREGON: CIO CONVENTION SCENE

Here are Most of the 650 Delegates to the 10th CIO Constitutional Convention

Murray Blasts Progress in Three Fields

Probe of Organizational Failures Authorized

AFTER hearing a thorough analysis by Pres. Philip Murray of the organizing scene in CIO, the convention authorized the executive board to take steps to correct certain situations.

The convention, by better than a 10 to 1 standing vote, ordered that the executive board be empowered "to investigate the situations involving these affiliates of the CIO which have failed to make substantial progress in organizing the unorganized, and to take such appropriate action with respect to such affiliates, as may be appropriate and necessary to bring about effective organization of the working men and women within the jurisdiction of these affiliates."

The action came after Murray made sharp criticism in his keynote address of at least three unions, which have jurisdiction within the governmental, office and professional and retail fields.

Said Murray: "If we are going to lift the standards and improve working conditions, we must bring men and women into the unions, and unions which, for various reasons, are unable to demonstrate their fitness to organize the unorganized in their industries, to rise to the needs of these situations, should voluntarily submit to the executive board ideas with reference to their organization.

"That is the gentlemanly thing for people to do who are not capable, for one reason or another, of completing the job of organization in the unions and in the industries over which their unions assume jurisdiction."

Of the white collar industry, he said: "I must be perfectly frank with this convention and state that it is not sufficient, after 11 years or organizational activity to witness white collar workers having a membership of 34,000 out of the some 6,000,000 who are available for organization in that particular field." The United Office & Professional Workers is in this field.

OF government workers: "The same method of reasoning applies here and the structure of the Public Workers is such that years have demonstrated its inability under its present form, to meet the requirements of government workers."

Of retail: "I confess very frankly the inadequacies of the present organizational set-up in that industry to meet the requirements of its people. That has also been amply demonstrated.

"There are millions to be organized and it should be our bounden duty as a great national movement to render assistance toward the perfection of a type of administration that will sense its responsibilities and its obligations to the people employed in that mighty industry."

Pres. James Durkin of the UOPWA, in reply to Murray, declared: "Let me say that regardless of what decision is made, the white collar workers will not be satisfied with lack of organization."

Murray then sharply criticized the work of Durkin and other officers of UOPWA.

Abram Flaxer, president of the UPW, declared: "I suggest organization of the unorganized can be achieved by CIO through the united effort on the part of all affiliates on the basis of trade union unity, regardless of any other ideas."

Murray, in answer, asserted: "I say to you, as I said in a meeting with you, that a separate charter should be issued to a new international union, to assume jurisdiction over federal employes."

When the resolution came up on Thursday at the convention, Goodman Brudney, of the Public Workers, and John J. Stanley, of the UOPWA, spoke in opposition. Later, Durkin issued a present statement. The resolution, he said, "can only give aid and comfort to the employers."

After the resolution was offered, Julius Emspak, of the Electrical Workers, asked if it gave the board right to revoke charters.

Murray answered.

"The resolution does not give the right to revoke charters. The intent, as you will observe, is to carry out the recommendations of the president of the CIO. I told the convention there were a number of organizations which, for obvious reasons, were not carrying out the intent and purpose for which their organizations were brought into being.

"THESE organizations, under their present administrative set-up are neither competent or qualified to carry out the mission for which their charter was granted. The UOPYA has created within the framework of its international committee whose function it is to do nothing but send telegrams to the president of the CIO.

"I think that the executive board should be empowered to investigate the condition which exists in that organization. After investigation, it should be required to make proper representations to the officers of that union as to the policy that should be pursued with reference to that union's continued existence; whether or not the present officers are competent and qualified and able to build up an organization within that industry.

"They should examine the facts. I do not content myself with an examination of the facts as it affects the UOPWA alone. There are unions in the CIO where there are evidences of clear incompetency. When I say 'incompetency', I mean that the people who are directing the destinies of these organizations are not able, for one reason or another, to build up a membership in these unions.

"I am not going to protect the interests of small political cliques, who are going to maintain small organizations, captive organizations, and who are not going to perform the mission for which the organization was created."

EARLIER, the convention passed on "Organize the unorganized" resolution which said:

"Organization of the unorganized is the surest guarantee that the liberal program approved by the people in the recent elections will be enacted into law."

That is why delegates pledged to extend CIO organizing efforts and to rededicate themselves to the task of furthering economic opportunity for the hundreds of thousands "still denied the benefits of union organization."

Some opposition to what they considered "omissions" in the resolution was expressed by Delegates Selly, Communications Association; Flaxer, Public Workers; Matles, Electrical Workers, and Reid Robinson, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

THE four sought inclusion of a ban on inter-union raiding. The issue was first raised by minority members of the resolution committee before the resolution reached the floor. Majority members of the committee, though they opposed the principle of raiding, considered the plank un-

Text of Resolution on Probing Unions Failing To Organize

The following resolution authorized the CIO executive board to investigate CIO affiliates which have failed "to make substantial progress in organizing the unorganized."

The Constitution of the CIO expressly provides that the primary objective of our great organization is to effectively organize men and women into labor unions for their mutual aid and protection. The CIO arose out of the needs of the unorganized workers of America which we believe can be met most effectively by the industrial form of organization and by labor unions strong enough to deal with powerful employers.

Affiliates of the CIO are granted charters in order to help realize this objective of our organization. Most of our affiliates have made great strides toward the fulfillment of our goal of organizing the unorganized workers of this country. As a result of their efforts CIO membership, prestige and influence stands at the highest point in its history. We of the CIO are proud of this record of magnificent achievement.

However, a few of the affiliates of the CIO have failed in bringing about the effective organization of the working men and women within their respective jurisdictions. These organizations are therefore not fulfilling their responsibilities to these workers and are not realizing the purposes for which they were chartered by the CIO. This is a matter of grave concern to this Tenth Constitution Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations which, by separate resolution, has renewed and repeated its pledge to continue to extend to the unorganized workers of America the benefits of union organization.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED,

That this convention empower the National Executive Board of the CIO to investigate the situations involving these affiliates of the CIO which have failed to make substantial progress in organizing the unorganized, and to take such appropriate action with respect to such affiliates, as may be appropriate and necessary to bring about effective organization of the working men and women within the jurisdiction of these affiliates.

Murray Serves Notice:

'I Am Not Going To Permit CP Infiltration'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

WHILE Philip Murray was talking, I watched the faces of six members of the American Newspaper Guild — five men beside whom I had fought to rid that union of left-wing leadership.

While Philip Murray was talking, their faces glowed with elation. So did the faces of many others, who had waged similar fights in other unions. For Murray was telling Communists in no uncertain terms that they could not inject their philosophy, their splitting methods, their wrecking into the affairs of CIO.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran (l.) gets ready to introduce Walter White (center) to other CIO officers as UAW Pres. Walter Reuther congratulates him. White, executive secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, outlined a program for fighting racial discrimination. He called for keeping a vigilant eye on the 81st Congress.

The 10th constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations was a happy convention for most delegates. It was a victorious convention. And, above all, it was a convention that knew that there was a long road ahead, a road filled with roadblocks and bumps and steep hills. So, the convention took step after step to help clear the road.

"The responsibilities thrust upon us constitute great obligations that run to the people, to the poor, to the downtrodden, to the underprivileged."
—From Pres. Murray's keynote.

Everybody was happy over the results of the Nov. 2 elections—except, of course, a small group of diehards who had backed Henry Wallace. "Together with others, we won that election and saved America," declared Murray to the cheering delegates and visitors.

But, happy as the election results were, they had to take second-place to Murray's caustic attack on Communists, Communism and fellow-travelers. The attack wove through almost every issue which came before the convention. Most important issue was that of organization.

Not many minutes after he began his keynote address, Murray swung into the subject of organization. He was bitter over the failure of some unions to carry out the objectives for which they were founded. He spared no words in blasting union officials, either left to right, who had been "derelict in their duties."

He particularly criticized the leaders of unions in the governmental, white collar and retail fields. So sharp was Murray's criticism that the convention later adopted, by better than a 10 to 1 vote, a resolution which empowered the executive board to investigate, as Murray put it, "where there are evidences of clear incompetency."

And, warned Murray, "I want it to be distinctly understood that I do not care whom it affects amongst those who hold office in these unions."

On another occasion, he uttered these strong words: "If a Communist is leading a labor organization in CIO, and after years is unable to demonstrate his fitness to organize the unorganized, then in justice to the people employed in that industry, he should resign."

The delegates roared approval.

The purpose of the power given the board was made abundantly clear in these carefully chosen words of Murray: "so that the people employed in those industries may be provided, through this organization, the opportunity to bring millions of unorganized workers in industries over which these unions assume jurisdiction, into bona fide unions where they can render service to the people and render service to this country."

Murray's denunciation of Communists included such other phrases as "small political cliques who are going to maintain captive organizations" . . . "pouting people" . . . "small cliques who simply want to perpetuate themselves in office" . . . whose interests are promoted and propagated by the Daily Worker" . . .

Finally, a few minutes before the convention ended, he summed it all up with these slowly-spoken, unmistakable words:

"I should like it to be distinctly understood, as I have stated before—and I say this with much conviction—that under no circumstances am I going to permit—and I say this again, adding special significance to the support that I may receive from the executive board—Communist infiltration into the national CIO movement.

"I make this statement with sincere conviction based upon a knowledge that has come down to me through the years, of the damaging effects, the devastating effects, the degrading effects that special outside interests, particularly the Communist Party, may have upon the labor movement in the USA."

There were these other highlights of the convention:

TAFT-HARTLEY: were hardly the belles of the ball.

After a masterly exposition of the ills of T-H, CIO Counsel Arthur Goldberg set the CIO's goal in these simple, but dramatic words:

"We want to repeal the Taft-Hartley law. We want the Wagner Act back where it was."

That's it.

PAC: Unstinted praise was given Dir. Jack Kroll and his staff for the job they did just three weeks before the convention. Ever greater laudation was aimed at the rank and filers who worked the blocks, manned the polls, got out the vote.

Murray castigated those who supported the third party and he castigated those who opposed the convention's PAC resolution.

"There has not been an outstanding delegate who has presented any degree of opposition to this resolution here today but that has supported the resolution in prior conventions.

"Why do they oppose it today?

"Why did they support it yesterday?

"The line has changed. Yes."

And you should have heard the eloquent tongue of Michael Quill, a-speaking grand words about political action. Ah, he can talk, that one!

When Murray, and Quill, and Kroll, and Potofsky, and Rieve, and Bittner, and Livingston, and Reuther had finished, Murray called for a standing vote—and the faces of the anti-PACers were really red. The vote was:

For PAC 537

Against PAC 49

Said Murray wryly:

"Well, all of the things that have transpired here this morning are further evidence of the fact that CIO conventions are not wakes."

Then, there was the Marshall Plan—of which Murray has been perhaps the foremost advocate. The convention resolution, over the loud objections of

Shiny, New Gavel

Philip Murray has a shiny, handsome new gavel—"which I hope in succeeding meetings of the CIO and its executive board and perhaps at Steelworkers' meetings, to make good use of this gavel."

It was presented to him by James Fadling, president of the Woodworkers—"our jurisdiction is from the stump to the finished product, including gavels." Fadling pointed out that the gavel was made of myrtlewood—"which grows only in Southern Oregon and Palestine."

Organizing The Unorganized

"Each CIO convention since the beginning of our great organization has renewed and repeated its pledge to continue to extend to the unorganized workers of America the benefits of union organization," said the resolution on Organizing the Unorganized passed by the 10th constitutional convention. "That pledge is fundamental to the nature, origin and very existence of the CIO."

"With the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act and of anti-labor laws in the various States, big business and the forces of privilege and reaction in this country launched a powerful drive against organized labor, a drive in which they hoped to use the instruments of government to destroy organizations of the people.

"The people, however, repudiated this drive in the November 1948 elections. The people have voiced their determination to have the Taft-Hartley Act repealed and the anti-labor laws in the various states stricken from the statute books. This election victory should furnish new inspiration and give renewed impetus to the organization by the CIO of those workers who still do not enjoy the benefit of collective bargaining and union conditions of employment.

"An important part of the organizational activities of the CIO is taking place throughout the south, where there are thousands of unorganized workers still living under substandard wage and working conditions and denied the strength and security of union contracts. During the period of its operation the CIO Organizing Committee, under the splendid leadership of Van A. Bittner, has carried the message of the union movement to thousands of southern workers. In the face of determined opposition of the employer-sponsored terror and repression, the organizing activity of the CIO in the south and in the north has moved forward.

"NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED,

"That the CIO renews and repeats its pledge to continue to extend to the unorganized workers of America the benefits of union organization. We dedicate ourselves again to the responsibility for furthering economic opportunity to the hundreds of thousands of unorganized workers still denied the benefits of union organization. Organization of the unorganized is the surest guarantee that the liberal program approved by the people in the recent elections will be enacted into law.

"We extend to Vice-President Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, our gratitude for intensive activity which has helped to build the strength and membership of the CIO in every section of the country; and in particular for his assistance to the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee in its steady growth during the past 12 months.

"We extend to the CIO Organizing Committee, to its Director, Van A. Bittner, and to his staff our approval and appreciation for their constructive and vigorous activity in the face of great difficulties; and we pledge to them our continued support and cooperation until their important task of organization of the south has been carried to successful completion."

Orchids For CIO

The CIO has received a pat on the back.

Ray Collings, manager of the Masonic Club, situated in the Masonic Temple, Portland, where the CIO convention was held, declared:

"This convention is the best behaved convention that has ever been held here."

And there are a lot of conventions held in the temple.

CIO Reiterates UN and ERP Support

Soviet Union's Abuse of the Veto in the Security Council Condemned

THE CIO convention at Portland, Ore., reiterated its support of the United Nations and of the European Recovery Program by adopting the following resolution on foreign policy:

"The international situation remains critical and is a matter of great concern to all our people. The CIO shares the overwhelming desire of all Americans for the establishment of an enduring peace. Our country has renounced isolationism and has recognized our responsibility in world affairs. The CIO believes that a sound, progressive America can give encouragement to the peoples of the world to improve their living standards and to widen the horizon of their political liberties.

"Our foreign policy must increasingly reflect the peoples' mandate given at the last election. While rejecting appeasement, this should lead to a decrease in the influence of bankers, monopolists, and militarists and an increase in the weight and representation given to labor and liberal democratic forces. Devoted as we are to a foreign policy designed to achieve world peace and prosperity, the CIO feels called upon to state the convictions of its members on the important world issues facing us today.

"NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED,

"1. We reiterate our support of the United Nations organization in the formation of which we participated. We condemn the Soviet Union's abuses in the exercise of the veto power which have frustrated the Security Council from achieving the lofty purpose for which it was created. We likewise deplore the use of the United Nations as a platform for intemperate propaganda rather than as an agency for the calm and equitable solution of world problems. Every effort must be made to improve the structure of the United Nations so as to strengthen it as a force for world peace, freedom and security.

"2. We reaffirm our support for the European Recovery Program as an instrument for the peace and prosperity of the peoples of Europe and the world. We believe that the great productive capacity of our country should be used to provide food, clothing and the means for economic rehabilitation to war-devastated Europe.

"Free, democratic labor and other organizations in Europe have welcomed the ERP and have cooperated with their own governments and with the American labor movement in the work of the Economic Cooperation Administration. We endorse and commend the work of CIO officials and members in cooperation with, and functioning within, the ECA.

"The participation of American labor in the ECA at all levels of administration is the best guarantee to European labor that the interests of its members will be protected and the independence of European peoples preserved. We urge increased labor participation in both the policies and administration of the program with full recognition of the essential role of labor in insuring its success.

"We condemn the organized opposition to the ERP by the Soviet Union and its satellites and the method by which the economic misery of Europe is used for political advantage and to promote chaos and confusion. One of the ways to peace is the abandonment of this short-sighted and unjust opposition. We urge Congress to continue to appropriate the necessary funds to achieve the purposes of the ERP.

"3. We look forward to early conclusion of peace treaties with Germany and Japan and other former enemy countries endowed with freely elected democratic governments and free from the influences and institutions of fascism, totalitarianism, militarism, and cartels. This cannot be achieved unless free trade unions are given proper assistance to enable them to play their essential role in a liberal, democratic society.

"Sound European recovery requires the filling of the vacuum caused by the destruction of Germany. False neutrality by our military government towards the needs and problems of German trade unions should be dropped in favor of outright assistance, and the denazification program continued until the spirit of nazism is destroyed.

"This will safeguard against the revival of militarism and aggression and economic threats to Germany's neighbors. Trade union property must be restored and unions must be granted the technical means to function, paper, journals, transportation and office equipment. The legitimate demands of the trade unions for participation in German economic life through a system of joint labor-management boards is the most hopeful sign of German democratic growth and should be encouraged.

"The destruction of militarism and cartels in Japan must be accompanied by the growth of free trade unions and collective bargaining. The right to strike and other legitimate trade union activities must be safeguarded. Repressive policy towards trade unions and hindrances to collective bargaining in Japan still prevent democratic developments.

"4. We reaffirm CIO policy of opposing recognition of, or assistance by our government, to fascist Franco Spain.

"5. We condemn vigorously all assumptions of the inevitability of another World War. We reaffirm the basic devotion of the American people to peace and reject as absurd and unfounded the charge of the Soviet Union of warmongering unfairly directed against us. We are confident that the will of the people in every country, if freely expressed, would quickly end minority propaganda for war. The Soviet-imposed blockade of Berlin is a danger to the preservation of peace. We condemn the use of military power to enforce economic policies which deprive 2½ million men, women and children of medicine, food, clothing and fuel. We commend the courage and fortitude of the men and women operating the air lift which has prevented the success of such callous action. A solution to the present crisis in Berlin can be found if the use of political and economic coercion is renounced and the four powers can resume discussions free from economic and military threats.

"6. We call upon the United Nations to pursue its efforts to obtain genuine disarmament, including international control of atomic energy with full power of inspection. The United States cannot disarm unless, after full disclosure of present military establishments, disarmament is on an equitable and universal basis.

"7. An enduring peace demands that people everywhere, including the economically-backward and colonial countries, be protected in their rights of self-determination and self-government free from military, political and economic coercion.

"8. The CIO is unalterably pledged to a Good Neighbor policy toward the peoples of the whole world. We accept the plain, obvious truth that peace and prosperity are indivisible. We accept the responsibility of doing our part to insure that American participation in world affairs shall be directed to the spread of democracy and for the recognition of human dignity and freedom everywhere."

Production of pig iron hit an all-time monthly U. S. high of 5.5 million tons in October, the American Iron & Steel Institute announced. Output of the basic raw material is considered a measure of general industrial production.

Getting Their Heads Together At the Convention

Walter White: 'Bigotry And Reaction Reorganizing'

THE November election gave the American people greater hope than at any time in recent American history for the stopping of reaction and the advance of liberal legislation, Walter White told the 10th CIO constitutional convention.

White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people, said the voters had repudiated emphatically "both the extreme left and the extreme right."

With the reelection of President Truman, said White, the American people returned to the White House the man who took on such issues as civil rights "the most courageous and forthright position of any President in American history. He saw hope for a program of progressive legislation in the overthrow of the reactional leadership of the 80th Congress in favor of liberal majorities in both the House and Senate.

The election promised a vast extension of civil rights among minorities, White declared, pointing out that in more than one Southern State Negro voters built up the majorities by which Truman was returned to office. Possibly by 1950, and certainly by 1952, said White, there will be at least two million Negro voters in the South.

"The already visible effect of that vote in the repudiation of bigots," White said, "will be enormously increased by this increase.

"Fewer demagogues whose sole stock in trade is race hate will be elected. Not only will the Negro himself benefit through this election of more liberal and decent Southerners like Estes Kefauver in Tennessee, but this increased Negro vote will benefit organized labor in its struggle to organize Southern industry, it will benefit the entire South.

White cautioned the CIO delegates, however, that "we cannot afford to waste any time in justified jubilation over the results of the Nov. 2 election."

He warned that "already the forces of bigotry and reaction are at work reorganizing their shattered ranks, Dixiecrats and reactionary Republicans are conferring together to utilize filibusters and other tactics to sabotage enactment of the legislative program which the people of America voted as a mandate upon the 81st Congress."

This prospect, White declared, makes it necessary for the labor, Negro and other voters in America to exercise unceasing vigilance every single day the 81st Congress is in session.

Otherwise, White cautioned, "many of the gains so desperately needed to preserve the American economy and the democratic way of life may be lost."

The danger comes, White asserted, "from the professional Southerners who will again tie up the Senate by using vicious appeals to race hatred as a cloak for the machinations of the oil barons who financed the Dixiecrat movement.

"They will do this for reactionary business interests which would gladly continue to use every divisive method to prevent passage of legislation to wipe out racial and economic discrimination."

Civil Rights Resolution Backs Broad Program and Truman

The CIO resolution on democracy and civil rights blasted race, religious and all other prejudices, condemned the House Un-American Activities Committee and declared unreserved support of President Truman's civil rights program.

The CIO denounced the Mundt-Nixon Bill as a threat to freedom of speech and thought and scored inroads on the free labor movement on the part of the Atomic Energy Commission.

A positive program—of ten points—was demanded by the CIO, as follows:

1. Federal and local FEPC acts.
2. The end of segregation in the armed forces.
3. Federal anti-lynching bill.
4. A law against poll taxes and other limits on voting.
5. Laws to end segregation in interstate travel.
6. Safeguards against race discrimination in use of Federal grants to the States.
7. Civil rights laws for all States.
8. Abolition of the House UN-American Activities Committee.
9. Laws to protect aliens long resident in this country.
10. An end of Federal loyalty probes and full freedom of thought for Federal workers.

Organize Probe Set

related to the subject of the resolution.

Organizing Committee Director Van A. Bittner described the organizing campaign as "the most important and fundamental task that lies before the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"There would have been no political victory on Nov. 2 without the power and the strength of the CIO and the organized labor movement in general," Bittner emphasized. In addition, the Southern organizing head reminded his listeners, "you will never have civil liberties in the South or any other section of the U. S. until we organize the unorganized. You talk about a totalitarian government — it is exemplified in non-union industry in America to as great a degree as anywhere on earth . . ."

CIO Vice Pres. and Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood followed with a plea for renewed support to the organizing drive.

Pointing to tangible results already chalked up in the South, Haywood noted that the organizing drive in Tennessee was responsible for the defeat of the Crump machine; that similar political success had been achieved in North Carolina and Virginia; and that ultimately the same will be true in Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina.

Haywood voiced his opposition to "raiding tactics" and urged that union leaders devote "their entire time to the union cause and let every other cause be secondary, if at all."

To the objections of Flaxer which followed, based on exclusion of a condemnation of raiding in the resolution, Pres. Murray took the floor for reply:

"I would be remiss in the performance of my duties if I did not say to this Convention and say it sincerely, that I am opposed to raiding. I have been opposed to raiding, and I have exercised whatever influence I might possess in an effort to prevent alleged raiding by one CIO union upon another. That is a matter which I believe can be properly discussed, either under another resolution dealing with the subject matter of jurisdictional strife or alleged raiding, or brought to the attention of the Intl. Executive Board of the CIO at the proper time."

George Baldanzi, executive vice president, Textile Workers, followed Matles with the caustic observation that "We do not have raids in the CIO. We have revolts of workers against communist domination."

The Taft-Hartley act is just one of the elements hindering CIO organizing efforts, Baldanzi asserted. "I say it is high time that we shed ourselves of our internal enemies, to make the job a little bit easier."

Baldanzi said that all the money and energies expended in the South will be wasted "until we can wipe our face, and face the workers of America as a 100% American organization. I think we are all getting tired of this so-called dialectical ministrone, as I call it."

Full Recognition, End of Arms Embargo Asked For Israel

FULL recognition for the new state of Israel was urged by the CIO convention.

The action came after a stirring address by Isaac Ben Zevie, founder of Histadrut, the general organization of Palestinian workers, president of the Natl. Jewish Council of Palestine and author of a number of books.

Zevie declared, "We ask you, the members of CIO, to throw the great weight of your moral forces upon the scale of justice against the balance of injustice."

Following Zevie's talk, CIO Vice Pres. Jacob Potofsky presented Murray with a scroll on behalf of the American Trade Union Council for Natl. Palestine. The scroll lauded Murray for the "great service he has rendered to the Jewish people, and to Histadrut."

The Israel resolution called for:

1. De jure recognition.
2. Lifting of the arms embargo.
3. Opposing UN attempts to deprive Israel of the Negev.
4. Lending U. S. to the new state.
5. Supporting admission to UN.

'I Am Not Going To Permit It'

FTA; Joe Selly, ACA, and others, condemned "the organized opposition to ERP by the Soviet Union."

Other foreign policy actions included sharp criticism of Greek policy and opposed collaboration with Spain.

When the debate—it was plenty heated debate—on foreign policy ended, Walter Reuther, who was temporarily presiding, said:

"I would like to suggest that this time everybody stand up and be counted as men."

And the vote was about 15 to 1.

WE had a lot of interesting speakers at our convention. Highlights of what they said:

Catholic Archbishop Edward D. Howard, Portland (whose speech was read by his vicar general, Rev. Thomas Tobin): "Show the rest of us the way to economic and industrial democracy. Show us how to treat the Negro as a brother in Christ. Show us how to answer Communism by establishing the reign of social justice and charity."

Dorothy McCullough Lee, mayor-elect of Portland: "What we do as citizens will determine the strength of this great nation."

Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.): "It is no answer, in my opinion, to 'equalize' the Communist affidavit provision by making it applicable to employers as well."

Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin: "We are going to have the greatest opportunity during the next two years to buy insurance policies to guarantee that Americans, all segments, will be protected against the disastrous depression that started in 1929."

Rabbi Saul B. Appelbaum, Portland: "This organization has power, has strength. May you continue to use it for good."

U. S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas: "Labor is peculiarly qualified to bridge the gap between the U. S. and Europe."

Isaac Ben Zevie, Natl. Jewish Council of Israel: "We thank you for your moral and financial assistance."

Walter White, secretary, Natl. Association for Advancement of Colored People: "Unless labor, Negro and other voters exercise unceasing vigilance every single day the 81st Congress is in session, many of the gains so desperately needed to preserve American economy and the democratic way of life may be lost."

Secy. Pat Conroy, Canadian Congress of Labor: "We in the CCL believe we are part of the CIO movement. When you elected Pres. Truman, the average run of men and women throughout Canada, with no ambitions for social position, but just average people whose only ambition is to lead a decent life, gave a universal sigh of relief and happiness."

AND, oh yes, we had a lot of visitors and some of them right pretty, too. There was Lois Schneider, a Kenosha high school pupil, who won an essay contest—"Why We Should Have Unions"—conducted by the Wisconsin CIO. Lois, in a clear voice that was a credit to predominantly unionized Kenosha, read her essay to the delegates, who cheered and cheered and were happy over the pretty kid's victory. (It was a swell essay, incidentally.)

There were other kids. Evelyn Atkinson—she looks like a cover gal—is daughter of Roy Atkinson, CIO's regional director for the State of Washington. Ev came to the convention to write up a piece for the Seattle Lincoln High Lincolntoten.

The rest of the kids were from Portland. One, David Belch, was a boy. Dave had read up considerably on Taft-Hartley and so knew plenty about the convention. The kids were impressed with Murray.

PORTLAND has a lot of hospitality—and a lot of rain, too. It has pretty shops, the most modernistic I've ever seen.

It has a most peculiar liquor law. You purchase a permit for a buck, buy your booze and then, at a restaurant or in your hotel room, pay for the bottle the second time when you get mixers.

The conventioneers had a lot of fun, after their busy day of work. Various unions had parties. The CIO publicity staff and the Portland Newspaper Guild threw a cocktail party. There was a dance. There was sightseeing.

Most fun of all was the demonstration just after Jack Potofsky put Phil Murray's name in nomination.

I say the unspontaneous "spontaneous" floor demonstrations at the Republican, Democratic and Wallaceite conventions. They were obviously staged.

But, here, the press looked on with surprise at hundreds of delegates demonstrating because they liked a guy—because they admired Philip Murray.

It was an unforgettable sight. People cheered and laughed and some even cried in happiness.

And when it was all over, Phil Murray said, "God bless you."

Oldtimers Say:

Murray Gets "Greatest" Ovation

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IT was 10:33 a.m. on the final day of the CIO convention. Suddenly a barrage of makeshift confetti—newspaper bits, scrapped notebooks, news release particles, paper tablecloth streamers—showered the giant convention hall in Portland, Ore.

Clothing Workers' Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky had just given the magic cue—Phil Murray, whom he nominated for an 9th term as CIO chief, and since there were no candidates, Murray was re-elected.

"He is God's gift to our generation of Americans," said Potofsky." . . . spokesman for the common man of all countries . . . he helped raise the standard of living and promoted the wellbeing of the American people . . . a great patriot . . . a peerless leader. . . . "

With these praises—and more—the hundreds of shouting delegates wholeheartedly agreed. They demonstrated it in no uncertain terms in the 45 minutes that followed described by CIO veterans as the noisiest, heartiest, longest and most enthusiastic demonstration ever witnessed on a convention floor.

Mention of Murray's name was the signal for pandemonium to break loose. With the confetti and the flash of photographers' bulbs, up jumped the cheering throng, the band setting the tempo for the festivities; dishes, which had served as ash trays now served as noise makers.

Somewhere in the midst of the confusion a parade got underway, wound through the paper-snow covered aisles and streamed across the platform.

NOW the band was blurting "Hail Hail the Gang's All Here" ("Maybe they don't play so good, but they play loud," said someone). The music was punctuated by handclapping, ear-shattering "yeeeee-hoos'," metal noise makers, tin pans, the banging of chairs on the floor.

On the platform NMU Pres. Joe Curran's blond three-year old son was learning a lesson in politicking early, waving happily to the shouting crowd from his dad's arms.

CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who earlier had waved a huge "Old Glory" to and fro was now vocalizing at the mike with Steelworkers' Secy.-Treas. Dave McDonald and Curran.

Potofsky, in back of whom the parade still marched, clapped in steady accompaniment with the band. And when the band stopped for air, the dignified Clothing Workers chief's hands kept time to the swelling chant of "We Want Murray, We Want Murray."

After 17 minutes of continuous celebration, a second parade began its way across the platform and then diffused in the throng.

Always there was the insistent chant "We Want Murray, We Want Murray."

After 45 minutes UAW Pres. Walter Reuther obtained silence long enough to give the delegates their chief.

"Perhaps never in the history of the labor movement have delegates representing millions expressed their feelings so clearly," said Reuther.

VISIBLY moved by the demonstration of affection for him, Murray said it was "difficult to express in words the feeling which permeates my bosom."

To the people of Portland and its officials; to the working press, to "Pete" Swim, CIO publicity chief; to the Voice of America, which transcribed portions of the proceedings for broadcast overseas; and to Harry Martin, Newspaper Guild president, now in Europe with the European Recovery Program, Murray extended his gratitude.

And to the delegates he said, "I should like to express, in a spirit of complete humility one man's thanks to a lot of people for the splendid spirit of cooperation you have manifested toward me whilst I have had the privilege and honor of representing you.

Thinking back over the convention's achievements, Murray remarked, "We have legislated wisely . . . in the interests of our people and in the interests of our nation. . .

"You have welded together in the course of the past 12 or 13 years the greatest instrument for good that has ever been created within the confines of the United States of America.

"Our interest in life," he continued, "is to put pictures on walls, carpets on floors, music in homes, provide a greater opportunity for cultural and educational attainments and better homes and greater security. That is the mission to which we have dedicated ourselves. . ."

THE CIO head told his fellow delegates that "organization of the unorganized" should be the convention slogan, that the CIO must contrive "legitimate means to put our own house in order."

He urged his listeners not to "rest on these oars," but to continue moving forward. "Thank almighty God for the Congress of Industrial Organizations," he said. "America owes an everlasting debt of gratitude to this mighty movement. It has helped build for the people of the United States a better America and it will continue . . . seeking the attainment of a better and better America."

Murray pledged himself to work for enactment of the CIO legislative program and to the rooting out of communistic influences in CIO. ". . . under no circumstances," he emphasized, "am I going to permit . . . Communistic infiltration into the Natl. CIO movement." He urged those organizations which have engaged in the spreading of communistic doctrines "to cease and desist, and to provide, through their official organs all of the pertinent information that has to do with the development of the trade union movement and . . . the policy decisions of this 10th Constitutional Convention . . ."

Murray's acceptance speech was followed by Van A. Bittner's nomination of James B. Carey as CIO Secretary-treasurer. (Bittner, himself, won a great ovation.)

The demonstration touched off by mention of Carey was cut short after 13 minutes by Murray's gavel. Elected by acclamation, Carey said, "I've had the privilege of growing up with the CIO, and I grew up with a prayer on my

Liberal Republican's View

Morse Blames GOP For Demo Victory

INTO the midst of a predominantly Democratic throng at the CIO convention came Sen. Wayne Morse, Oregon Republican, one of three members of his party to address the election-happy delegates.

The GOP liberal took a few polite jabs at some of his party's regulars, and said he would continue his fight to liberalize the GOP.

The Republican, who Pres. Murray noted had displayed "rare courage" in fighting the Taft-Hartley Act, pledged a continuing fight for "constitutional liberalism", weighing issues on the basis of their merits rather than "taking orders from any committee within my party as to how I shall vote on any specific issue."

The "shortsighted philosophy" responsible for the T-H Act and the Republican Congress' failure to "deal adequately with prices, housing and the many other problems of very real concern to wage earners, farmers and consumers" was responsible for the Democratic victory on Nov. 2, Morse said.

"Thousands and thousands of housewives walked to the polls believing that my party was responsible for high kitchen costs in America."

MORSE took a further swipe at the GOP when he recalled that during the Senate floor debate on Taft-Hartley he warned that his party would "hear about it at the ballot boxes" if the bill passed. "They did," he quipped, to the delight of his audience.

In outlining his program of labor legislation to replace the T-H Act, Morse differed somewhat with the delegates who immediately thereafter unamimously adopted a resolution urging re-enactment of the Wagner Act in its pre-T-H form.

Morse said "we cannot stop with repeal and a simple revival of the Wagner Act. What the public demands, and is entitled to demand, is fair labor legislation that will check both employer and labor excesses . . . "

Such a program should provide, in his opinion:

- That responsibility for administration of the law be returned to the Natl. Labor Relations Board, rather than remain with the NLRB general counsel as under T-H.
- That union shop elections and the ban on closed shops be eliminated. This was modified by the opinion that a union holding a closed shop contract be prohibited from discharging an employe who switches his union preference near the end of the contract period.
- That the federal labor statute have precedence over state labor laws in interstate commerce.
- Some sort of legislation barring secondary boycotts designed to force recognition when another union "is the freely chosen representative of the employes," or designed to force bargaining by some other employer.
- That, where two unions fail to settle jurisdiction disputes themselves, the NLRB be empowered to appoint an arbitrator whose award be final and enforceable in court.
- Elimination of the mandatory injunctions against unions now provided by T-H. "Certainly," he said, "the law should not foster injunctions against practices which the Board months later determines are not unfair practices. But that is what happens under the present law . . ."
- Elimination of the T-H ban on union political expenditures.
- Elimination of the loyalty affidavits, "an insult to patriotic labor leaders and to the members they represent. It is no answer in my opinion," he commented, "to 'equalize' the provision by making it applicable to employers as well . . . The problem is to eliminate the section from the law because in my judgment you cannot square that section with sound American principles of civil rights in this country."

Adoption of the recommendations of Truman's Committee on Civil Rights and continued Marshall Plan aid were also recommended by Morse, who commended the CIO for its participation in the European Recovery Program.

4 TWUA Aides Are Convicted

Four officials of the CIO Textile Workers have been convicted and sentenced at Rome, Ga., in the Celanese Corp.'s drive to chain 1,800 strikers at its Rome plant to a southern differential.

Still awaiting trial are 174 other unionists, including TWUA Vice Pres. George Baldanzi, who were arrested on charges of violating a mass picketing ban granted by Superior Court Judge H. E. Nichols.

Two of the four officials, Intl. Rep. Joe D. Pedigio and Local 689 Sec. C. L. Ross, were fined $200 each and sentenced to 20 days in jail by Nichols Nov. 17. The other two received $100 fines each and 10-day sentences. All are free on bond pending appeal.

Nichols issued the injunction to aid the company's attempt Nov. 1 to reopen its plant, which had been shut down since the strike began Aug. 13. Despite the court order limiting the number of pickets to two at each gate and forbidding such traditional picketline tactics as boos and catcalls, 1,500 strikers turned out in force around the plant and made the scheduled reopening a complete dud. Only 300 workers have returned to their jobs, according to the company, which is not enough to get the plant back into operation.

Failure of the company's back-to-work movement brought a quick crackdown from local police, who rounded up 178 unionists in three days and charged them with contempt of court.

'We Are Laborers In Thy Vineyard'

Excerpts from convention prayers:

Rabbi Saul B. Appelbaum: "Bless Thou our work, for we are laborers in Thy vineyard for Thy children."

Rev. Lee O. Stone (Episcopal): "O God, Who has ordained that whatever is to be desired should be sought for by labor, and Who by Thy blessing bringest honest labor to good effect, look with mercy upon our humble exertions."

Through Labor Secy. Tobin

Truman Thanks CIO For Aid in Victory

PRES. TRUMAN'S personal appreciation for the part CIO members played in the recent Democratic victory was conveyed to CIO delegates by Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin in his address to the convention.

"It is a real honor and privilege," the Labor Secretary said, "for me to bring to this Convention the greetings of the courageous President of the United States, Harry S. Truman, and express to you the appreciation he has for the great part that you played in the historical day just passed . . ."

Tobin repeated his prediction that the Taft-Hartley Act would be repealed by the new Democratic-controlled Congress. Under the law, he asserted, "it was impossible for any union to be organized when management didn't want that union." Result of this, he continued, was seen in Washington where the lowest bidders for Federal supplies are repeatedly those concerns "able to bid low solely on the margin of human wages."

Despite the T-H preamble which asserted labor's right to organize, the law actually nullified those rights, Tobin said. Because prosecution of unfair labor practices by employers are not mandatory under the law, it often takes as much as 18 months to have such cases adjudicated by the NLRB. During that period, he pointed out, "any little infant struggling union would be absolutely destroyed."

"WE want and we feel that the law will be repealed, and in its place there will be a just labor-management law, probably based upon the President's State of the Union message in 1946, the Wagner Act and the State of the Union message of 1947, and the veto of the Taft-Hartley Law in June of 1947."

Other legislation the 81st Congress will probably enact include a 75c hourly minimum wage, housing, and a public health program, Tobin predicted.

A 75c wage floor is the "minimum that can be established," he continued. Even that falls short of reaching the 1943 legal minimum in terms of purchasing power, he said. Since the present 40c minimum wage went into effect in 1943, prices have increased 50%. A rise in the wage minimum to 75c would permit only a 41½% increase in purchasing power, based on 1939 prices, he said.

"We want to give our great American system a healthy economy in this country," Tobin concluded, "under which the wage earners in every section of our country are going to have decent income with which they can support their families in decency and lay aside money in order to give their children proper education.

"We are going to get it as a result of the greatest victory ever won by the little people. And as Secretary of Labor, I want to commend you for the part you played in that great campaign."

British Labor Greets Parley

ARCHIBALD MacDonald Gordon, labor attache to the British embassy in Washington, brought "warm fraternal greetings from your brother trade unionists in England" on the closing day of the convention.

Gordon expressed the heartfelt thanks of the people of England for the support and aid this country is rendering the British Isles through the Marshall Plan. "British trade unions supported the Marshall Plan," he said. "We know this money does not fall from the skies."

The veteran trade unionist pointed out that without Marshall Plan aid the British people faced two alternatives — reduction of food imports, which would have placed its people on starvation rations, or, curtailment of importation of raw materials, which would have resulted in widespread unemployment.

He said, "With your help we in Great Britain are getting back on our feet—and for that unstinted aid, we are eternally grateful."

Action Asked To Save Soil

The loss of topsoil has made "over one-fifth of our arable land . . . permanently unfit for cultivation" declared a resolution on soil conservation adopted by the CIO convention.

The resolution urged Pennsylvania, Missouri and the Tennessee Valley Authority to join the democratically-organized soil conservation districts set up by the U. S. Soil Conservation Service. These are the only areas which have not joined in the plan.

Congress and the Bureau of the Budget were urged to make sufficient appropriations for soil conservation, and the farmers were asked to join the CIO in an attack on soil erosion.

Lower Taxes Asked On Small Incomes

A plea for relief of the little guy in a new federal tax program was made in a resolution adopted by the CIO convention.

It called for upping the income tax exemptions for married persons to $3000, $1500 for single individuals and $600 for each dependent. It called for closing of loopholes through which big income groups evade just taxation. An undistributed and excess profits tax measure was urged, elimination of excise taxes except those that are regulatory in character, was asked, and sales taxes, payroll imposts and manufacturing excise taxes were condemned. Setting up of phony charitable non-profit institutions as a means of evading taxes was denounced.

Justice Douglas:

'Labor Qualified To Bridge Gaps Between U.S., Europe'

IT was the first time in U. S. history that a Supreme Court Justice had addressed a labor convention.

It was a tradition-breaking speech, delivered by one of the most liberal members of the nation's highest court—Justice William O. Douglas. And it was delivered to a tradition-breaking organization—the CIO, fresh from major economic and political victories.

Talking quietly, and without resort to oratory, Justice Douglas told the convention that the world is counting on organized labor to find solutions for world problems.

"The democrats of the world look to labor to keep the middle way open," Douglas said. "They know that in the world today there is no stronger citadel of democracy than the halls of labor."

To labor Douglas gave credit for the most important "political invention" of this century: the "human welfare" state, in which New Deal philosophies work for the people.

Labor was the "prime promoter" of that type of "human welfare" government, Justice Douglas pointed out. "It was the first group to feel most keenly the economic insecurity of the new industrial age."

AMERICAN labor's thinking cannot be limited to problems that stop at the country's coastlines, the Supreme Court Justice reminded the delegates.

"Labor is peculiarly qualified to bridge a gap that has been growing between Europe and the United States," he said.

Unions can fill this key role, he went on, because "a new Europe is being born . . . new leaders have come to power in the countries of western Europe.

These new parties with a labor base have various names, but they stand for the same type of liberal democracy, he said.

"The fact is that there has come out of the Nazi crucible of death a vigorous, alert and politically-minded labor party in every western European country."

American labor carries good credentials to these new European leaders, Douglas pointed out.

"DOORS tightly closed to all others may open at its knock," he said. "Words from American labor promise to find quick acceptance." For that reason, he pointed out that American labor people are highly qualified to serve as ambassadors from this country to the European nations.

"The conventional diplomat will fail miserably in these revolutionary days unless he understands the rise of the labor governments of the world and can evaluate the factors that have created and maintained them.

"Only those who have insight into these forces, who share in heart as well as in mind an understanding of the labor struggle throughout the world, are equipped to interpret correctly and faithfully what they see."

There are marked differences in thinking and tradition between the American and European labor movements, Douglas acknowledged. Due to vastly different histories, European workers have been brought up in an atmosphere of class differences and various interpretations of "class warfare."

Americans, "as a highly practical people," have never been captured by the propaganda of class warfare. They look upon it, he pointed out, as a "call to travel a side street which leads not to better living but to destruction." American labor looks not only to the interests of its own members but to its responsibilities to the entire community.

To the rest of the world—and to this country as well—American labor "can show how a human welfare state creates health and stability throughout the whole economy," Douglas said.

It can point out the advantages of industrial justice, of political independence, of economic and social progress on an orderly basis, he declared.

"THE Communists miss the point of history when they make class warfare the challenge of this age," the justice asserted. "That is not the challenge.

"The challenge is more subtle and more demanding. The challenge is to make the modern industrial plant operate smoothly and productively for the benefit of all . . .

"American labor can contribute mightily to the fusion of the various democratic groups of the world into a harmonious whole. American labor can teach class-conscious groups the folly of class warfare.

"American labor can spread the faith in the American way, that builds a classless society without exploitation of any group."

The Douglas speech, listened to quietly and attentively by the delegates, was greeted with standing cheers when he concluded. With Pres. Murray, the Supreme Court justice posed arm in arm while photographers swarmed on to the platform.

Pres. Murray, addressing the delegates immediately afterwards, said that "never in all my life have I heard a more remarkable exposition of government than I have heard this morning."

It is difficult "for an ordinary layman, such as I, to describe in the fashion that I would like to," Pres. Murray added, "the tremendous effect that the speech just delivered to this convention will have upon the thinking of the people of the United States."

Labor does exert "a tremendous position of influence and responsibility" in this country, Murray said. As Justice Douglas pointed out, "it is our role to push the extreme leftist aside and the extreme rightist aside, and pursue the great work in behalf of the people which lies ahead of us."

Speech In Pamphlet

Justice William O. Douglas' speech to the CIO convention will soon be printed in pamphlet form.

The convention voted to publish the address upon a motion offered by Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union.

Fuss?

Quip from Philip Murray, when, after an almost all-day—and oftentimes heated—debate, the "Organize the Unorganized" Resolution passed without a single "no" or abstention:

"What's all the fuss about?"

No Union is Safe: Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee warned the Portland, Ore., convention that no union is safe as long as large sections of the country—like the South—remains unorganized.

It's Standard

The Standard Oil Co (New Jersey) piled up more profits in the first nine months of 1948 than in all of 1947.

Net profits for the first three quarters of this year were $290 million or $10.25 a share, the company reported Nov. 18. This compared with $203 million or $7.43 a share in the like 1947 period and $268 million or $9.83 a share for the entire year of 1947.

lips that I'll measure up to the task you've placed before me."

CIO's third administrative officer, Vice Pres. and Organizational Dir. Allan Haywood, was nominated by David McDonald, who termed him a "miner of steel." Election was by acclamation.

CIO's eight other vice presidents and 40 executive board members were then nominated one-by-one and unanimously elected.

THE vice presidents, in addition to Haywood, are:

L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Joseph Curran, NMU; Albert J. Fitzgerald, Electrical Workers; John Green, Ship; O. A. Knight, Oil; Emil Rieve, Textile; Walter Reuther, Auto, and Frank Rosenblum, Clothing.

Four changes were made on the executive board. C. H. Lindberg replaced Ed Hughlett for the Brewery Workers; T. M. McCormick replaced A. K. Kinstley, for the Oil Workers, and Anthony Esposito replaced Alex Bail for the Playthings union. CIO's newest affiliate, the American Radio Association, made its debut, naming as its board representative, William Steinberg.

The other board members are: Emil Mazey, Auto; Ernest Hebert, Barbers; Jacob Potofsky, Clothing; Joseph Selly, Communications; Julius Emspak, Electrical; Grant W. Oakes, Farm Equipment; J. F. Jurich, Fishermen; Donald Henderson, Food, Tobacco; Ben Gold, Fur Workers; Morris Pizer, Furniture; Martin Wagner, Gas, Coke; Joseph Froesch, Glass Workers; John Blackburn, Lithographers; Harry Bridges, Lonshoremen; Hugh Bryson, Marine, Cooks; Samuel J. Hogan, Marine Engineers; John Grogan, Shipbuilders; M. Hedley Stone, Maritime; John Clark, Mine, Mill.

Sam Eubanks, News Guild; James Durkin, Office; Thomas Andert, Optical; Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse; Harry Sayre, Paperworkers; Abram Flaxer, Public; Samuel Wolchok, Retail; H. R. Lloyd, Rubber; Van A. Bittner, Steel; James A. Mitchell, Shoe; Sam H. Scott, Stone; Michael Quill, Transport; George Baldanzi, Textile; Willard Townsend, Transport Service; Joseph A. Fisher, Utility; James E. Fadling, Woodworkers; John J. Moran, Telephone Workers.

With elections over, the convention's work was over, and a happy, smiling, but tired Phil Murray took the mike one last time to issue his traditional parting message:

"God bless all of you."

The 10th Constitutional CIO Convention stood adjourned.

Convention Decision

PAC TO WORK WITHIN 2 PARTIES

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CIO's big, effective political action operation is here to stay.

It has the overwhelming support of the overwhelming number of CIO members and their unions. And the CIO convention—without "ifs, ands or buts" charted a firm course for its Political Action Committee in the important elections of 1950 and 1952.

It will be a PAC working, as it has in the past as a nonpartisan organization within the framework of the two major parties; it will support candidates on the basis of their record; and it is firmly committed against "any and all proposals" for a third party.

The debate on PAC's future was extended and often fiery.

But when, after several hours, the first vote-count in CIO convention history was taken the results were clear:

For the PAC Resolution: 537

Against the Resolution: 49

(Elsewhere on page for text of PAC "resolves.")

Debate on PAC was clearly divided—between those who had supported the successful PAC campaign which "brought out the vote" for Pres. Truman and a liberal Congress; and those, on the other hand, who throughout 1948 urged CIO to support the presidential campaign of Henry Wallace on the Progressive Party ticket.

KEYNOTE of the political action debate was set by Pres. Murray in his opening address to the convention.

"The CIO was about the only union in the U. S. that stuck its neck out in this fight," Murray said.

"We put all our might and our efforts, together with the expenditure of legitimate monies, toward the election of Pres. Truman and a liberal Congress. And we won. The people won. Thank God for that."

No political group in the country, Murray added, contributed more toward the election victory than did PAC. He praised the work of the "countless thousands" of PAC workers who did their job in the 1948 campaign.

Kroll, who received a rousing ovation from the delegates reminded the convention that "the American people have voted themselves a brand new 1948 model New Deal . . . In a loud firm voice they have declared that they want the New Deal to continue—stronger, more progressive, more vital than ever before."

(See separate story on opposite page)

THE statement on PAC came from the resolutions committee with dissenting minority opinions expressed by Pres. Joseph Selly of the American Communications Association and Pres. Don Henderson of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers. Both men had supported Wallace.

'Every Red for Henry'

"Not everybody who supported Henry Wallace was a Communist—but everybody who was a Communist supported Henry Wallace."—CIO Pres. Murray, in PAC debate at convention.

Selly, speaking on the convention floor against the PAC policy statement, criticized what he called "regimination of political opinion" contained in the resolution pledging the unions to support PAC.

Selly argued that the question involved the right of each union to make its own "political decisions," without reference to CIO majority policy in the situation.

The same position was voiced in various terms by Pres. Ben Gold of the Fur & Leather Workers— Delegate Joseph Johnson, a Marine Cooks & Stewards delegate; Reid Robinson, of the Mine Mill & Smelter Workers; and by Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald of the United Electrical Workers, all of them Wallace supporters during the campaign.

Fitzgerald, chairman of the Wallace Party's labor committee, said he had opposed Pres. Truman on the basis of his record—but he added:

"If Pres. Truman makes a sincere effort to carry out the promises that he made in his platform, I will tell the Progressive Party to go to hell, and I will be on President Truman's bandwagon."

Voicing loyalty to Pres. Murray's leadership, Fitzgerald emphasized he had never made "any dirty cracks" about the CIO leader, and that he would be in the CIO for a long time to come.

But Fitzgerald said he would sacrifice neither "his individual rights" nor his "honest convictions"—and he said his opposition to Truman and his opposition to the majority resolution were based on those principles.

Fitzgerald argued that those decisions of his could not be the basis for some earlier suggestions that unions "either toe the line or get out"—a principle which Pres. Murray made clear was not his own.

PRES. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers voiced enthusiastic support of the PAC resolution, and he also praised the work of PAC and Director Kroll during the election.

"I don't believe anyone should be asked to leave if he doesn't agree," Potofsky said, "but I do subscribe to the principle of majority rule—which is an American principle. I believe that we should guide ourselves by that principle even when we are defeated."

Potofsky lashed out at Henry Wallace for describing Philip Murray as a "misleader of labor." In making that statement, the clothing union leader said, Wallace was making "a dastardly attack upon democracy in country."

Wallace had a double objective, Potof charged: to defeat Pres. Truman and to up a big protest vote.

Wallace made a "miserable failure" on b scores, the clothing union official decla "because he resorted to name-calling" the American people doubted his since Potofsky charged.

"I say that the Third Progressive Part for practical purposes dead," he added, " no amount of oxygen is going to restore it

Vice-Pres, John Livingston of the Un Auto Workers, voicing support of the res tion, said the 1948 election showed the "t of job that can be done when we have type of teamwork that existed during 1948 election."

"There was more work done and far talk than in the past," Livingston commen because "the yap-yap boys who were supp ing Wallace, kept on yapping while the who worked were supporting the CIO gram."

ve Damn for Russia'

Stating his position as a supporter of Wallace in the campaign, Fitzgerald said "You can't gloss over this with a 'red smear.'

"I don't give a damn for Russia. Vishinsky and Molotov are saber-rattlers and war-mongers. But I'm not a citizen of Russia and I can't do anything about them."

PRES. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union—currently engaged in a bitter battle with the left wing of his own union—recalled that he was "for Wallace before Wallace was for Wallace himself." But he charged that Henry Wallace had been "taken over" by the Communists who were willing to split his union and bring about the election of Dewey during the campaign.

"I had to decide not only was I a man or a mouse, or was I a man or a louse," Mr. Quill said. "I decided not to be a louse. I stuck with the CIO."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union admitted that he had not believed—before the Democratic convention last June—that Harry Truman could win the election. But once the party adopted a liberal platform and the President started his fighting campaign, "the Textile Workers Union did all that it could do to bring about this victory."

Van Bittner, vice-president of the Steelworkers, said that "as far as we were concerned, the Progressives and the Dixiecrats were one and the same—they were attempting to defeat the hopes and aspirations and policies of the CIO in the national election and they were all lined up together."

MANY of the majority speakers pointed out that the Democrat's election victories had come in the face of a concerted move by the American Communist party and Kremlin policy-makers to defeat Pres. Truman's bid for re-election.

Pres. Murray noted in a speech closing debate that "it is a definitely well-established fact that the Communist Party about two years ago determined through the exercise of its might and power through Moscow to drive Truman out of the White House.

"They did not care whether Dewey was elected or the devil was elected," Murray charged. "They wanted Truman to be defeated, and indicate to Moscow the potentialities of Communist strength in the U. S.

"But they were whipped. They were licked. They were defeated. And the people of the U. S. won the fight. The CIO played an exceptional part in winning that fight."

PAC Representative In Several States

Henry Murray, the PAC Representative for New England and several other Eastern states, has been active in the labor movement since he left Fordham University and went to work as a clerk in New York.

Murray joined the CIO Shipbuilding Workers in 1937. He took part in the wage stabilization conferences in 1941, and was active in the Philadelphia municipal campaign in 1942. He was the PAC chairman in the 41st ward in Philadelphia in 1944, and joined the PAC staff in New England in May 1948.

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll receives congratulations on the Democratic victory from delegates of his union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Kroll 'Happy and Proud':

U. S. Government Is Still In The Hands Of The People

IT was a "proud and happy" report that Director Jack Kroll of the Political Action Committee delivered to the 10th CIO Convention.

Kroll was "proud and happy" to report that "the government of the U. S. is still in the hands of the people of the U. S."

And he was "proud and happy" to report that "your CIO Political Action Committee did its part in keeping it there."

CIO proved that it had "guts and stamina and power" in political affairs—just as it proved it has those powers when CIO won its economic and organizational gains.

Kroll had a lot of "thank you" notes to deliver at the convention—to the "nearly 100,000 members of CIO who were out working full time on election day, carrying people to the polls, watching the counting of the ballots, rounding up last-minute voters, giving the job the last final push it needed."

He had words of praise for the staff of PAC, in Washington and throughout the nation. And he voiced his appreciation for the work done by staffs of the various unions.

"But most of all I want to say 'thank you' to the one may who, above all others, was a tower of strength. His calm evaluation of events as they moved swiftly, his staunch courage when the going was tough—they were worth more than I can possibly tell you," Kroll said.

"For his support and for his wise leadership I want to say 'thank you from the bottom of my heart' to Pres. Philip Murray."

THE November election results were a "surprise to the people who publish newspapers," Kroll said. "That's what they get for believing their own propaganda."

"Once more Col. Bertie McCormick (publisher of the Chicago Tribune) confused himself with the Almighty."

Kroll predicted that CIO-PAC will be stronger than ever by the time the 1950 elections roll around.

"All over the country CIO-PAC is building an organization—a deep grass roots political organization that did a job in 1944 and 1948," he told the delegates. "It is going to do an even better job in 1949 and 1950, because in good old CIO fashion, we've just begun to fight.

"I think that when Sidney Hillman put our feet on the path we are now traveling, he put our feet on the right path."

KROLL warned CIO members against lying down on the job after the big 1948 victory.

"The corporate masters of our land, who thought they could shove Tom Dewey down the throats of the American people, have not given up," he said. "They have not reformed.

"They will try again in 1949 and 1950 to lay hands on our government institutions. They will try again to impose upon us a government of, by and for the monopolies and the rich cartels.

"They will try in 1950 to take back what we have won in 1948."

The Natl. Association of Manufacturers and "the extremists of right and left will be sniping at us from the rear and assaulting us from the front," Kroll predicted. "Two years from now, the Communists and the NAM may again be campaigning together. They may again seek to confuse and divide us in order that they may conquer us."

"Well, they are not going to do it," Kroll thundered.

"With a strengthened PAC, with the all-out support of each and every affiliate of the CIO, we will not fail in our endeavor.

"And with the vision and wise leadership of Pres. Murray to guide us, the CIO will do an even greater share toward building in this country the most perfect democracy that man can create—a democracy in which no citizen need suffer economic nor political oppression."

PAC Workers Lauded

Did you do some election work this fall—ring a doorbell, pass out a leaflet, give a buck to PAC?

Then the CIO convention takes off its hat to you.

Said the political action resolution:

"This CIO convention expresses its praise and approval of the work of the Political Action Committee, its director and staff, the PAC organizations of the various international unions cooperating with CIO-PAC and the countless PAC workers throughout the nation."

DELEGATES SWAMP ATTACK ON MURRAY REPORT

FOR the first time in CIO history, a minority report was offered to the report of Pres. Murray. The minority was defeated overwhelmingly.

The minority report, lengthy and covering several points, was offered by Donald Henderson, president, Food & Tobacco Workers. He was joined by Irvin Potash, of the Fur & Leather Workers and Joseph Johnson, Marine Cooks.

The minority opposed the majority on these issues:

"1. The report (the majority) accepts without criticism a continuing high level of expenditures for armaments and for the Truman and Marshall Plans.

"2. The facts on the Marshall Plan reveal a shocking betrayal.

"3. There should be severe criticism of Secy.-Treas. Carey for his malicious testimony before a Congressional Committee.

"4. The report errs in not reprimanding certain unions for utilizing the Taft-Hartley law for raiding other unions.

"5. We are of the opinion those unions which supported Henry Wallace made their contribution by clarification of issues."

Murray himself led the answer to the minority. Some of his highlights:

"Marshall Plan: The opposition of the Communist Party to the plan is a type of ideological opposition, political opposition; it is typical communistic opposition and division within the peoples of the democratic world.

"Henderson's union: He represents a mighty organization in this convention. It had 54,000 dues-paying members in October, 1947. He appears before this great convention with a membership of 24,000. A great buildup of democratic trade unionism!

Political Action: "Would Henderson have been a happy man today had he got behind this microphone and said: 'Tom Dewey was elected and I am glad he was elected, because we have driven Truman from the White House'?"

Communist infiltration: "The protagonists of the Soviet system of thinking have never stood upon a floor, either in an executive board meeting or a convention hall, and criticized a single solitary thing that Russia has done since the end of the war."

Said President Walter Reuther, Auto Workers: "I support Philip Murray. When they come into the CIO, affiliates have the right to disagree, to debate, to develop arguments in support of their point of view, but when the decision is made, democratically arrived at, they are obligated to carry out that decision until decision is changed through further, democratic discussions.

"They want all the rights, all the privileges, all the protection, all of the help of the CIO, without any of the obligations that go with it."

Secy.-Treas. Carey: "Oh, please, Mr. Molotov and Vishinsky, and Don Henderson, if you cannot help us in the way workers need help, please stay out of the way so other people can do a job."

Debate closed with Pres. Murray sharply criticizing the record of Pres. James Durkin of the Office & Professional Workers.

Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther defends the officers' report during an attack by left-wing critics.

Delegates Laud Murray For 'Outstanding' Work

"FEW men in any field have accomplished so much for so many in such a short time."

That's how delegates to the CIO convention summed up their sentiments about their president, Philip Murray.

They gave him a rousing ovation following unanimous adoption of a resolution praising him for his "outstanding, untiring work in behalf of the millions who make up the CIO and in behalf of all the American people."

His leadership of the CIO and of his own union, the United Steelworkers of America, and his lifetime of activity in the labor movement, the resolution stated, has won him "recognition throughout the world as an outstanding trade unionist and a battler for the rights of the common man."

POINTING out that his influence has been strongly felt in many fields—economics, politics, civil rights, management-labor relations and others—and that during the war he made outstanding contributions to the cause of democracy, the resolution declared:

"Millions of Americans today enjoy a greatly improved standard of living and better working conditions as a direct result of the constant campaign of Pres. Murray to make life easier and better for the nation's working men and women."

He also has won "new recognition as a force in international affairs," the resolution declared, "for the part he played in shaping the European Recovery Program."

11 Steps Urged To Save U. S. Merchant Marine

THE U. S. merchant marine has shrunk in size almost to the danger point through transfer of American tonnage to foreign flags and through the almost complete secession of ship building, says a resolution adopted at the Portland convention.

Maritime employment has declined 50% in two years and shipbuilding employment is one-sixth of the level necessary for retention of a skilled labor force and an efficient industry, the resolution says.

In order to save the American Merchant Marine, protect U. S. foreign commerce and to provide employment and security for the half million workers in the shipbuilding industry, the resolution calls upon the administration to:

1. Provide increased appropriations and guarantee steel allocations for the shipbuilding program.

2. Preserve the basic principles of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

3. Require subsidized lines to build the vessels necessary to their trade routes.

4. Stop all transfers of American owned tonnage to foreign flags and return the "runaway" fleet under foreign flags to American flag operations.

5. Return commercial vessels under military control to private operation.

6. Strengthen and enforce ECA provisions for carriage of 50% of Marshall Plan cargoes in American vessels.

7. End "unfair" railroad competition against the domestic water carriers.

8. Prevent the rebuilding of German and Japanese merchant marines.

9. Exempt seamen from the draft and enact the Merchant Seamen's War Service act.

10. Liberalize naturalization requirements for aliens who served in the merchant marine during World War II.

11. Ratify the International Safety of Sea Convention of 1948, and the ILO Seafarers Convention of 1946.

12. Extend marine hospital benefits to all seamen and provide social security and unemployment insurance for seamen on government-owned vessels.

13. Guarantee the right of seamen to strike in port, revise archaic maritime laws, and to stop financing lockouts with government funds.

14. Drastically revise the maritime training service with emphasis on upgrading and with elimination of military influences and imitations.

For T-H Repeal

Sen. James E. Murray (D., Mon.) said he and his associates will fight for flat repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and will resist any attempts to legislate substitute measures.

Seeks Tax Rebate

Rep. Arthur G. Klein (D., N. Y.) announced that he will introduce a bill to give every American who votes a $40 deduction on gross incomes for tax purposes. This would give a small income taxpayer the equivalent of $2.

Text Of Wire From Truman To Parley

FOLLOWING is the text of a telegram sent to CIO President Philip Murray by President Harry S. Truman.

"Please extend my greetings and best wishes for a successful meeting to the members of the CIO whose representatives are gathering in their Convention. I regret that circumstances do not permit me to come to Portland to address this great convention.

"Today we know more clearly than we could know a few weeks ago the course which our democracy will follow. The people have chosen a program which is for the benefit of all. This program was supported by your organization, by the other labor organizations as well as by farmers, many business men, and the people generally. It is a sign of the maturity and good sense of labor in this country that it thinks more and more in terms of the welfare of the nation as a whole and supports what is good for all the people.

"THE program to which we are pledged—and which was endorsed by the people on election day—is based on the principle that the first concern of government is the welfare of the average man and woman who raise the families and pay the bills and do the work that makes America. Only by adherence to this principle can be stability of business and industry—free enterprise—be guaranteed.

"In the years ahead, we shall seek to preserve full employment and full production at good wages with reasonable prices and fair profits. Taken together, these things mean a rising standard of living for everyone.

"In working together toward these objectives, we shall demonstrate, finally and unequivocally, the fallacies of communism and of reaction. The way ahead is clear but it will not all be easy sailing. We shall need the help and support of every one of you assembled in Portland.

"To secure the blessings that are within our grasp will require the continued vigor and resolution of our people. With the protection and guidance of almighty God, we shall not fail."

Funds For Education Asked From Congress

EDUCATION in a democracy must be a continuing process beginning in childhood and extending throughout adult life and must be made available equitably to all citizens regardless of race, color, creed, or geographical location, said the resolution on U. S. aid to education adopted by the convention. The resolution said:

Many American teachers are grossly underpaid and more than two million American children of school age are not attending school, the resolution points out.

There exists a great inequality of educational services furnished by the different states. It is most glaringly demonstrated in the contrast between the facilities in the low income Southern states and those in wealthier industrial states. At the same time, Negroes receive a fraction of the appropriations, small to begin with, that are allocated for white children.

A bill calling for $300 million in federal funds for aid to the nation's schools was killed by the Republican leadership in the lower house after the Senate had approved it, the resolution said. The resolution also pointed out the gross inequities due to the lack of facilities for adult education while American farmers have long enjoyed millions of dollars worth of educational benefits through the Federal Agricultural Extension Service. A bill to establish a Labor Extension Service in the U. S. Department of Labor was killed by GOP leadership in the House of Representatives, it was stated.

The resolution succinctly called for enactment by the 81st Congress of legislation to provide adequate federal aid for public education; and federal funds for the establishment of a Labor Extension Service program to be administered by the U. S. Department of Labor through cooperation of universities and unions.

NLRB Still Lags On Wagner Act Cases

Although the NLRB reduced its back case load for the sixth straight month in October, plenty of workers are still waiting for justice they were supposed to get under the old Wagner Act.

The NLRB said 8% of its 8,000 pending cases were filed before the Taft-Hartley law went into full effect 15 months ago. Of this 8%, or 623, 530 involved unfair labor practice charges and 93 were petitions for collective bargaining elections.

CIO Chiefs At Ore. IUC Meet

WITH top CIO national officers on hand, Oregon's state CIO council met for its annual convention in Portland Nov. 20-21.

The convention, attended by several hundred delegates, passed a series of policy resolutions along the same lines as those taken by the national CIO the following week.

And like the national CIO, the convention witnessed some sharp debate on questions of future political action, foreign policy and the Marshall Plan.

The resolution, passed easily over the votes of an anti-ERP minority, said that "we request that aid be extended to all suffering people everywhere.

"We call on the peoples of all the countries concerned to give their best in loyal support to the policy of cooperation to which our governments have pledged themselves."

Stanley Earl, state CIO secretary, said that the state PAC had endorsed 17 successful candidates for the Oregon legislature.

Election of officers will be made by referendum in coming weeks. Nominated for president were Neil Griffin of the Textile Workers and Robert Baker of the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's union. Earl—a member of the Intl. Woodworkers—was nominated without opposition for the post of secretary-treasurer, and Hal Geiger of the same union as vice-president.

CIO Asks Break For Women

"The CIO has always opposed discrimination against women, whether on or off the job," stated a resolution passed at the convention. In support of women workers, the convention advocated:

Renewed efforts to obtain equal pay for equal work.

Opposition to the so-called Equal Rights Amendment which would outlaw essential labor legislation, and support instead for the Women's Status Bill aimed to maintain this legislation while helping end discrimination against women.

Continued support of measures aimed to help working mothers, including school lunch and child care programs, expansion of opportunities for part-time work and amendment of the Federal income tax law to permit sums spent by working mothers for child care to be deducted as a business expense.

Special efforts to encourage women to join trade unions.

One Year for ITU

Just a year ago, Local 16, AFL Typographical Union called out 1500 composing room workers from five Chicago newspapers after the publishers announced they would not sign any contract that they deemed in violation of the Taft-Hartley act.

The newspapers have continued to publish each day, using a new process called varityping. The strikers have kept their ranks intact, however, while top ITU leaders have fought a widespread legal battle with the NLRB and publishers.

Lewis McCracken; Harry Wingert and Neil Bower, both board members.

Laws Demanded To Build 2 Million Homes

IMMEDIATE legislation to speed the construction of 2 million additional homes a year and to tighten rent control was urged by the CIO in two resolutions.

The housing resolution noted that millions of families, particularly those with lower incomes, are still suffering from the acute housing shortage. It termed the neglect of slum clearance a "national scandal." Blame was placed on the Republican 80th Congress, which prevented passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill.

Delegates called for legislation providing the following aids to housing:

- Public housing, slum clearance, urban re-development, farm housing and provision for research into cost-reduction methods.
- Encouragement of use of all available production facilities to speed attainment of 2 million homes per year.
- Allocation of construction materials to insure its use for housing instead of non-essential building.
- Federal action to break the bottleneck in the home loan market by providing direct loans to veterans, direct loans to cooperative and mutual home ownership developments; expansion of the secondary market to include loans made to cooperatives and mutual home ownership groups at not more than 3 or 3½% interest.

THE resolution also urged the appointment of labor representatives on all local housing authorities and consultation with consumer and labor groups in developing the program at higher levels.

Federal Rent Administrator Tighe Woods was handed a large share of the blame for the present weaknesses in the rent control law by the resolution on rent control.

Woods was accused of failure to press for a strong law before Congress and of further weakening the law through his administrative interpretations. His replacement by an "able and fearless" administrator was urged.

A new, effective rent control law should include the following, said the resolution:

- Effective eviction controls.
- Full criminal and civil enforcement sanctions.
- Use of local rent boards as advisors only.
- Roll-back of "unwarranted" rent boosts already granted.
- Recontrol of units now exempted, such as new construction, conversions and hotels.
- Authority for the Administrator to recontrol areas in need of control.
- Safeguards to landlords and tenants through review by a federal statutory court.

A third resolution urged that preference be given local housing authorities and non-profit tenant groups in the sale of government-owned war housing.

Asks Rise In Labor's Wages

AN ever-increasing standard of living for wage-earners and the continual growth of wage-earners' share of the national income was declared one of the basic purposes of CIO in the resolution on wage policy.

Delegates noted that wages have not kept pace with spiralling prices and pointed to the Federal Reserve Board's report that one-fourth the nation's families spent more than they earned last year.

The continued improvement of workers' standard of living, a continual rise in purchasing power, an increasing share of the national wealth to wages all within the framework of a "reasonable profit structure" were sought in the resolution.

Further wage props were advocated in the resolutions on the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and a guaranteed annual wage.

The FLSA resolution charged big corporations and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce with stirring up campaigns to whittle away certain benefits of the Act. One such campaign is intended to wipe out the Supreme Court decision which held that premium pay—such as shift differentials, pay for Saturdays, Sundays or holidays—must be considered the basis for computing overtime pay for those days.

Another campaign cited by the resolution is that proposed by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which, stated the resolution, would virtually wipe out overtime provisions of the law.

The extension of FLSA coverage to the millions of workers now exempt, increase in the minimum wage to $1 an hour and granting of the authority to the Wage-Hour administrator to collect back minimum pay if the employe so desires were advocated.

Recent attempts by business spokesmen to obtain repeal of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts law were condemned by a third resolution.

To keep minimum wage standards on government contract work higher than those in industry generally, the resolution urged Congress to appropriate sufficient funds to enable more rapid wage determinations than is now possible with a skelton staff.

"The CIO regards the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act as a basic and necessary part of the nation's labor legislation and national policy requires its continuance, with its standards unimpaired," commented the resolution.

Another program to protect wage floors was included in a fourth resolution urging CIO affiliates to seek incorporation in contracts of guaranteed minimum annual wages or, as a partial step, guaranteed minimum weekly wages.

Executive Board Revokes N. Y. City Council's Charter

BY a vote of 38 to 5, the CIO Executive Board has given its approval to the recommendation of a three-member panel that the CIO revoke the certificate of affiliation of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

Four board members abstained from voting and three were absent. The negative votes were cast by James Durkin, president of the Office & Professional Workers and president of the council involved in the charges; Joseph Selly, president of the Communication Association; Morris Pizer, president of the Furniture Workers; Ben Gold, president of the Fur Workers, and Murray Weinstein, Public Workers.

The executive board, also approved the appointment of Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council and a vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, as the CIO representative to take custody of the property and funds of the New York City Council. In addition, the board recommended that the executive officers of the CIO should issue a certificate of affiliation to a new council for New York City, at their own discretion.

L. S. Buckmaster, president, Rubber Workers; Martin Wagner, president, Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, and Joseph Froesch, president, Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers, who constituted the three man panel appointed by Philip Murray to investigate the Greater New York Council, stated in their report that the Council:

Had interfered in the activities of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes; that it had engaged in mass picketing at New York City department stores despite direct requests from the same union that it not do so; Failed to "manifest concern" or take action to prevent eight locals of the Retail union from leaving the CIO.

"Wilfully, directly and unauthorizedly interfered" with the Transport Workers Union in collective bargaining negotiations for a subway wage increase; interjected itself into the proceedings before the Public Service Commission in New York against the position of the Utility Workers which was involved in wage negotiations with the Consolidated Edison Co.; followed "closely" the line of the Communist Party in the Transport Union case.

"Slavishly" followed the Communist party line in the case of the department store secession movement; the Council, on the basis of evidence and lack of refutation, is acting "not as an agency of the CIO . . . but rather . . . as an instrumentality through which the Communist Party is interfering in the affairs of the CIO and its unions in New York City," and as a result of these conditions the Council has become "utterly unrepresentative" of CIO membership in New York City.

The board members who abstained from voting on the resolution, including Albert Fitzgerald of UE; William Lawrence, representing Harry Bridges of ILWU; Donald Henderson, of FTA; and Julius Emspak, UE, did not participate in the discussion on the report.

Following the passage of the report, Durkin stated that the Council would not appeal the decision but would accept it "in the interests of unity."

Charges Dropped

Staff members of the House Un-American Affairs Committee and the Labor Committee let it be known they have dropped contempt of Congress cases against 60 witnesses, mostly labor union leaders.

The witnesses had refused in hearings in many parts of the country to say whether they were communists. They had been threatened with contempt citations.

CIO Levy Boosted 3 Cents

THE CIO convention voted last week to increase per capita payments by 3c a member a month in order to speed the southern organizing drive and improve other national CIO functions.

The constitutional change, effective Dec. 1, lifts to 8c a month the amount paid as "dues" by the various national unions to CIO. It lifts the payments to CIO made by local industrial unions from 50c a member a month to 75c.

The additional 3c, under the terms of the constitutional change, will provide 2c a month a member to finance the southern organizing drive, and one cent for general organizing and other purposes.

In the past two years, the organizing drive in the southern states has been financed by voluntary contributions from various national CIO unions.

But, it was pointed out by Pres. Murray and others, that system has never been wholly satisfactory. In addition, an overheavy burden fell on a few CIO unions, while some others contributed little or nothing to the organizing drive.

Murray pointed out that last year the steel union contributed a half million dollars to the organizing drive, and about an equal amount in strike benefits to other unions.

Murray was joined by Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers in appealing for speedy adoption of the per capita increase.

Reuther pointed out that "you cannot organize the millions of unorganized in the south by passing around a tin plate in the top CIO council every month.

"You can do it only if you know there is income, based upon per capita tax payments, which guarantees that each shall carry his load according to his ability."

The speakers pointed out that CIO staff officials' salaries are NOT paid sufficiently for the work they do.

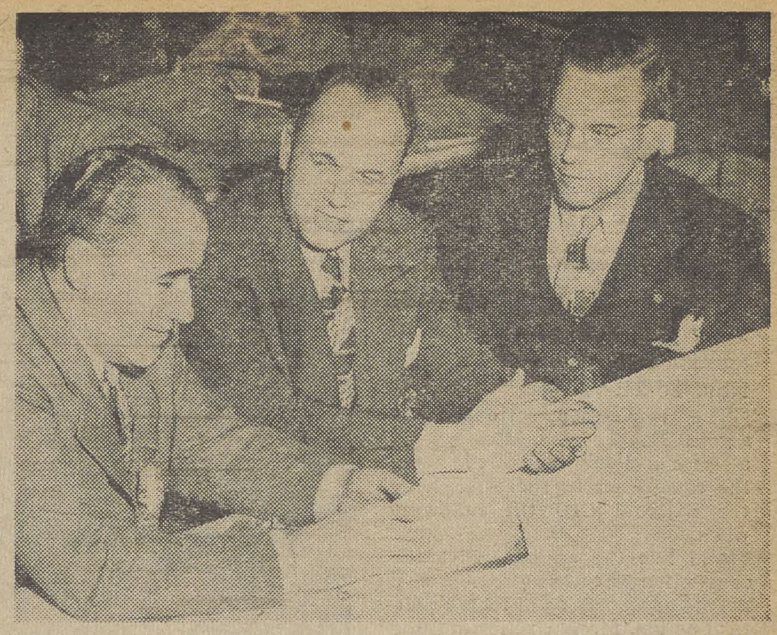
McDonald pointed out that CIO representatives have been affected by the rising cost of living, and "it has been a long, long time since they received a wage increase."

James Matles, director of organization for the United Electrical Workers, voiced opposition to the increased per capita, but it passed by a near-unanimous majority.

UAW FM Jan. 1

The first FM station of a network planned by the CIO Auto Workers will begin regular broadcasts Jan. 1 Work on the Cleveland UAW FM station operation is next in order.

WDET-FM, the Detroit station, will have practice broadcasts during December. "It is a public service of the UAW-CIO and will devote itself to meeting community needs," the union says. "It will sponsor forums and discussions and educational program that will meet the needs and express the interests of the ordinary people in the community. The emphasis will be on the needs of people and not on the opportunity to sell them cereal or soap or medicine."



The Landlord Still Pursues Them: You would think that a CIO convention is one place a union wouldn't run into its landlord. You're wrong. Look at this picture, R. to l., Sec.-Treas. Ralph Novak and Executive Sam Eubanks of the Newspaper Guild are having to put up with Sec.-Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers, their landlord. The Guild occupies space in the Textile Workers' Building in New York City. But nobody seems to be angry.

Local 100, TWU, Reinstates Hogan To Its Presidency

MICHEL Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers, has revealed that Local 100, TWUA, had rescinded the suspension of its president, Austin Hogan.

Quill, a member of Local 100, which represents 40,000 subway and trolley workers in New York City, accusing Hogan of being a leader of a pro-Communist group in the union, declares these were the reasons for lifting the suspensions:

1. It would allow the TWU national convention, which opens in Chicago next week, to decide whether or not the charges against Hogan were substantiated.

2. It would frustrate what he called a plot by Hogan and his colleagues to unseat more than 100 delegates elected to represent Local 100. (All but six of the delegates back Quill's program, the TWU president said.)

3. It would frustrate a plot by Hogan and his followers to make Hogan a martyr over the suspension.

Now that Hogan has been reinstated by action of Local 100's Executive Board with Quill's full approval, the TWU president said Hogan is obligated, as Local 100 president, to sign the convention credentials of the local's delegates.

Hogan had been charged with violating the TWU and Local 100's constitution, of disruption in the local and international's affairs and of conspiring with a Communist bloc to mislead the membership.

ESSAY WINNER—Miss Lois Schneider (r.) with Pres. Herman Steffes of the Wisconsin CIO Council, and Mrs. Steffes. Lois, as a high school senior at Mary D. Bradford High School, Kenosha, Wis., was winner of a trip to Portland convention as victor in an essay contest sponsored in all high schools in the state by Wisconsin CIO Council. Subject was "Why We Need Unions." Said Lois's essay: "The feeble efforts of individuals have been merged into a great voice bargaining with the employer . . . so that the door of opportunity will be open to every employe." She read the essay to the convention and received a standing ovation.

Vicar General Thomas Tobin of Portland greets Vice Pres. John Yancey of the Transport Service Workers.

Archbishop Backs Industry Councils

CATHOLIC Archbishop Edward D. Howard of Portland, Ore., urged the CIO convention to bend every effort to set up the industry council program which he described as "putting into practice the principles of social justice" advocated by the Catholic church.

The CIO has been advocating the council plan since 1940. Under the program representatives of management, labor and governnment would set up a council for each industry. The industries thus organized would federate by regions and would choose a national economic council, likewise representing capital, labor and government.

Archbishop Howard, whose address was presented by the Rev. Thomas Tobin, vicar general of the Portland Archdiocese, said "you will be opposed in the future as you have been in the past."

THE Catholic leader declared that "The alternative to the council program is for big labor and big business to fight it out—with the government waiting, willy-nilly, to pick up the pieces and take over control of our economic life.

"Gentlemen of the CIO, give the American people the Industry Council program," the archbishop pleaded.

Archbishop Howard drew heavy applause when he called for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, for treating "the Negro as our brother in Christ" and for answering communism by "establishing the reign of social justice and social charity."

"Show us how to be patriotic without being nationalist," he continued. "Give us the example of honesty and fidelity in carrying out our contracts, in an honest day's work for an honest day's pay.

"Show us how to be conscious at all times and under all circumstances of our responsibilities, under God, to promote the welfare of all the American people. And be assured that in thus carrying out your enormous responsibilities you will continue to have the enthusiastic support of the Church and the prayers of all its priests and the people."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray said later that "the speech encompassed the program of the CIO."

Archbishop Howard took exception to criticism of American labor leaders as expressed by Dr. C. Wright Mills in his book "The New Men of Power—America's Labor Leaders." Wright said: ". . . the labor leaders do not connect specific demands with the general images of the kind of society they want, nor do they integrate immediate demands and general principles in programs."

"I do not agree with the professor's generic criticism of this country's labor leaders, much less with the conclusion that this country needs a socialist program," said the Archbishop.

Archbishop Howard said that the industry council program was the answer to such critism.

11-Point Program For Vets

DECLARING that the record of rehabilitation for 15,000,000 servicemen and women is "a spotty one," the resolution on veterans adopted by the convention called for an 11-point program:

1. Protection for the job rights of veterans and servicemen, including full accumulated seniority for all time spent in the service, promotions and increases they would have received and eligibilty to vacations for the year they entered the armed forces and the year of their re-instatement.

2. A housing program "to assure immediate large scale public and private construction of decent low cost homes."

3. Increases in benefits for disabled veterans and their dependents, and union contracts not only to provide jobs for the handicapped but also to put them in jobs matching their abilities.

4. Unemployment compensation for a mimimum of $25 a week for two years if necessary and the elimination of the ban against payments to strikers. (The rate now is $20 a week for a maximum of 52 weeks but for most veterans payments would end July 27, '49.)

5. Full use of the on-the-job and the apprenticeship training provisions of the GI Bill of Rights but with safeguards "to prevent subsidization of industry and fraud upon the veterans."

6. Direct loans to veterans to purchase homes, businesses and farms through veterans' equivalent of the RFC.

7. Real vets' priority in the purchase of surplus properties in small enough amounts to bring them in the reach of the ex-servicemen.

8. Amendment of the mustering out pay bill to furnish retroactive coverage to veterans who were discharged to resume essential occupations during the war.

9. Appropriation of sufficient funds to the Veterans Administration to permit rapid completion of VA studies essential to the payment of vets' insurance dividends.

10. Social security credit for time spent in armed forces.

11. Democratization of the armed forces, including elimination of the caste system and courts martial reform.

Accuses Capehart

Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.) has flatly accused Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R., Ind.) of using "a congressional committee and Congressional appropriations to carry on a propaganda drive against the antitrust laws."

Lady Mayor-Elect Says

Bridging Gap Between Classes Seen As American Ideal

THE steady procession of male speakers across the platform of the Natl. CIO convention was broken only once—by the mayor-elect of Portland, Mrs. Dorothy McCullough Lee.

Displaying more the gracious charm of the garden teaparty host than the rough-and-tumble demeanor of a politician, Mrs. Lee welcomed the CIO to Portland on the 100th anniversary of the opening of the Oregon Territory.

Supported by a united labor campaign, Mrs. Lee ran off with the mayoralty election in a field of seven candidates. She describes herself as a "congenital Republican."

"The time has come," said Mrs. Lee, "when we either walk constructively or destructively. It seems to me there can no longer be any middle ground."

Realization of the ideals set forth in the Declaration of Independence depend on our bridging "the big gap between those who have too much and those who have much too little," she emphasized.

DAUGHTER of a naval officer, whose assignments took him and his family to such far-away places as Guam, China and Japan, Mrs. Lee had only three months of formal education before entering finishing school in Washington, D. C. But the young politician-to-be rebelled against this genteel education and staged her own "sit-down-strike" until permitted to enter high school in Newport, R. I.

Her father transferred again—this time to San Francisco—and Dorothy completed her high school education in California, where she became an active debator and decided on a legal career.

Following her graduation from the Univ. of California law school in 1923, she opened a law practice, married a Standard Oil of California employe and moved with him to Portland, where she again set up her shingle.

When a Portland resident less than two years, Mrs. Lee was urged by a group of women in the state to run for the state legislature. She lost the first attempt, but won a seat two years later. She served as a law-maker 13 years before her election to the Portland city council. Shortly thereafter she became one of the city's four commissioners, and will hold that post until her installation as mayor next January.

CIO Wins Longshore Pact

WITH CIO Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood and his assistant, R. J. Thomas, playing major roles, a strike victory has been won for the CIO Longshoremen against West Coast shippers.

A joint union-management statement said the agreement, which was recommended by committees for both sides, "can mean a new era for West Coast shipping."

The agreement, which is to last for three years until June, 1951, includes retention of the hiring hall, which was a major factor in the strike, a 15-cent raise, effective upon resumption of work, and an increased vacation credit. The hours provisions were also improved. A new grievance procedure, designed to reduce the possibility of work stoppages, was reached.

The hiring hall will be in effect during a court test of whether the Taft-Hartley union shop provisions are (a) illegal, or (b) do not apply to the hiring hall.

The joint statement, signed by Harry Bridges, ILWU president, Thomas, and two industry spokesmen, declared:

"It meets the economic needs and several problems of both sides and was reached in the true spirit of compromise."

Industry spokesmen were quoted by reporters as saying they particularly felt the three-year contract would bring peace.

The various ports were voting last week, with first indications being a one-sided "yes" vote.

However, the date of return is indefinite, since the Marine Cooks, the radio operators and the independent Marine Firemen have not come to agreement with the employers.

Fight Filibusters

Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) will join Democratic leaders in a move to bar Senate filibusters when the 81st Congress convenes. Such a move would open the way for passage of the entire Democratic civil rights program including anti-polltax, anti-lynching and fair employment practices legislation.

Labor Parley Set

The 15tn annual labor legislation conference is scheduled Nov. 30 through Dec. 2 in the Labor Dept. with Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin presiding. Delegates from more than 40 states will attend.

CIO Conclave 'Just Wonderful' Say High School Reporters

SANDWICHED in among the 125 members of the working press at two jam-packed press tables on the CIO floor were eight wide-eyed, diligent note-taking embryo reporters from Portland and Seattle.

Some reporting for school weeklies, others for history classes, all said they knew fairly little about CIO before their visit, a lot after two or three days of convention speeches. And what they saw, for the most part, they liked.

There was 15-year-old David Belch, a sophomore at Portland's Grant High school. What impressed David most, he said, were CIO's leaders — "very capable men." And Philip Murray—well, words defied him at this point. Philip Murray, thought David, "is a great speaker and a great leader and seems to have everybody right under his thumb."

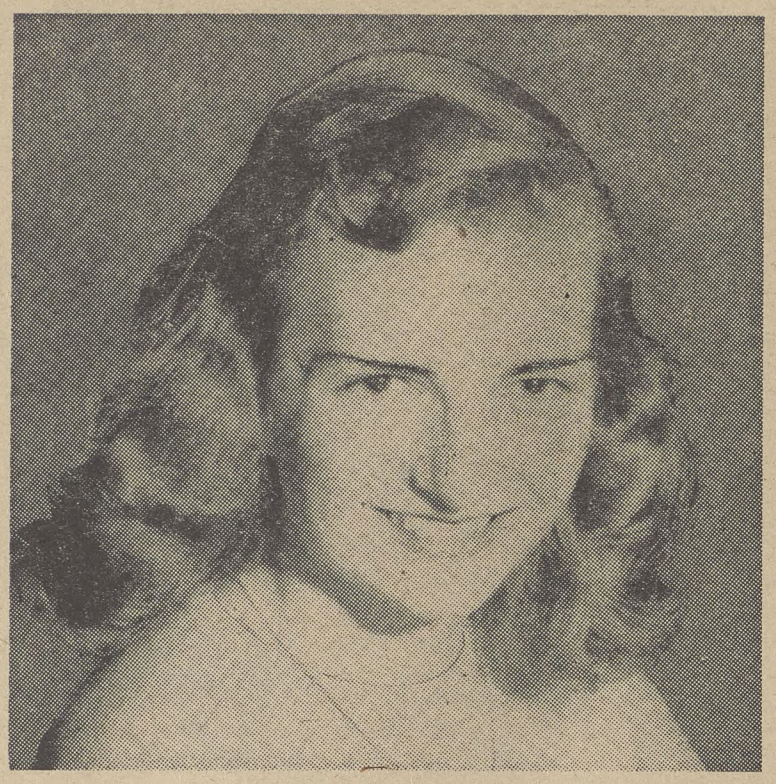
David didn't know just what sort of story he would write about his first experience with the CIO. There was so much packed into the two days he was there, he'd have to take time out to get it all thought out. One thing he did know—Taft-Hartley ought to be moderated. He didn't know too much about the law, he said, but he definitely felt the non-communist affidavits provision should be stricken out and so should the clause mandatory unfair labor charges against unions.

ALL the way from Seattle, Wash., came Evelyn Atkinson, representing the Lincoln High "Lincolntotem." CIO's not exactly something new in Evelyn's young life. Her father's CIO regional director in Washington—Roy Atkinson.

Evelyn's nomination for the most distinguished speech went to Phil Murray's opening address. And the convention action she liked most was the enthusiastic endorsement of PAC and rejection of a third party.

Portland's Roosevelt high school paper, the "Roosevelt Ranger," was represented by its editor, Barbara Case, and news editor, Helen Jones, who planned to report back to her history class as well.

They, too, were especially impressed with the dignity of Phil Murray, but voiced disappointment at the booing which punctuated several speeches. Evelyn liked the minimum wage and civil rights stands of the CIO, found U. S. Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin "interesting" and Sen. Wayne Morse "entertaining."



EVELYN ATKINSON

She covered the convention for her high school paper. Her father is CIO Regional Director in the State of Washington.

To Helen the free expression of opinion on the floor was fine, "sounded just like history class."

FOUR freshmen from Portland's Franklin high school were gathering impressions for history class reports. Teacher Frank Learned dishes out "funny" assignments like that all the time, they said. Once he sent a student out to see a pig; she'd never seen one before.

For this particular assignment Learned, who ran unsuccessfully for mayor recently, sent Helen Hartman, Crystal Wridge, Jean Fleming and Pat Amos. Crystal knew about CIO from her mother, who once held a CIO Cannery Workers card, and her father, who used to belong to the Woodworkers. Her mother used to wear a PAC button, but she never knew what it meant until her convention visit.

All four girls were agog about Transport Workers Pres. Mike Quill, who, they said used language they could understand. Some of the other speakers "used such big words."

David Belch, youngest newspaperman at the convention.

What did they like best? Well—everything. "It was all just so wonderful!"

Convention Says

Prices Hit Rural, City Workers

FARMERS and labor face identical problems. Rural and city workers are interdependent and they will prosper together or not at all—it was pointed out in a resolution unanimously adopted by the CIO convention.

While the price of wheat has fallen 84c a bushel and corn has slumped more than a dollar a bushel since January, the retail price of bread has risen 10% and other commodities continue to climb.

The resolution pledged support to a program designed to hold farm prices at a reasonable level in relation to industrial prices and approved the soil conservation program. Condemned the attack on rural electrification, and reiterated the CIO policy to fight monopolies and urged continuation of the battle to maintain high real purchasing power for farmers and workers.

Stress Needs Of Children

AN extensive program covering the care and protection of children from the cradle through the school years was adopted unanimously by the CIO convention as one of the organization's major objectives. Two separate resolutions covering various phases of problems affecting youngsters were passed.

One, outlining a general program listed these eight essentials necessary for the health, security and proper education of children:

1. Family incomes high enough to buy a good living and protection against hazards of unemployment, sickness, accidents and death.

2. Roomy, well-built homes.

3. Proper medical care for both mothers and children.

4. Good schools with well-paid teachers.

5. Recreation facilities.

6. Protection against too early and unsuitable jobs.

7. Child welfare services to aid working mothers.

8. Communities so designed as to protect children and give them every opportunity to develop as healthy, happy human beings.

"Great numbers of our children today are forced to grow up in families and communities unable to provide these opportunities," the resolutions stated, and cited figures showing that over 100,000 children are victims of cerebral palsy; that 20,000 babies a year die needlessly, and that 100,000 each year are stricken with rheumatic fever or heart disease.

A second resolution attacking the problem of child labor, called for proper state and federal legislation to "guarantee to American boys and girls freedom from exploitation."

Number, Please

Elaine Burnham is secy.-treas. of the Oregon Telephone Union, one of the CIO's new affiliates representing Pacific Telephone & Telegraph employes throughout the state. There are 5,000 in the bargaining unit, and the OTU hopes to have them all in the union soon.

Miss Burnham, who is 25, shy, charming and modest, was formerly vice-pres. of the old union, the United Telephone Employes of Oregon, whose members voted by referendum last March to join the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. The new union was set up at a constitutional convention held in Portland in October. She and other officers and members of her union were interested observers at the CIO convention.

Gov. Gruening:

As Alaska Goes, So Goes --

POLLSTERS would do well to look to Alaska in making future political prognostications, according to Ernest Gruening, territorial governor of Alaska.

Speaking on the opening day of the convention, Gov. Gruening pointed out that for 32 years, ever since Alaskans started to elect a delegate to Congress and their own territorial officials, they have been an infallible barometer of the subsequent national election.

He said that Republicans and reactionaries who had won control of the territorial legislature, lost an election a month before the people went to the polls in the United States.

Gov. Gruening expressed the hope that Alaska would soon achieve statehood in order that the people of that area could join with the rest of the nation in combatting totalitarian ideologies and help foster our democratic processes.

He was assured by Pres. Murray that the CIO wold work with him, the President of the United States and the people of the Territory to secure statehood for the Territory.

Convention Resolution Says Labor Dept. Is In Dire Need

THE U. S. Labor Department's 1948 appropriation is $14 million, while the Dept. of Commerce has 13 times as much, the Dept. of Agriculture more than 50 times as much.

That fact was cited by the resolution passed by the convention on the Labor Dept. to illustrate the extent to which the Labor Dept. has been whittled down in recent years.

The Department was created to serve the interests of wage earners and white collar workers, the resolution stated. "This Department, instead of being assigned functions and appropriations which would permit it to perform this function adequately, has instead been shorn of many of its functions, especially by the Republican 80th Congress . . ."

Strengthening of the Department requires the following, according to the resolution:

- Assignment to the Department of such responsibilities as settlement of labor disputes, manpower problems, unemployment compensation, federal employes' compensation, safety and industrial hygiene, vocational education and rehabilitation, labor education, immigration and naturalization, and research and information on labor problems.
- Adequate appropriations to carry out its extended and restored funcitons.
- The power, prestige and staff to carry on its enlarged functions.

Alter DP Law, CIO Demands

Pointing out the unfairness of the displaced persons bill passed by the 80th Congress, the CIO convention demanded revision of the DP Act of 1948 so that:

a. 100,000 DP's be admitted a year.

b. Provisions which require future immigration quotas of regular immigrants to be removed.

c. The eligibility date would be changed.

d. The features which discriminate against groups or individuals because of race, creed of origin would be removed.

e. That the section which requires guaranteed home and job be removed.

PARLEY REAFFIRMS SUPPORT OF ECA

THE CIO's stand on foreign policy caused sharp debate which was far out of proportion to the final vote, which upheld Pres. Murray and the majority of the executive board by a lopsided margin.

The foreign policy picture has four facets:

a. The Marshall Plan.

b. The World Federation of Trade Unions.

c. The Economic Recovery Plan Trade Union Conference.

d. Organized Labor and Latin America.

The Marshall Plan had been a keen issue in CIO circles since last January, when the executive board praised ERP and rejected the third party movement.

In Pres. Murray's keynote, he touched on the Marshall Plan and almost immediately set off a denunciation of his and CIO's stand by a small group of delegates, whose main spokesman was Pres. Donald Henderson of the Food & Tobacco Workers.

Said Henderson: "A plan administered by the representatives of Wall St. to further a cold war against the Soviet Union holds no hope for the peoples of foreign lands or for America.

"We deplore the acceptance by labor represented of advisory positions to the Wall St. and military advisors of the Marshall Plan which can only serve to cloak the true designs of American Big Business both at home and abroad."

CIO representatives in ERP include Clinton S. Golden, former vice president of Murray's Steelworkers; Ted F. Silvey, of the Telephone Organizing Committee; Harry Martin, president, Newspaper Guild, and others. There are also AFL representatives.

THE foreign policy resolution itself was a telling answer to Henderson's contentions. It cried out in these unmistakable words:

"We reaffirm our support of the ERP as an instrument for the peace and prosperity of the peoples of Europe and the world. We believe that the great productive capacity of our country should be used to provide food, clothing and the means for economic rehabilitation to war-devastated Europe.

"Free, democratic labor and other organizations in Europe have welcomed ERP and have cooperated with their own governments and with the American labor movement in the work of ECA.

"We indorse and commend the work of CIO officials and members in cooperating with, and functioning within, the ECA. The participation of American labor in ECA at all levels of administration is the best guarantee to European labor that the interests of its members will be protected and the independence of European peoples preserved.

"We urge increased labor participation in both the policies and administration of the program with full recognition of the essential role of labor in insuring its success.

"We condemn the organized opposition to ERP by the Soviet Union and its satellites and the method by which the economic misery of Europe is used for political advantage and to promote chaos and confusion.

"One of the ways to peace is the abandonment of this short-sighted and unjust opposition. We urge the Congress to continue to appropriate the necessary funds to achieve the purposes of the ERP."

There was negligible opposition on a standing vote.

Pres. Martin of the Newspaper Guild traveled more than 8000 miles—from Budapest—by train, boat and plane to attend the convention and report, from first-hand knowledge, on what he had seen in Europe—both left and right of the Iron Curtain.

He told of walking out of the Intl. Organization of Journalists meeting in Budapest when "my tender American stomach could no longer endure the nauseous outpouring of hatred, of totalitarian propaganda and of slander against the democratic way of life as we know it in the free countries of the world."

"The Marshall Plan is beginning to work, I am happy to report to you."

World Federation of Trade Unions

The resolution on this resolved:

"That the CIO delegates to the WFTU are commended for their persistent efforts to have the organization function along the lines agreed to when it was established.

"That in view of these developments, the CIO officers and executive board are authorized, in consultation with the British TUC and other free trade union centers, to take whatever action in relation to the WFTU and the international labor movement as will best accomplish CIO policies and objectives."

Joseph Selly, president, American Communications Association, led the opposition. Said he:

"This convention should reaffirm our support of WFTU."

The no votes were almost inaudible.

The ERP Trade Union conference resolution called for:

Commendation of CIO officers for participating in this movement and "further we pledge our complete support to the free democratic European trade movements in their acceptance of ERP."

The resolution on Organized Labor and Latin America asked closer cooperation among organized movements of the Western Hemisphere; noted that unions in the Americas are often dealing with the same employers; called for a hemispheric plan for economic development of the Americas.

CSC Lauded

The CIO convention passed a resolution listing a number of benefits of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee and commending the CSC, its union counselling and community health and welfare programs. The resolution also urged all CIO affiliates to establish community services committees.

Indict Slaughter

Failure to register as a lobbyist led to the indictment of former Rep. Roger C. Slaughter of Missouri by a federal grand jury. Slaughter is accused of using his congressional connections to influence legislation for the Kansas City Board of Trade and the Minneapolis Grain Exchange.

Security Law Inadequate

The woeful inadequacies of social security are recited in a lengthy convention resolution adopted without a dissenting vote.

The resolution points out:

The already weak measure was further weakened by the 80th Congress. As the measure now stacks up, only one worker in six has any chance of income if he should become temporarily disabled from causes not related to his occupation. Even when a worker qualifies to receive social security benefits $15 a month in wages will disqualify him for old age insurance.

AVC Bars Reds

The American Veterans' Committee convention has voted, 13,516 to 8,830, to make Communist Party members ineligible to hold AVC membership.

Patrick Conroy:

Reds Try To Wreck CCL

FRATERNAL greetings of the Canadian Congress of Labor were brought to the convention by Patrick Conroy, secretary of the Canadian counterpart of the CIO.

Conroy pointed out that the problems of Canada are basically the same as those in the United States—"high cost of living; trying to catch up by wage increases; needs for greater social security, better old age pensions and many other things Consequently, the progress you are making on these matters in the United States is a decided help to us in Canada to achieve the same yardstick of progress," he said.

"You know, among a few in our trade union movement in Canada, it is considered treason to say a good word about the United States . . . you are described as imperialists. We have made replies to those statements. We have elected to go along with the United States. And taking such a stand, we stand with decency, with liberty, with the right of self expression, as against taking a stand asking to be driven underground where liberty is going to take a prolonged holiday.

"There are great efforts to try to change this viewpoint. The communist friends are working overtime. They are trying to break up our trade union movement. They are trying to start a new communist third force."

In closing his remarks, Secretary Conroy assured the convention that "when the chips are down the Canadian Congress of Labor will be standing side by side with the CIO."

1 Oil Firm Holds Out

THE three-month-old strike of 15,000 CIO oil workers in California has narrowed down to a lockout of 2,200 Union Oil Company employes.

Settlements have been reached by the CIO Oil Workers with all the major struck companies except Union Oil.

In the case of that company, OWIU has offered to settle on the same basis as it did with the other companies and take the 12½c an hour wage offer originally made the companies before the strike.

Union Oil has replied, however, that it has jobs "available" for only 450 of the original 2200 strikers against its Wilmington and Oleum refineries.

The Union Oil strikers have dug in for a long battle to move the company from this position. They have access to information showing that attempted operations inside the refineries with scab labor are inefficient and troublesome. They believe that a determined stand on the part of the locked-out men will eventually result in the company removing scabs inside the plants, who are operating the refineries on a partial basis, and return of the experienced men who formerly held the jobs.

Meanwhile, a survey of Union Oil service stations in the vicinities of the struck refineries indicated gasoline sales have dropped more than 25%. Plans are being held for a possible educational campaign to further cut company sales.

—But the correspondents took time out at the cocktail party given jointly by the Portland, Ore., Newspaper Guild and the CIO Publicity Dept.

Proposed Oil Steal Flayed

The CIO resolution on the proposed tideland oil steal called on the Federal Government to "exploit, refine and distribute" the publicly owned oil for military and other Government needs.

The billions of dollars worth of mineral wealth lying under the ocean between the shore line and the three mile limit was declared by the Supreme Court last year to be the property of the United States government. At once a powerful lobby of oil monopolists and State officials started a drive in Congress to turn the tidelands over to the States.

The CIO resolution denounced this proposed steal, and insisted that the tidelands be kept for the benefit of all the people, instead of being parcelled out among the dozen or so seacoast states, whose officials would turn them over to greedy private companies.

The CIO urged that any profits from government development of the tidelands be used for education and other public welfare purposes.

More Safety On Job Urged

A call to management to join the CIO in setting up management-labor safety and health committees on the plant level led the five-point program in the safety resolution adopted by the CIO convention.

The resolution also commended President Truman for calling the first National Conference on Industrial Safety (next March in Washington, D. C.) and urged CIO affiliates to participate in the conference.

The 81st Congress was urged to restore the Bureau of Standards, U. S. Dept. of Labor; and appropriations for the training of state factory inspectors and to grant additional funds for expansion of the training program.

UAW Drops Airline Aim

OFFICERS of the CIO Auto Workers have announced that they are discontinuing their efforts to organize employes of the Pan American Airlines and urging those employes to join the CIO Transport Workers.

The UAW began organizing work among Pan-American workers who were in revolt against Communist leadership in their local union in Miami and Communist influence in the TWU.

Through the efforts of TWU Pres. Michael Quill, Communist influence in that union is being cleaned out, UAW leaders say. The UAW urged the Pan-American workers who sought UAW affiliation to join with and assist Quill and his associates "in the commendable job they are doing to build a democratic union and support and implement CIO program and policies."

Union Label Drives OK'd

The convention indorsed the union label campaigns of all CIO affiliates and approved the establishment by President Murray of a standing Committee on Union Labels.

The convention in another resolution specifically indorsed the union label campaign of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, urging the support of all affiliated bodies and asking that all CIO members and their families buy only those men's and boy's clothes bearing the Amalgamated label.

The CIO affiliates, in still another resolution were urged whenever possible to have their printing bear the label of the Amalgamated Lithographers of America.

Deportation Sought

Schneider was arested at the council's offices Nov. 23 and taken to Ellis Island. He was released later on $1,000 bond pending a hearing at some unannounced date. The Immigration & Naturalization Service said it would seek to deport Schneider to Russia on grounds that he "is a member of an organization that believes in, advises, advocates and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the government of the U. S."

Goldberg Gets Ovation on This:

'We Want The Wagner Act Back'

"Through such wisdom as God may have endowed us with, and such force and vitality as we may possess, both on the local and national scene, we should promote and prosecute with all the vigor at our command the prompt repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act." — From Pres. Murray's keynote.

ARTHUR GOLDBERG, general counsel of the CIO, made it abundantly clear to the convention and to the world that this is CIO's program on Taft-Hartleyism:

"We want to repeal the Taft-Hartley Law We want the Wagner Act back where it was."

In that terse language, the CIO's legal authority brought the convention to a spontaneous ovation. Because, that's just what CIO—its officers, its members, all who make it up—want.

Goldberg also emphatically put at rest "dope" stories which had been spread far and wide by newspaper columnists and radio "experts."

"Let me put an end to all inspired stories emanating out of the propaganda organs of big business that the high officials of CIO have any other program but that. That is the program," Goldberg asserted.

"That is the program we are going to stand by. You know we get all kinds of these accounts, and sometimes it is difficult to believe that people mean what they say, but it is time everybody learned that the CIO means what it says on this subject and every other subject as well."

JUST in case anyone had further doubts about what was meant, the counsel went on:

"I would like to point out for the benefit of those members of the Resolutions Committee that have some sort of a minority report to make, that I cannot see any kind of a minority report in any way, shape or form. When we say 'Repeal the T-H Act,' it means we want to get rid of the T-H Labor Board. We are saying that the board that administered the T-H Act should go and that means every member of the board. They are a bad board. General Counsel Denham is going to go.

"We want a Wagner Board—a board that will administer the statute in the spirit of that great American, Sen. Wagner, who wrote a real labor law."

(After Goldberg finished his address, Joseph Selly, president of the American Communications Association and spokesman for the Resolutions Committee minority, took the mike and said: "Having heard the remarks of Counsel Goldberg, I arise in full and unequivocal support of the resolution.")

"It is our bounden duty and our obligation to exercise influences which we possess in promoting the constructive program of the President. Number One on the list is repeal of the T-H Law." — From Pres. Murray's keynote.

GOLDBERG started his speech by calling the law the "Lawyers' Full Employment Act." "I do not refer to lawyers who represent CIO," Goldberg said. "I refer to the lawyers who represent the minions of big business in this country."

"I make the charge, with all the responsibility of my office as general counsel of the CIO, that there is about to take place a well-financed campaign on the part of the NAM to defeat the results of the election as far as the Taft-Hartley Law is concerned. In Washington there have been meetings held and a publicity department organized to embark upon the greatest campaign this country has ever witnessed, in order to sell the people and the Congress on the idea that the election is not a mandate on the T-H Act."

HERE'S what some other speakers had to say about T-H:

O. A. Knight, president, Oil Workers: "I testify, after weeks and months of bitter experiences, that there are no statements in the resolution, none but what are the absolute truth with respect to this vicious legislation.

"The OWIU has been engaged, for three months, in a bitter strike which I contend would never had occurred had it not been for T-H and the atmosphere created by the act."

Selly: "In January, the A. T. & T., through one of its subsidiaries, took on our union. We engaged in a strike, after several weeks of fruitless negotiations. After several weeks, the company decided they wouldn't sit with us because we were a non-complying union. So, we felt the full burden of T-H."

THE resolution, in its "resolve," declared:

"With united determination we dedicate the CIO and its entire membership to the mission of obtaining a repudiation and repeal of the T-H Act.

"We call upon the President and the new Congress promptly to remove the evil law from any statute books and to restore the Wagner Act as the law of the land."

Dynamic Legislative Program Based on Campaign Pledges

THE CIO convention adopted a dynamic legislative program for the people which would carry out the pledges of the 1948 election campaign.

The program calls for:

1. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and reenactment of the Wagner Act.
2. An anti-inflation program to roll back prices to reasonable levels and to recapture excess profits.
3. Passage of a comprehensive housing program along the lines of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill.
4. Enactment into law of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. These include:
   - a Passage of the anti-poll tax bill;
   - b Passage of the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill;
   - c Passage of the anti-lynching bill;
   - d Elimination of segregation in the armed forces;
   - e Adoption of home rule for the voteless District of Columbia.

   In addition, we oppose all bills and Executive Orders to limit constitutional rights of American citizens and curtail the right of organization and association.
5. Improvement of the Fair Labor Standards Act, with a minimum wage of at least $1.00 an hour, and improved coverage of workers not now protected.
6. Strengthening and improvement of our Social Security program, including improved coverage and substantial increases in benefits.
7. An adequate national health insurance program.
8. Federal aid-to-education, properly financed, and an effective labor education extension program.
9. Restoration and strengthening of the U. S. Department of Labor and the return to it of its legitimate functions.
10. Veterans' benefits adjusted to meet present high costs.
11. Support of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and other river valley developments, and public power and reclamation projects designed to protect and conserve our natural and human resources, to promote our national security and to prevent disasters, such as the Columbia River tragedy.
12. A farm program geared to a full economy, including reasonable price support, farm credits, soil conservation, and improvement of rural living standards.
13. Extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement authority on a long-range basis, to promote national economic stability and encourage international trade.

Denham May Be Flattered By This

CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg:

"There is another character around the Taft-Hartley Board. His name is Robert Denham. He is miscalled a general counsel. Unless we get rid of him, I am going to have to change the name of general counsel of the CIO. I don't want to share the same title as carried by Denham."

Congress Rules Change Sought

The CIO convention called on Congress to revise its rules and procedures so that the CIO's legislative program could have a chance of being adopted.

The resolution demanded:

a. That Congress complete its reorganization to prevent entrenched minority forces in both Houses from defeating democratic processes.

b. That the CIO legislative committee implement the resolution by supporting concrete measures directed to this end.

NAM—Bad Fairy Tale

CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg:

"We have all read nursery books. We all know the story of Little Red Riding Hood and grandmother and the wolf. During the last two years, the grandmother took off her disguise and showed herself to be the wolf that she really is. When I refer to grandmother, I refer to the NAM."

Back Economic Aides, CIO Asks

Solid backing from the Congress and the White House for the President's Council of Economic Advisers was demanded in a CIO resolution which recalled the many contributions the council has made to the economic life of our time.

Too Much Convention

—And Too Much For Delegate

Nation-Wide Plan Urged

The CIO took a firm stand in favor of nation-wide industrial planning in a resolution which urged President Murray and CIO officers to enlarge this program.

"Such planning," said the CIO resolution, "must extend to all the key decisions of the basic and monopolistic industries which affect the lives of the people."

The resolution called for permanent industry councils, and for a National Production Board with members from industrial management, organized labor, farmers, consumers and the public. The aim would be a general national plan evolved by democratic methods and perfected over the years.

Doghouse To Limelight In 20 Days

BIG Business, cocksure and overconfident, was riding high in the saddle. The New Deal was tottering on its last legs—just waiting for a final push from the electorate.

The Taft-Hartley Act was here to stay. New teeth were going to be put in it—teeth that would bite unions harder than ever.

Tom Dewey was a cinch! Truman was through.

The GOP was going to strengthen its control of Congress.

Then came Nov. 2. By mid-morning of the following day the commentators—a bit bewilderedly—were telling listeners about the Democrats' "miracle" victory. By mid-afternoon Wall Street had the jitters again.

Labor was no longer in the dog-house. The poll-takers were. So were the Republicans.

The election shocked the conservatives, stunned the reactionaries, cut the ground from under the extreme left-wingers. It buried the Wallaceites, repudiated the Dixiecrats.

The liberals, counted out by the "experts," were back in the saddle again.

And every delegate to the CIO convention at Portland knew it!

Three Principal Actions

Optimistic about the future of labor and the nation for the first time in many months, these delegates charted a new course of action for the CIO.

They—

1. Drew up a strong program for organizing the unorganized.

2. Determined to strengthen the political action program which brought such good results in 1948.

3. Kicked the Communists in the seat of their ideological pants.

Pres. Murray took off the gloves, doubled up his fists and waded into those retarding growth of the CIO and hampering the conduct of normal trade union functions.

He told the Communist party to keep its nose out of CIO affairs. He told several unions to put their houses in order.

And a vast majority of the delegates backed him to the hilt.

Per capita was increased 3c per member per month, assuring continuation of the Southern organizing drive on a sound footing and providing for expansion of other CIO activities.

The Executive Board was given power to investigate and take "appropriate action" to bring about greatly increased organization in governmental, office and professional, and retail fields.

The Board itself took a broad swipe at hysterical probes conducted in the name of "determining loyalty" of federal employes. It urged that the House Un-American Activities Committee be abolished, that accused government workers be given a full opportunity to clear themselves through use of all constitutional privileges.

It was a victory convention—a convention that made news throughout the world.

Taft-Hartley Repeal Sought

Labor and political writers are still trying to set down on paper their own interpretations of actions taken by the delegates.

They're also trying to determine the meaning of the Nov. 2 vote in terms of what labor can expect from Capitol Hill in the way of legislation.

Days before Murray gaveled the Portland parley to order the "experts" outside the labor movement were pounding away at the idea that unions hadn't really meant what they said about the Taft-Hartley Act.

Then the convention, without quibbling, called for outright repeal of T-H and re-enactment of the Wagner Act.

It was that simple—repeal of Taft-Hartley and re-enactment of the Wagner Act. That was the position all of labor had taken all along.

Today the CIO has one less industrial union council than it had prior to Nov. 24. The Executive Board lifted the charter of the Greater New York Council, found guilty of interfering with the affairs of international unions and of following the CP line.

Convention delegates generally regarded this action as setting a precedent for handling troublesome council situations in other parts of the country.

Yes, a lot of things happened at that convention.

Murray Lays It On Line

Pres. Murray talked tough. From the speakers' platform he charged certain unions had done miserable jobs organizing in the fields in which they were granted jurisdiction.

He asked the delegates to do something about the situation. They did. They instructed the Executive Board to take "appropriate" action. They didn't attempt to limit the Board in the action it should take.

Impact of convention action was felt outside as well as inside the CIO—and nobody could immediately measure its effects.

Washington soon began buzzing with talk of a big, revamped union for federal employes.

Southern employers suddenly lost faith in widely circulated stories that "Operation Dixie" was about to fold up. They began to believe CIO statements that organizers would continue their drive until the South is organized.

Europe, too, knew what was happening in Portland. Thousands of words were "piped" overseas by regular press wires, by radio and by governmental agencies.

The Nov. 2 election, the CIO's firm stand on the Marshall Plan and its attack on Communism were reported as strong "shots in the arm" for trade unionists abroad who are fighting the spread of Red totalitarianism.

Union Meeting For Unionists

It was a union convention devoted largely to the problems of trade unionists. Efforts to get delegates to wander far afield and give a lift to any ism other than unionism were slapped down promptly—and often noisily.

The CIO, encouraged by the Democratic victory in which it participated, was charting a course for the future—a course that required work and a lot of it.

Its keynotes were organization and political action — organization and political action without fancy trimmings.

No elaborate new programs were rolled out for the consideration of the delegates or the general public. Stress—and a lot of it—was placed on the need for CIO unions to practice honest trade unionism and adhere to policies adopted by democratic processes.

"Oh, if my publisher could have been here today! Why, that guy said back in October that the CIO was coming apart at the seams. He knew just about as much about that as he did about the 'sure defeat' of Truman."

And thus it was that an organization pictured by the "experts" as being in the doghouse and growing weak prior to Nov. 2 emerged just 20 days later as a very healthy adult with muscles.

CIO Executive Board Finds

Loyalty Program is 'Irresponsible Witch Hunt'

TWO government institutions which have been under criticism as a threat to civil rights received more and sharper criticism last week from the CIO Executive Board.

In its post-convention meeting at Portland, the Board demanded:

1. Abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

2. Adoption of "specific" rules for procedure for Congressional Committees to prevent the misuse of Congressional power and prevent the maligning and abusing of individuals for "selfish and political ends."

3. Speedy revision of the President's Loyalty Program, affecting millions of government workers and workers in private industry handling classified contracts for the government.

The loyalty program "has degenerated into an irresponsible witch hunt in which the character of federal workers and those employed in private employment on defense contracts has been seriously lowered," the Board said.

The Board's program for correcting abuses in the loyalty program was cited as a "stand-by" measure for short-term use pending successful accomplishment of the convention's demand that the loyalty program be completely discarded.

CRITICISM of the manner in which the loyalty program has worked out contained some of the sharpest language used by the convention.

The resolution charged that the loyalty program has been spurred by "hysterical pressure from a discredited press" and from a "repudiated" House Un-American Activities Committee.

It charged that in its efforts to ferret out the "small number of spies and subversive employes," the program worked to harass the "thousands of conscientious and loyal workers." Probes and charges have been based upon "rumor, gossip, malice and ignorance," the Board declared.

The loyalty program is based on "loose and vague standards," the resolution continued, "and upon theories of guilt by association wholly alien to our American principles." Procedures deny accused persons the "elementary requirements of due process and the most rudimentary protections afforded by our Constitution, even to persons accused of the most trivial of crimes."

The resolution noted that the same "undemocratic and unjust" procedures have been taken over by the armed forces for use among workers in defense industries. Injustices arising from these abuses, it charged, give "aid and comfort to Communist and other totalitarian groups."

CHANGES in the program urged by the CIO called for establishment of "definite and relevant standards for determining disloyalty" and for careful analysis of all evidence.

Accused persons should be given "precise particulars" of charges against them and of the facts on which accusations are based, the Board declared, so that government workers may be able to answer those charges.

It calls for improving the standards of loyalty investigations and the calibre of investigators, so that loyalty probes will be conducted by "trained persons who can distinguish between rumor and fact, and between a liberal social philosophy and disloyalty to our government."

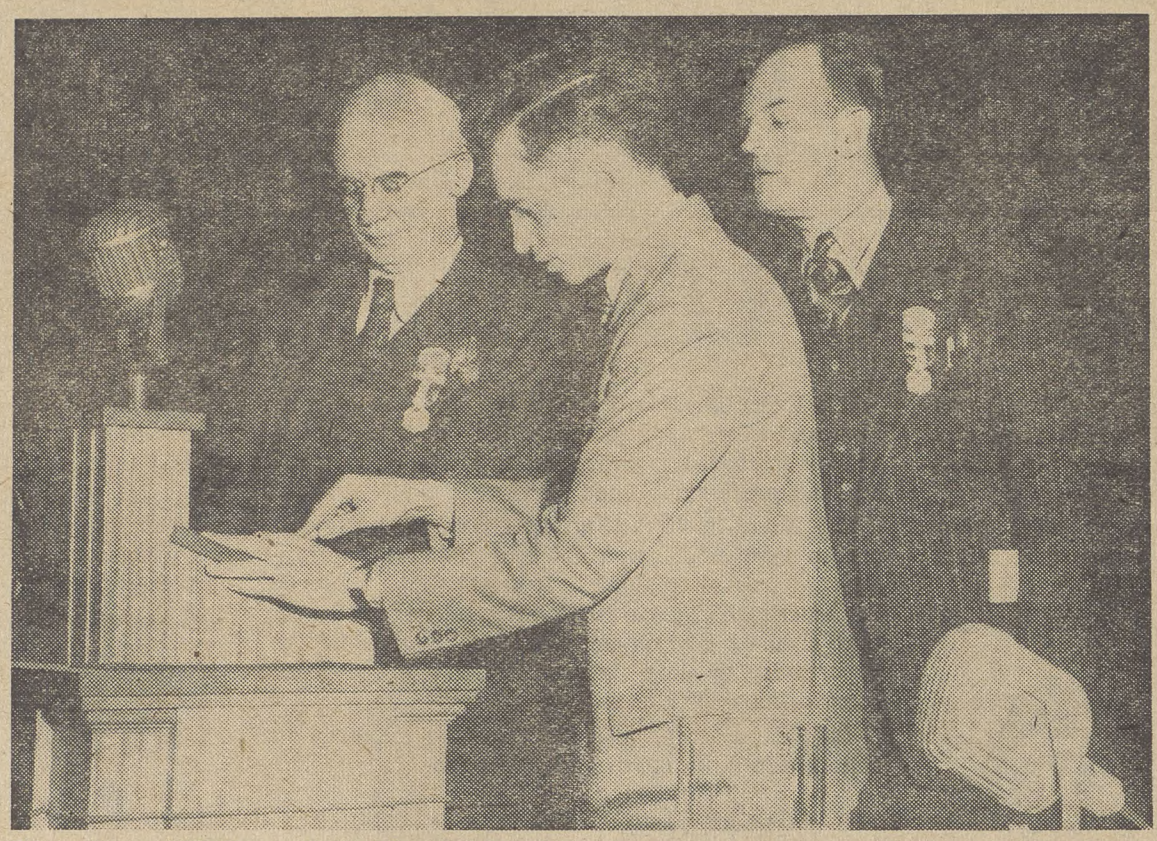
Noting that there has been a widespread snooping campaign in which neighbors and friends of accused persons have been closely questioned, the Board demanded that persons cleared of disloyalty charges should be promptly notified—as well as those questioned in the course of each investigation.

THE resolution demanding abolition of the Un-American Activities Committee is the latest in a series of several years' duration in which the Thomas-Rankin group has been severely criticized.

The Board charged the Committee's history "has been one of consistent misuse of Congressional power for political purposes, of flagrant disregard of the Bill of Rights and due process, and of reckless abuse of individuals who hold more progressive views of government than those of the reactionary chairman of the Committee."

It said the UnAmerican Activities Committee has created "widespread fear and suppression of thought and speech at home." Abroad, the Board declared, the Committee has "discredited" our democratic government and played into the hands of totalitarians.

Continued existence of the Committee will be an "ever-growing threat" to our democratic principles and institutions," the Board warned.



Triple Play: CIO Pres. Philip Murray (l.) listens attentively while Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey (center) explains and NMU Pres. Joseph Curran kibitzes.

Executive Board To Meet Jan. 26

CIO's Executive Board will meet in Washington on Wednesday, Jan. 26, Pres. Murray announced.

The Board meeting will be preceded on Jan. 25 by a meeting of the vice-presidents.

Much of the meeting will be devoted to a discussion of legislative plans, Murray indicated. In addition the Board may examine the farm equipment situation. It recently ordered the Farm Equipment Workers to affiliate with the Auto Workers within 60 days.

Implementation of the convention's resolution for active organizing in unorganized fields—in particular, among store employes, white collar and government workers—also may be discussed at the January meeting.

'Abolish Un-American Group'

FOLLOWING are important sections of the CIO Executive Board Resolution calling for elimination of the House Committee on Un-American Activities:

BE IT RESOLVED:

That the National Executive Board of the CIO calls upon the 81st Congress which has just received a clear mandate from the people for liberal, fair-minded and democratic government to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and

That the Congress prescribe specific rules for the procedure of its investigating committees along the lines of H. R. 4564, introduced into the 80th Congress by Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas to protect the rights of witnesses and persons under investigation by Congressional Committees; and rules to prevent the misuse of Congressional power to malign and abuse persons in order to serve selfish and political ends, and to require members of Congress no less than other people to respect the liberties guaranteed by the same Constitution under which they exercise their powers as legislators.

MMSW Suspension Lifted By CCL

Following retraction of attacks on the Canadian Congress of Laborn, the CCL's Executive Board has lifted suspension of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers from the Canadian labor organization.

Suspension was voted about three months ago following sharp criticism of CCL leaders in the Mine, Mill official organ. The suspension was upheld by a vote of about 90% of the delegates attending the CCL's recent convention.

Since that convention, Mine Mill Pres. John Clark published a statement of retraction and apology in his union's papers and pledged his union's members to "work in harmony and unity with the CCL and its affiliates."

A vigorous campaign by all CIO affiliates to secure pensions, health and welfare benefits through collective bargaining was urged by the CIO convention.

A start—but "only a start"—has already been made in this direction, the resolution commented. Already a number of CIO unions have won such contractual benefits as life insurance, medical, health and disability insurance and hospitalization.

"American industry must make provision for at least part of the cost of the wear, depreciation and aging of its human resources just as it sets aside funds to pay the costs of depreciation, depletion, and replacement of its capital resources . . ."

Five Steps To Improve Loyalty Program Urged

FOLLOWING are major excerpts of the CIO Executive Board resolution calling for improved procedures in the administration of the federal government's loyalty program:

BE IT RESOLVED:

That the National Executive Board of the CIO urges upon the President a complete re-examination of the Administration's loyalty program covering Federal and private employment so that it will provide definite and relevant standards for determining disloyalty and for the careful analysis of the evidence before the issuance of charges which have a serious effect upon the reputation, livelihood and peace of mind of persons accused; and

That (1) the procedure for investigation and hearings should be revised so that accused employes will be given precise particulars of the nature of the charges against them and of the facts upon which they are based, so that they may have a real opportunity to answer them, except that such charges and facts may upon order of the Loyalty Board, be so stated as clearly to establish the character, circumstances and gravity of the accusation while omitting those, and only those, particulars the disclosure of which, in the determination of the Loyalty Board, would constitute a real and present threat to national security; that (2) the standards of investigations and the calibre of investigators be improved so that these important tasks will be performed by trained persons who can distinguish between rumor and fact and between a liberal social philosophy and disloyalty to our Government; that (3) rules of evidence be formulated for loyalty hearings to exclude from consideration gossip and rumor; that (4) those accused be confronted by their accusers and be given the right to cross-examine them, except as to those particulars which have been withheld from disclosure by order of the Loyalty Board for security reasons, and that the Loyalty Boards be given subpoena power to compel the attendance in open court of those who prefer charges against employes; and that (5) employes cleared of charges be given prompt notice thereof and that similar notice be given in such cases to all neighbors, friends and others who are interviewed in the course of investigation —all of this so that our free institutions and our Bill of Rights will not be destroyed in the process of seeking out spies and subversives amongst us.

MERGE WITH UAW, BOARD TELLS FE

A CIO Executive Board directive calling for affiliation of the Farm Equipment Workers with the United Automobile Workers within 60 days will be considered Dec. 15 by the FE's executive board.

FE Pres. Grant Oakes said the meeting, to be held in Chicago, will consider the action of the CIO board, and that a referendum of the union's membership might be suggested.

The CIO board's action was taken at Portland, Oreg., on Nov. 27, a day after the end of the convention.

By a large majority, it ordered the Farm Equipment union to affiliate with the UAW-CIO on a basis "which is organizationally sound, consistent with the structure of industrial unionism and in keeping with the provisions of the constitution of the UAW-CIO."

The Board added that if amalgamation has not been achieved in 60 days, the Board "will act to implement this decision."

At the same time Pres. Murray named a three-man committee to keep an eye on the problem and to report to the CIO board if the merger fails to take place. Named to the investigating committee were Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union and Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

JURISDICTIONAL disputes between the Auto Workers and the Farm Equipment Workers have hampered organization of workers for many years, the Board statement pointed out.

"A continuation of this division can only serve to further penalize these workers and weaken their collective bargaining power by strengthening the resistance of the powerful corporations in whose plants they work," the Board resolution declared.

It recalled that the UAW-CIO had "original jurisdiction" in the field, and that it had done substantial organizing before the Farm Equipment Workers came into existence. A suggestion by the CIO Jurisdictional Committee a few years ago that Farm Equipment affiliate with the UAW-CIO was never carried out.

"Efforts to resolve this problem through direct negotiations between the two organizations failed to eliminate the jurisdictional conflict and the workers in this industry continue to be penalized," the CIO Board statement said.

Pres. Murray said the UAW-CIO has more farm machinery workers now in its ranks than does the FE, whose membership he placed at about 43,000.

The resolution which the Board passed was introduced by Pres. Walter Reuther of the UAW-CIO. It was opposed by Oakes, but passed by a "very substantial majority," Pres. Murray told reporters.

Wyoming Did NOT Vote For Dewey

The CIO News has quite correctly been called to task by Sec.-Treas. W. A. Urban of the Wyoming State CIO Council.

Urban pointed out that the Nov. 8 issue of the CIO News—an issue prepared in a state of post-election hilarity at the CIO News headquarters—listed Wyoming as having voted for Dewey.

Nothing could have been further from the truth.

Wyoming cast 52,000 votes for Truman, to under 48,000 votes for Dewey. Truman's plurality was larger than FDR's in 1944.

The CIO News begs the pardon of its Wyoming readers, gladly makes this correction, and agrees with Sec.-Treas. Urban that the results show that "Dr. Gallup polled the wrong people again."

Pig Iron Record

Production of pig iron hit an alltime monthly U. S. high of 5.5 million tons in October, the American Iron & Steel Institute announced. Output of the basic raw material is considered a measure of general industrial production.

CIO Will Testify In Probe Of Corporations' Big Profits

SPOKESMEN for CIO will testify this month at a Senate committee investigation of the country's huge corporation profits, now running at the rate of over $21 billion a year.

CIO Pres. Murray, Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers and leaders of the AFL have been invited to appear before a sub-committee of the joint Senate-House Committee on the Economic Report. The sub-committee is headed by Sen. Ralph Flanders (R. Vt.), a member of the "liberal wing" of the GOP in Washington.

Hearings were due to open Dec. 6. CIO spokesmen expect to testify about the middle of the month.

Flanders said an effort would be made to get testimony on a "non-partisan" basis which would be helpful to the 81st Congress. The Vermont Senator said the group would try to study corporation case histories, and find where profits come from and where they go.

But the Senator's statement also indicated that some big companies may not be interested in such a scientific study of the biggest profits in the country's history. He admitted there was some doubt whether the committee has the power to force appearance of witnesses, and added that some corporation lawyers had advised their clients not to attend.

"Lawyers are the most rabbit-like people among the human race," Flanders commented. "The higher paid the attorneys, the more timid they are."

The committee's plans call for investigation of the best ways of measuring the rate of profits, the availability of profits for distribution to stockholders, and the question of how profits should best be distributed.

Top Democrat on the sub-committee is Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), a consistent foe of monopoly practices

UAW Says GM Could Lower Prices and Make Good Profit

GENERAL Motors could change its prices down—not up—and still make a handsome profit, a United Automobile Workers official charged last week.

Commenting on recent GM announcements of price boosts on Buicks and Oldsmobiles, Director T. A. Johnstone of the Auto Union's GM Dept. declared:

"General Motors Corp. could reduce its car prices by 15.4% and still make a profit after taxes at the annual rate of 8% on the investment.

"The 1948 wage increase and the cost-of-living adjustment in the union contract cannot serve as legitimate excuse for any prices increases of GM cars and trucks."

The UAW official said the union figures that GM's profits—over a million dollars a day, net—are a return of more than 30% a year on the firm's invested capital. GM bigwigs, however, prefer to compare profits to sales, and thus bring the percentage down to 9 or 10%.

(Return on investment, not on sales, is the standard measure of a company's profit-making ability, in the eyes of the federal government and of business accountants.)

O'MAHONEY, emerging from a conference with Pres. Truman last week, predicted passage of a tougher anti-trust law by the 81st Congress. He will re-introduce a measure ignored by the last Congress which would block mergers of companies on the basis that one buys out all the physical assets of the other.

That practice has been carried on in recent years because of a serious gap in present language of the anti-trust law, O'Mahoney said. At present, it's difficult for one company to acquire the stock—and therefore, the control—of another firm. But there's little to prevent a firm from buying up all its rival's assets—and thereby securing a practical, if not theoretical, merger.

The O'Mahoney proposal was killed last year in the House Rules Committee, but the Wyoming Senator predicted "there is no graveyard awaiting it in the 81st Congress."

Meanwhile Sen. Flanders and his New England sidekick—Sen. Charles Tobey (R. N.H.)—promised they would give full support to a Democratic housing bill that would provide for slum clearance, low cost housing in farm areas, and federal aid for low-rent homes in the cities.

Both Flanders and Tobey supported the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill in the 80th Congress, and both were in frequent conflict with the real estate lobby throughout the last session.

Open Health Drive

American workers lose $500 million annually in wages because of the great cripplers, arthritis and rheumatism, it was disclosed at New York City. Seeking to raise "the modest sum of $2 million by Dec. 11 to provide the answer to the challenge of these dual destroyers," the Arthritis & Rheumatism Foundation will use the funds to make a nationwide attack on the dreaded disease.

TWO BIG JOBS AHEAD

Delegates to the recent CIO convention, being human, patted each other on the back a bit as a result of the important role labor played in the November elections.

But they didn't expend an excess amount of time and energy discussing things which occurred in the past. Instead, they devoted themselves largely to the work CIO has cut out for the future.

They placed major emphasis on two subjects—organizing and political action.

Machinery designed to carry out both jobs in the future more effectively than in the past was provided.

Two-thirds of the 3c per capita increase will go to the CIO Organizing Committee, which is conducting the Southern membership drive. A portion of the remaining cent will go to general organizing.

The CIO Executive Board was authorized to "investigate" and take "appropriate action" in dealing with unions which have "failed to make substantial progress" in organizing the fields over which they have jurisdiction.

A firm path for PAC in the 1950 and 1952 elections was charted. And the CIO legislative set-up was strengthened by creation of a legislative committee composed of the CIO executive officers and vice presidents.

BLUNT WARNING TO SOME GROUPS

CIO Pres. Murray, without mincing words, said unions which are "unable to demonstrate their fitness to organize the unorganized in their industries" should submit their problems to the Executive Board.

Delegates, firmly backing Murray's position, then empowered the Board to take whatever action it deems "appropriate and necessary" to bring about effective organization within the jurisdiction of affiliates involved.

This provided a blunt warning to unions operating in the governmental, office and professional, and retail fields.

The per capita increase assured continuation of the Southern organizing drive on a firmer financial footing than in the past—and it served warning on union-hating Dixie industrialists that there will be no let-up in the CIO campaign to unionize the South.

LEGISLATION NOT ENACTED

Delegates gave full recognition to the fact that a lot of work must be done if the program approved by the Democratic convention and advocated by President Truman during his campaign is to be enacted into law.

So it's well to begin thinking now about the legislative campaign that starts next January.

And it's time to begin thinking, too, about the 1950 and 1952 elections.

There will be no let-up in the activities of those who supported the viewpoint of the Awful 80th Congress. There must be no let-up in the activity of those who retired a large number of members of the 80th to private life.

There are some others who should be retired.

Topping the list of things which the CIO would like for the new Congress to do first is to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and restore the Wagner Act.

The hateful T-H law has become more than a bad measure to trade unionists. It has become a symbol of the NAMish thinking against which voters rebelled on Nov. 2.

Give The Commies The Boot!

Must Be Prevented From Using Trade Unions To Carry Out Red Policies

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE CIO has taken a firm stand on that crackpot, vacillating ideology known as Communism.

Philip Murray denounced the Reds time and again during the recent CIO convention at Portland. Each denunciation brought cheers from all but a handful of delegates.

The left-wingers got their ears pinned back every time they stuck their necks out. No party line proposals were approved by the convention.

It was a complete rout for the Commies.

But there's still a lot of work to be done on the ideological front.

IT'S time for every trade unionist in the country to take a good, clear look at the Commies, the lads who try to create chaos out of confusion.

The record is clear—and it's not difficult to read.

Reds infiltrated the labor movement not to advance the cause of straight trade unionism but to use the union structure for their own purposes if they could.

During World War II their purposes were parallel to those of patriotic Americans who believe in democracy. While the U.S. and Russia were military allies, the Commies in this country behaved like super patriots.

With the end of armed conflict came a period which should have brought peace but didn't.

And early in this period the Reds in the U.S. began to reveal themselves for what they really are.

THE KREMLIN opposed the Marshall Plan, designed to help build a democratic, prosperous Europe. The domestic Commies opposed it, too.

The Reds wholeheartedly supported Henry Wallace although they knew a strong Wallace movement could result only in the election of Thomas E. Dewey and a reactionary Congress.

Philip Murray, who became the "darling" of the Commies after Germany attacked Russia, was bitterly denounced by the party-liners after Russia began its post-war campaign to dominate the world.

The Reds, although they have long pictured themselves as great friends of trade unions, strongly opposed nearly every important policy adopted by the CIO and other branches of the labor movement since the war ended.

Their disruptive tactics, their lying and their smearing have caused great damage to some unions and council groups.

THERE is no room in the CIO for the type of witch-hunt which the House Un-American Activities Committee conducted.

There is no room for Red-baiting, if by Red-baiting you mean hurling the false charge of Communism at persons who are not Communists.

There is no need for a hysterical approach to the problem.

But there is a need—a pressing need—for taking whatever action may be required to keep the Commies from using unions to advance the party line.

The task should not be too difficult. The Reds have little real strength and they have been thoroughly discredited.

THOSE who tackle the job of pinning back Red ears should have no illusions about what may happen to them.

The Commies are well trained in the use of the smear, the half-truth, the outright lie. Most of them are expert character assassins.

They play rough. They know most of the tricks. They operate on the theory that the ends justify the means.

Their own tactics condemn them. Their ideology makes them undesirable. Their allegiance makes them dangerous.

The things they stand for make their removal from the trade union scene necessary.

And there's nothing wrong with baiting Reds!

Tells Labor's Part In Welfare Groups

LESS than a hundred CIO representatives were on the boards of the many thousands of voluntary social welfare and health agencies in the nation in 1941.

Today the number has increased a hundredfold, states Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union in a leaflet on "The CIO and the Community," issued by the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

"Never before in the history of our country has so sharp a change taken place in the composition of the boards of Community agencies," Rieve states.

"Never before has a new group been brought into participation so quickly and so completely."

Although unions still must spend most of their time and energy dealing with wages, hours and working conditions today, as they did before the New Deal, they have come to realize more and more "the important role that voluntary agencies can play in building better communities—and thus in helping workers achieve a better life," Rieve says.

"Today organized labor wants unionized communities to be different from others because they are better ones in which to live, not only because there is a union hall on Main Street.

"Therefore, we in the labor movement are beginning to recognize that our efforts must be integrated into the total community effort, and not separated from it. We cannot do the job alone."

Copies of the leaflet, a reprint of an article printed in The Survey magazine, may be obtained from the National CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

Fisk Univ. Issues Quiz for Unionists

A double-headed quiz posing a series of questions to the individual trade unionist has been issued in leaflet form by the American Missionary Association's Race Relations Dept. at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

The questions are listed under two heads:

What is the union worth to you? What are you worth to the union?

Aimed to help unionists measure union democracy—and their value to it, the quiz form asks such questions under the first heading as: Can you vote for union officials? Are the union's regular meetings open to all? Can you hold office?

Under the second heading its asks: Do you pay your union dues on time? Do you go to your union meetings? and ten other similar questions.

"The more questions you can answer 'yes' the better your union and you," states the leaflet.

Called His Shots Long Way In Advance

THIS is a story that begins in a bar in Atlantic City and ends in a press room in Portland.

It's a story about a newspaper reporter who stuck his neck out and then waited two years to see the last of his predictions come true.

There were many times during those two years when the reporter wondered if he hadn't climbed too far out on the limb.

Then something would happen to give him new faith in his prognosticating.

BACK in 1946 a small group of news men and a CIO representative sat in a hotel bar in Atlantic City, discussing events that had taken place that day at the CIO convention.

The conversation soon swung around to the "resent and reject" resolution on Communism which the convention had adopted.

"Ah, that resolution doesn't mean a thing!" declared one of the reporters. "It was passed just for the record. Nothing's going to be done about it."

The CIO representative disagreed. He said that a "good reporter" would do a bit of digging behind the scenes, find out what was going on and write a "real story" about what was coming up in the future.

ALL of the reporters but one kidded the CIO man about his viewpoint. The lone exception—a union officer himself—began asking pointed questions.

What was coming up next? Where would the Commies get kicked in the shins first? What procedures would be followed?

He wanted to know how and when and where. He checked and double-checked. He talked with a lot of union officials.

Then he sat down in front of his typewriter and wrote out for his paper a long-range prediction on the left-right struggle in the CIO.

He really climbed out on a limb because he used specific—not vague—terms in outlining what he expected to happen.

TIME passed and the things the reporter predicted would happen began happening—to his delight.

Leadership of various industrial union councils changed—as he predicted they would. The same thing happened in various unions.

Then, a few weeks ago, the reporter packed his bag and headed for Portland to cover the CIO convention.

Would the convention, he wondered, provide him with the "pay-off"? Would Philip Murray go as far as he expected him to? Would the delegates support Murray if he did?

TWO days before the convention opened, the CIO Executive Board lifted the charter of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

Early in the convention Murray loaded his verbal gun with buckshot and let fly with both barrels at the Commies.

Delegates cheered when the CIO president denounced the Reds and declared he did not intend to permit "Communist infiltration into the national CIO movement."

The reporter sat at the press table and took notes rapidly. Then he dashed into the press room to pound out a story.

THE CIO representative who helped start the reporter on his long-range prediction in Atlantic City walked into the press room at Portland.

Grinning from ear to ear, he shook hands with the reporter, who wore a similar grin.

"Well, this did it—this carried out the last part of my prediction," said the reporter, Kenneth Crouse, of the St. Paul Pioneer Press-Dispatch, former vice president of the Newspaper Guild.

And as he wrote his story he looked a bit like a cat who has just swallowed a mouse.

JOE GETS THE POINT

Japan Can't Ever Dominate Cotton Trade

By KENNETH DOUTY

BEFORE the war, Japan dominated the world's cotton textile trade. Despite transportation costs and tariff charges, Japan could sell textiles cheaper in New York than they could be made in America.

TWUA members don't need to be told what that meant—loss of export trade, severe competition on the domestic market, short time or unemployment in an already overexpanded industry.

The war changed all that for the American industry. Foreign competition was cut off; domestic and military demand was greatly raised. America further had to supply the needs of the rest of the world, because it had the only major textile industry not affected by the war.

Exports became important and continued to be. In 1947, approximately 1½ billion yards of fabric were exported, about 14% of American production.

Now Japanese cotton textiles are coming again into U. S. home markets. Imports for the first half of 1948 stand at nearly eight million pounds of yarn and 63 million square yards of fabric. Although this will increase, it is unlikely that Japan will ever again become the competitor she was in pre-war days.

To see how a nation deliberately commits economic hari-kiri in an effort to gain military domination, you have only to look at what Japan did to her textile industry. In 1937, there were approximately 12 million spindles in place and nine million operating.

At the end of the war, there were approximately 2½ million in place and little better than a million operable. A relatively small part of this was due to war damage; the major portion to a systematic scrapping program to feed Japan's war industries with needed scrap.

Word About Author

Kenneth Douty, state director of the CIO Textile Workers in Georgia, is at present in Japan on special assignment from the Army. In this article written for his union, Douty explains how strict control and better conditions have lessened the competitive advantage the Japanese textile industry held before the war.

THE scrapping began in 1942 when the companies were given a quota for scrapping and machines were designated, broken up on the premises and shipped to the metal industries.

Thus, in her gamble for military glory, Japan wrecked the cornerstone of her economy and export trade.

Today more than three million spindles are operable with four million being set by the occupation authorities as an interim maximum.

When I visited the Nishiwaki area, where 75% of the fabrics for export are woven, only a third of the pre-war looms were operating. Because its equipment was among the newest in Japan before the war, it had suffered less scrapping and had escaped bombing. In Osaka, the spinning center, whole areas were pointed out to me as sites of former mills, now mostly rubble.

According to experts, Japan has little more equipment today than what she requires to take care of her domestic needs. However, to pay for raw cotton, all of which she must import, approximately 60% of her production must be exported.

The effect can be seen in the clothing of the Japanese people, which in general varies from rags to clothing at least four or five years old. The effect can also be seen in black market prices.

The cotton industry today is strictly regulated, with spinning mills operating on a rate fixed by the government for processing government-owned cotton. The yarn is then allocated and fabric reserved for domestic supply rationed to the public.

ANOTHER factor limiting Japan's competition with American industry as compared to pre-war, is the rise in wages and working standards under the new labor laws. Pre-war, the workers averaged 24 yen a month, worked 10 hours a day with every other Sunday off. Today, an eight-hour, six-day week is in effect and the average wage is approximately 2,700 yen a month (only $10 at the current rate of exchange in Japan).

Although the workers who live in company dormitories must pay 500 yen a month for food, we were told at one of the large Osaka mills that this is only about one-half of what the food costs the companies. In addition, the dormitory space is supplied free to the workers.

After describing the lower work loads in Japanese mills, the continual turnover, the training workers must be given and other problems the textile industry must face, Douty concludes:

The impression is inescapable that although the nature of Japan's economy will continue to make her a factor in export trade, she can never regain her pre-war position.

Plenty To Write About —No Sessions Were Dull

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THAT press room was like a mad-house, but that didn't seem to bother anybody except the visitors who dropped in to see what was causing all the rush and noise.

More than 125 reporters and photographers covering the Portland CIO convention — and a dozen or more messenger boys—ran helter-skelter in and out of the place.

Men and women pounded out hundreds of thousands of words of news copy for papers from London to Tokio. Reporters shouted at each other. The loudspeaker blared.

Convention coverage, measured in terms of words written, probably was the heaviest in CIO history. Western Union reported the press file for convention week was the largest ever handled in the Northwest.

Many reports on convention activities were carried by the radio networks. Special recordings were made by the Voice of America for overseas broadcast.

THE Portland newspapers—the Oregonian and the Journal—devoted many columns of space to the convention itself and to interviews with union leaders.

Reporters from the East had difficulty meeting deadlines because the convention operated on Pacific Time and their papers went to press on Eastern Time schedules.

But there was plenty to write about because there were no dull sessions.

In the midst of the delightful confusion my staff and I put out the Portland convention issue of the CIO News by remote control.

We hired a photographer we'd never seen before we arrived in Oregon. We told him to take a lot of pictures of interesting things. He did.

LATE at night and early in the morning we put news copy and photographs on Washington-bound planes and hoped they would be delivered to our printer in the Capital without delay.

Soon after the convention closed, three members of the staff grabbed a plane for Washington—and within a few hours began putting a newspaper together with material prepared day-by-day at Portland.

Before long we learned we had too much material—too many photographs. The "rules" say you're supposed to throw such material away if you can't put it in the edition for which it is planned.

We decided to ignore the "rules" and use the material anyhow.

In the adjoining column is a picture of Harry Martin, president of the Newspaper Guild, who flew from Budapest to Portland —8,000 miles—so he could tell delegates about operation of the Marshall Plan in Europe. Martin's on the Economic Cooperation Administration staff, with headquarters in Paris.

At bottom-left, George Guernsey, assistant CIO education director, Philip Lerman of the Auto Workers education department and Paul Jacobs of Labor Press Associates are shown examining a convention exhibit.

Oriental Style

Dick Deverall, covering the convention for Japanese papers, sometimes wrote his notes from left to right of the page—as most reporters do.

Occasionally, however, he worked from the top to the bottom of the page. A curious woman reporter noted his unusual scribbling and asked about it.

"Oh, that's just Japanese shorthand," Deverall replied.

Fun at Portland Ad Club

WHEN CIO Secy-Treas. James Carey and Publicity Director Allan Swim were invited to talk at a luncheon meeting of the Oregon Advertising Club during the CIO convention, they got some free laughs along with their food for their trouble.

Following a talk given by the regional manager of the Pan-American Airlines, the chairman introduced the CIO'ers as speakers "for the people who can't take off for Honolulu any time they like."

He mentioned that one of the ladies present had said she was "a black-hearted Republican and proud of it," and told a joke about members of the Arlington Club (swanky hang-out for Portland's rich men close to the hall where the CIO convention met) who sat in their frayed trousers watching labor leaders in custom-made shirts and expensive tailored suits climb out of taxis in front of the CIO convention hall.

"Those of us who read Westbrook Pegler and listen to Fulton Lewis on the radio thought the revolution had arrived when the CIO came to town," he joked.

"I'm not a black Republican, my shirt cost $3.95 and it's union-made," were Swim's opening words as he arose to introduce Jim Carey who was the main speaker at the luncheon.

Carey had a little fun with the ad club members by taking some pokes at Pegler, who, he said, was trying to make the public believe that the labor movement "was honey-combed with racketeers." In the main part of his talk, Carey told of his trips to Europe where he had been "trying to sell democracy," explained the CIO's anti-communist drive, and outlined some of CIO's fundamental policies.

The club members gave him hearty and prolonged applause and many gathered around him later to ask questions and express their friendliness.

State Labor and Union Officials Say:

BIG AND LITTLE T-H's RESTORE 'JUNGLE LAW'

SLASHING criticism of the Taft-Hartley Act and of all the little Taft-Hartleys spawned in state legislatures throughout the country was voiced last week by 141 delegates to the Labor Dept.'s annual Conference on Labor Legislation.

The delegates — state labor commissioners and representatives of unions from each state —demanded T-H repeal and removal of all "state legislation detrimental to the rights of organized workers."

Chas. C. Webber

"We favor the federal government exercising its powers in the field of labor relations by enacting a just structure of federal labor relations law in the spirit of the Wagner Act," a report adopted by the conference declared.

Anti-labor laws are on the books of about 40 of the states, and the delegates made it clear they should be removed in toto when the great majority of legislatures convene early next year.

This legislation—both the national T-H and the state baby T-H statutes—"wipes out traditions and customs that have prevailed for many years, in that it denies to the workers the right to enter into union shop agreements with their employers, and further denies them other civil liberties," the statement declared.

"Many workers are thus denied the right of collective bargaining," it added.

"In addition, government by injunction has been restored and the employer permitted to practice intimidation, engage in espionage, and, in short, return to the old law of the jungle that prevailed prior to the enactment of legislation guaranteeing the workers the right to organize and bargain collectively."

THE 141 delegates were selected by governors in each of the states. Seventy are state government officials, and the remaining 71 were selected from the unions—CIO, AFL and independent—in the various states.

Some differences between CIO and AFL delegates showed up when discussion turned to legislation to take the place of Taft-Hartley.

Miss Lucy Randolph Mason, peppery CIO public relations representative in the South, urged that the resolution call for restoration of the Wagner Act as the law of the land. But Walter Mason (no relative), an AFL official, said the AFL had always favored amendment of the Wagner Act to strengthen the status of craft unions.

Eventually, broad language about the desirability of a law "in the spirit" of the Wagner Act was adopted.

Statements from CIO state officials indicated that the last election has given new hope for the repeal of many, if not all, of the anti-labor statutes added to the law books in recent years.

Frank Benti, president of the Rhode Island CIO, said "we tied up the state senate in the last election and picked up a dozen delegates in the House, including two of our own CIO men. We figure we have a 69-34 majority in the House. Labor holds the balance of power in Rhode Island."

Lucy Mason

In Minnesota, said Joseph Prifrel of the state CIO, we "picked up 19 new supporters in the election, and we can now count on over 66 votes in the legislature, enough to win our objectives."

From Virginia, State CIO Pres. Charles Webber said labor "has set its sights on a whole lot."

Webber offered proof that unions in the various states are no longer content with words and promises, but demand action to improve labor statutes.

John Hall, Jr., Virginia labor commissioner and closely tied to the conservative Byrd machine, had told the delegates that child labor laws in the Old Dominion are just fine.

When he finished, Webber arose and said:

"You've heard what the state secretary has said, but now I'm going to tell you the truth about our anti-labor laws."

He listed a batch of anti-labor laws placed on the Virginia statute books, and he was cheered when he pledged the state CIO to go after their repeal.

Numerous states have bans on union security; a number restrict the dues check-off; union picketing is sharply limited in more than a dozen; many regulate every phase of strike activity; and public utilities receive special protection in a sizeable group of the larger states.

REPORTS of a number of special committees called for forward - looking state legislation on issues of concern to workers..

Tom Downs

A committee on child labor, headed by Tom Downs of the Michigan State CIO, called on all community groups to protect the welfare of "our growing citizens." It called for a 16-year-old floor on hiring during school hours or in manufacturing, mechanical and processing plants, and a 14-year limit for other work in non-school hours. The resolution said that farm labor for children under 16 should be banned, except for work on their family's own farm.

Jack Brock of the Alabama AFL said any broad farm exemption — except for family-farm work—would mean that "big farmers make money from the work of children, who should be in school.

But state labor commissioners from Mississippi and Georgia pictured farm employment as a utopia for school age boys and girls, on the basis that their families need extra money—though they did not argue for higher wages to provide sufficient family incomes without such child labor.

Other committees recommended creation of state bureaus of labor statistics; establishment of a $1 wage-hour minimum for all workers—whether or not they are employed in interstate commerce; quickly improved safety and health programs, with larger inspection staffs, good safety codes, and federal funds to promote health and safety standards; and major improvements in workmen's compensation laws.

LABOR SECY. MAURICE J. TOBIN

Opening the 15th annual conference on labor legislation, the cabinet officer charged that some state labor laws are "worse than Taft-Hartley." The conference is sponsored by the Labor Dept.

SEC. of Labor Maurice Tobin, opening the three-day session, reminded the labor delegates that "you have been literally fighting with your backs to the wall but the tide of battle has turned."

Tobin said the Administration is committed to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, and it wants a strengthened department "in which all Federal labor laws are administered."

"I want a department that will be what Sam Gompers wanted it to be," Tobin continued, "labor's voice in the President's council."

Frances Perkins, former secretary of labor who initiated the annual confabs 15 years ago, urged labor to work not only in its own interest but for the general welfare.

Introduced as a public official of "great vision," Miss Perkins said "the 80th Congress is over, and presumably the state of mind that accompanied it will be silent for a while." She praised the "magnificent" proposals adopted by the conference, and recalled that the first such meeting in 1933 had prepared the way for much federal legislation adopted under the New Deal.

The civil rights issue was brought before the meeting by Harry Kranz of the New Jersey CIO. He urged that the delegates spur passage of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, and called for state civil rights statutes. The proposal, strongly supported by the CIO representatives from several southern states, was opposed by the Georgia state labor commissioner. The proposal was defeated, 23-21.

N.Y.C. CIO Body Surrenders Office

The Greater New York CIO Council, found guilty by the CIO Executive Board of a variety of violations of CIO rules and policy, formally passed out of existence on Nov. 29.

Its headquarters and physical property were turned over to Morris Iushewitz, research director for the state CIO. He was acting for Pres. Louis Hollander, who had been designated by CIO Pres. Murray to wind up the affairs of the city-group.

It is expected that a new city body, free of left-wing control, will be set up within the next few months. Hollander has announced he expects the new council to have a membership of over 500,000.

FROM KEYSTONE STATE: Joseph E. Cohen, director of the labor legislation bureau (r), and Harry Block, secretary, both of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, at the 15th annual conference on labor legislation. The annual conference was attended not only by CIO and AFL representatives from various states, but also by state labor department officials.

2nd Mass Picketing Rule Likely

ANOTHER interpretation of the Taft-Hartley's ban on "mass picketing" was offered last week by a Labor Board trial examiner, and the Board itself will soon have to choose among several theories offered by its staff in recent cases.

Last week's ruling—by Charles Schneider, a trial examiner — held that the CIO Electrical Workers was not violating the law when a large number of workers picketed peacefully at the Bucyrus-Erie plant in Evansville, Ind.

The NLRB had ruled in a case involving the CIO Longshoremen and the Sunset Line & Twine Co., Petula, Calif., that mass picketing is not only illegal, but that international and local unions are responsible for "illegal strike' activities.

New Rule Issued On Election Timing

A union may ask for a Labor Board collective bargaining election before it has formally requested recognition from the employer, the NLRB has ruled.

The NLRB ruling reversed an earlier decision which had held that the union must make the formal demand for recognition before coming to the Board to ask an election.

The union threw a picket line around the property when it struck for higher wages at the Bucyrus-Erie plant. AFL construction workers, employed on an addition to the plant, walked off the job when the pickets appeared.

The company charged the UE with illegally conducting a secondary boycott—banned by T-H—and with illegally coercing the AFL unionists through mass picketing. The NLRB trial examiner threw out both charges. If the company appeals, the intermediate decision will be reviewed by the full NLRB.

In October, another NLRB examiner—Irving Rogosin — held that any picketing by large numbers of workers, even if done without hint of violence, was in violation of T-H.

REINSTATED: Eight employes of the Armour & Co. plant at South Omaha, Neb., who were discharged by the company at the result of the CIO Packinghouse Workers' strike, return to their jobs. Out since last March 16, the employes won back their jobs through negotiations conducted with the company by their union. Three were beyond camera range.

Foster Launches Forestry Program

ELLERY Foster, the tall, lean research director of the CIO International Woodworkers of America for the past few years, has resigned his job with the union to devote his full time to launching a new program which he calls "Task Force to put Forestry into the Forests."

The plan calls for the formation of an organization of volunteers with membership open to any organization or individual interested.

FOSTER

"The task of TF-FIF," says Foster, "is to educate the public and especially the politicians to do what it takes to put real forestry into the forests, and to get the politicians to abandon old bureaucratic forestry schemes which really are not forestry at all."

Foster, who looks from head to toe just what he is, a professional forester, has served as State Forester in Minnesota—where he was born—and was also with the Federal Forest Service for a number of years.

The program which he plans to direct from headquarters in his home, follows closely the policies of the IWA as outlined in resolutions adopted at the union's recent convention. The IWA has a membership of some 100,000 workers in logging, sawmills, plywood and related wood industry operations, spread from Florida to Alaska in the major timber regions of the U. S. and Canada.

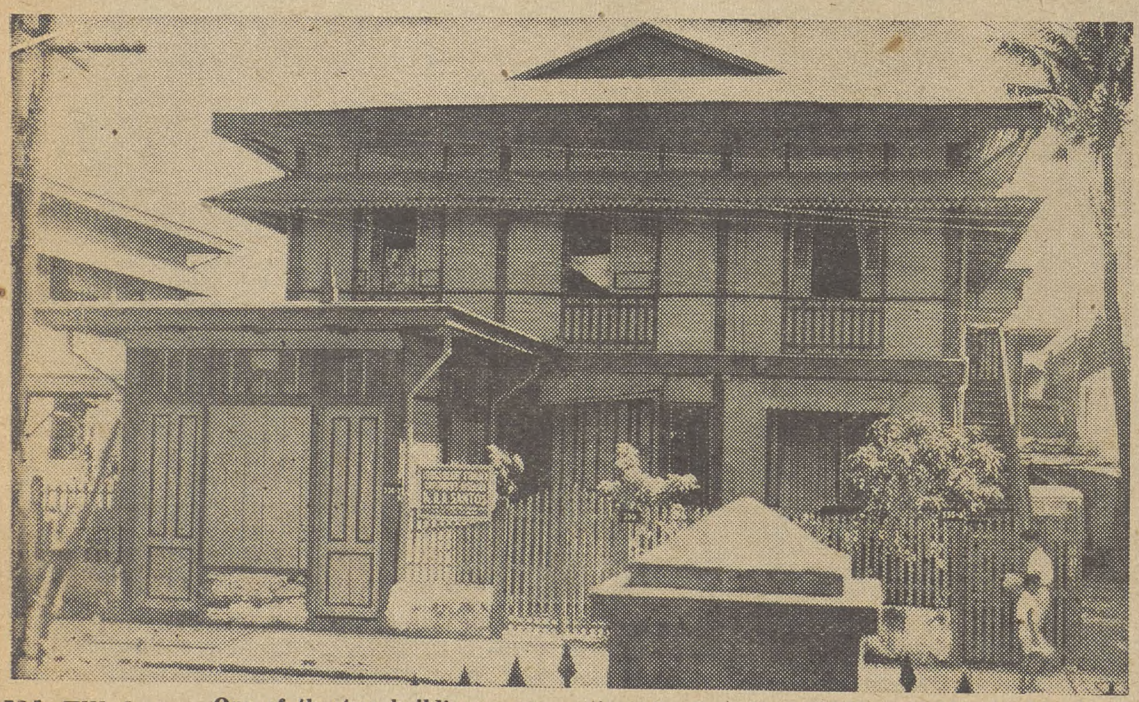
These call for scientific forest conservation; an end to the waste of timber through a system of integrated logging and manufacturing; utilization of waste wood; preservation of virgin forests; forest fire protection; reforestation and other steps to protect the country's wood resources.

The TF-FIF project opposes "monopolistic, special privilege forestry schemes," says Foster, and aims to do away with "the wasteful logging system which now prevails almost everywhere."

The first part of the program proposes that a complete system of logging roads be developed immediately, that a plan for the current inventory and selection of trees for logging by trained foresters be set up and that the sale of such trees for logging by private operators be on the basis of equal opportunity.

The second part deals with the management of private forests and offers a plan for assistance and incentives, including low-cost credit, conservation payments and technical assistance.

"Real forestry," Foster says, "is a sort of magic. It is something like learning how to have your cake and eat it, too. Anyway, it's a way to preserve forests for watershed protection, scenery and recreation, and at the same time harvest lots of logs and grow lots of game."



Aid Filipinos: One of the two buildings purchased by the Philippine Labor Service, Inc., to house the National Labor Organization's headquarters and the PHILAS health clinics. The CIO Community Services Committee and the AFL have contributed $80,000 each to PHILAS.

N. Y. Official Says

Lower Milk Prices Won't End Profits

MILK prices could be cut 4c a quart in New York and the milk trust would still make "handsome profits," a city official charged last week.

John M. Murtagh, city commissioner of investigation, has accused the city's big three—Sheffield, Borden and Dairymen's League—of monopoly and price fixing. He said all three firms had agreed to cut prices by 2c a quart on December 1 as a result of the city's spotlight of publicity on milk practices.

But, Murtagh said, the price cut merely matches a similar price cut passed along to the dairy farmers, and the distributors preserved their own share of the consumers' money.

He called on the companies to match the farmer penny for penny and give the consumer a 4c reduction during the first three months of 1949, and an additional 2c cut in April and May.

The city official said he was continuing an investigation to see if the firms were holding back on sales and promotion of dry skimmed milk. This dried milk, selling at 32c a pound, can be mixed with water to make skimmed milk at a cost of 6c a quart.

Portal Pay Hit

For the second successive time the U. S. Supreme Court upheld provisions of the portal-to-portal law which was passed through special interest group pressure in the 80th Congress. The law took away $6 billion in back pay from U. S. Workers.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

A. T. Stephens, Dir. of Org. UPWA reports the following elections recently won: Elk City Cotton Oil Co. in Elk City, Okla. 40 for UPWA and 30 for no union; Birmingham, Ala. the Wilson Branch House, 38 for UPWA and 7 for no union; Jersey City Armour, 271 for UPWA and 52 for AFL; Tifton, Ga. the Armour employes, 248 for UPWA and 29 AFL; Wilson employes in Los Angeles, Calif., 353 for UPWA and 167 for no union; Armour (bricklayers) St. Paul, Minn. voted 3 for UPWA and 2 for AFL.

Martin Gerber, Dir. UAW, CIO Region 9 reports that in an NLRB election conducted among the employes of the General Motors Corp., G.M.C. Truck & Coach Div., Hillside, N. J., the 30 employes voted for UAW. There was no dissenting vote.

George Brown, Dir. of Org. IWA reports that in the Mengel plants in Louisville, Ky. the workers voted 995 in favor of a union shop to 173 against such a contract.

Delmond Garst, Regional Dir. in St. Louis, Mo. reports the following union shop election conducted by the NLRB: the St. Louis Cordage Mills 191 for union shop; and 20 against, out of 223 eligible votes.

The CIO Convention in Portland, Ore. heard addresses from a number of people including Senator Wayne Morse, Oregon, and William O. Douglas, U. S. Supreme Court Justice.

The Convention in the main was happy over the election results and was determined to bring about the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and start labor moving forward again in an unprecedented style.

For those unions that have not made the successes expected of them, the Convention authorized the Executive Board to look into such situations and make specific provisions to bring about greater organization.

These organizational activities will take place in every part of the country, and to accomplish this aim, the Convention increased the per capita tax. Our legislative program for the repeal of vicious anti-labor acts both, federal and state, has been unanimously adopted.

STOCKHOLDERS SUE HEAD OF OIL FIRM

THE man who bit the dog and made news became commonplace in Los Angeles, Calif., when 25 oil company stockholders sued their president for failing to bargain in good faith with the striking CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union.

Suit was filed against Reece H. Taylor and other board members of the Union Oil Co., only one of six major California petroleum firms struck early last October by the OWIU that has not yet negotiated a settlement.

The stockholders asked damages amounting to $200,000 a day from Oct. 2, when the strike began. As of Dec. 2 these damages totaled approximately $12,200,000.

Asking return of these damages, which it said were suffered by the stockholders, the suit declares that Taylor "dominated" the board of directors and spent large sums to exercise his "personal bias" and prolong the strike of the firm's 2,200 employes.

The plaintiffs, who said they acted on behalf of themselves and all other stockholders, charged that Taylor and other company officials "recklessly provoked prolongation of the strike by refusing to bargain in good faith."

THEIR suit further charged the defendants with "intimidating, coercing, threatening and discriminating against employes so they would forego their right to self-organization and collective bargaining."

All this, the suit stated, was "contrary to law, public policy and ordinary business prudence and judgement," and brought loss of goodwill and boycotts as well as the six-figure daily losses.

Advised of the action, Taylor said. "There is no foundation or truth in any of the charges. We have at no time refused to bargain and we are not refusing to bargain now."

Oil workers thought differently, however, and said so—in thousands of leaflets which they passed out in front of the Hall of Records, where the damage suit was filed, and throughout the rest of the downtown area.

"Club 'em down, they're just working people," the leaflets were headed. They denounced Taylor as a "notorious, labor-hating president" whose campaign of vengeance" against the union with which he refuses to settle is "wrecking the economic and civil life" of the five California cities in which his plants are located.

ONLY ONE HOLDOUT: These are a few of the hundreds of CIO Oil Workers and Longshoremen who picketed the Wilmington, Calif., refinery of the Union Oil Co. That firm is the only one that has failed to reach an agreement with the CIO Oil Workers.

What Price Competition In Video?

"TELEVISION is a blue chip game. Pikers might as well get out NOW."

Thus did Sidney Strotz, Natl. Broadcasting Co. vice president, sum up the video situation in a recent candid interview with a reporter for Variety, the show business magazine.

This was Strotz's way of saying that Radio Corp. of America, American Telephone and Telegraph Co. and their banker-owners are the only ones who can afford to be in the television business.

RCA controls 24 of the 32 basic television patents. AT&T has an absolute monopoly on all coaxial cables over which television programs are carried. Television equipment and production are enormously more expensive than old-fashioned radio.

There is still an opportunity, limited to be sure, for an organization of small means, such as a union, to start a radio station. But if such a small operator, with limited capital, thinks he can plunge into television, he may well ponder the fact that one television camera alone costs as much as the full equipment of a 250-watt radio station—something in the neighborhood of $25,000.

EVEN NBC, the richest of the radio-television outfits, admits it is losing more than $5,000 a week on TV. Of course, NBC has the "blue chips." More than that, much of the "loss" goes to RCA, which owns NBC as a subsidiary, and to AT&T, which is allied with RCA as a J. P. Morgan interest.

Television men estimate that any given TV show will cost five times as much as a similar radio show.

A simple example is a sports caster's show on a network. When this sports caster walks into the radio studio for his 15-minute show, there is a crew of two—a production man and an engineer—to get him on the air. When the same sports caster walks into a television studio for an almost exactly similar 15-minute show, there is a crew of 15 to see that his image gets out of the studio.

With RCA and AT&T setting high prices on the facilities for television, the owners of stations and networks are doing their best to hold down wages. They are thwarted in this to the extent that unions have organized the technicians such as engineers, cameramen and stagehands. The actors, writers, directors, production men and other white collar workers, however, are as yet unorganized. As a result, a television senior director may be working for as low as $60 a week while his counterpart in radio draws a union minimum of $150. Television writers are working for as little as $35 a week, compared to the $120 drawn by their radio counterparts.

All four major radio networks are in the television field. So are newspaper publishers who have the capital to support local video stations.

Station WPIX, owned by New York Daily News, recently fired scores of employes because the advertising money wasn't rolling in and expenses were so much greater than they had anticipated.

Windowless Textile Mills Predicted

Those low brick buildings with their rows and rows of windows so typical of textile mill towns now may some day go the way of the horse and buggy, for the textile mill of the future will be built without windows.

This is the prediction made by A. C. Buensod, president of an engineering firm in New York, reports the CIO textile union's monthly, "Textile Labor." Commenting on a manual published by the CIO textile workers, calling for legislation to require "Air Conditioning in Textile Mills," Buensod said the conditions recommended were all "absolutely fair."

He said air conditioning in all textile mills is almost inevitable. "I think mill men are good businessmen and realize that air conditioning will bring them greater profits," he stated.

Pointing out that no air conditioning system can maintain close temperature control with windows, he predicted that in the future textile mills will be built without windows and that present ones will be bricked up.

He differed with the CIO union only on the matter of legislation to make air conditioning compulsory, arguing that equipment manufacturers couldn't meet in a short time the demand such a law would create.

Seeks Gearhart Repealer

Rep. John D. Dingell (D., Mich.) has announced that he will introduce at the opening of the 81st Congress a bill to repeal the Gearhart amendment which removed more than a million workers from social security coverage. Asked about plans to broaden the general scope of social security, Dingell said, "First we'll have to repair the wreckage of the Republican Congress."

Station To Face Charge Of Bias In News

Charges that Radio Station KMPC in Los Angeles broadcast loaded, editorialized news programs are due for a thorough airing by the Federal Communications Commission.

The FCC has ordered "investigatory" hearings, probably to be held next month. G. A. Richards, owner of KMPC, also owns two stations in the middle west—WGAR in Cleveland, WJR in Detroit. All three are powerful 50,000 watt broadcasters.

Complaints against Richards' handling of news broadcasts were lodged with the FCC last spring by several former news staff employes of the Los Angeles station. They filed photostats of memos allegedly signed by Richards which set forth how news should be "handled" in the station's broadcasts.

The directives indicated that news of the Roosevelt family, of the New Deal, of unions and of racial and religious minorities should be handled in such a way as to reflect a strong editorial bias against those groups. Under present FCC rules, stations are not permitted to editorialize.

Findings by the FCC upholding the charges could lead to revocation of Richards' license to broadcast. He will be represented at the hearing by Burton K. Wheeler, former Montana Senator and now a Washington lawyer.

Two Congressmen From UAW

There'll be two—not one—Congressmen with active CIO records in the 81st Congress.

One of them, Tom Burke of Toledo and a member of the auto union there, was credited in a November issue of The CIO News with being the first CIO official to make the grade.

Actually, however, he shares the honor with James V. Buckley of Chicago, elected on the Democratic ticket in the 4th district of Illinois. Buckley is former president of Local 714, UAW-CIO.

ACCEPT PACT: The CIO Longshoremen have voted to accept a contract with West Coast shippers. With the national CIO playing a leading role in the final negotiations, the new contract, won after a three-and-half month strike, provides a 15-cent raise, increased vacation credit and retention of the hiring hall pending a court test. Here are some of the 6000 longshoremen in the San Francisco Bay area lining up to vote at the S. F. Civic Auditorium.

'Best Stock' Scott Wonders If Truman Got A Mandate

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

MAYBE you think the Nov. 2 election might have taught the Grand (!) Ole Party a lesson.

Maybe you think that for once in its life the Republican Party should have caught what the people—the farmers, the professional groups, labor and small businessmen—were driving at when they re-elected Pres. Truman and chose a liberal Congress.

But—

Last week Rep. Hugh D. (Best Stock) Scott, Jr., issued a statement. No one normally would pay too much attention to what Scott would say in his capacity as U. S. Representative from the Sixth District of Pennsylvania. But it just happens that "Best Stock" Scott was chairman of the Republican Natl. Committee, which did so well in making Thomas E. Dewey the only "ex-President" who never was sworn in as occupant of the White House (or possibly the Blair House).

Best Stock sent out a statement to 20,000 Republican leaders (at least he says there are 20,000 Republican leaders) which said that the leaders must join in a "vigorous, brisk battle to bring the principles of sound, stable, constructive government and the ordinary primer lessons on economy back home to the American people in words they can understand."

Oh, by the way, Hugh Scott is, just in case you may have forgotten, the self-styled gentleman who once said of Republicans that "we are of the best stock" and therefore the GOP should take over rule of the country.

Last week, Hugh Scott came through with some of his best stock phrases. He assured the bewildered, beleaguered, and bestruck 20,000 that they had failed to win the election—not because they did not hold principles cherished by the people—but because the Party (not apparently Best Stock himself) had failed to carry the fight to the opposition.

Cried Hugh: Is Truman trying to create his own New Deal? If so, the Republicans will oppose attempts to re-establish "police methods of fighting high prices, to increase individual income taxes and to swell the overgrown bureaucracy."

Does Truman have a mandate from the people who chose him for another term in the White House over the "mandate" of the pollsters? Well, Hugh doesn't go so far as to say no, but he did venture an opinion that the President had received no mandate to convert the American form of government into "regimented state socialism."

Scott took a page from the generalities of the Dewey campaign to assure the 20,000—(again 20,000 is his figure) that "it is time for Republicans in Congress to stand up and call inflation by its right name and do battle with the false propaganda that the government can continue to cheapen the money of the people while promising patent medicine cures through the magic of price control."

Then the man who chairmaned what was perhaps the most disastrous defeat the Republicans have ever suffered came through with this pontifical statement:

"We will remind you, Mr. President, of each and every one of your campaign pledges."

This sounds like a lot of Hugh and cry.

* * *

Hugh Scott's message to the unhappy 20,000 came after he had said only a week before that "the public has accepted the intervention of Government in its daily life. Ours is a spiritual job of moving the minds of people and not just a mechanical job of moving the people to the polls."

Hardly pausing for breath, he then blurted out that "In the days to come we've got to run up the storm signals. We've got to convince the people that we were right in warning against regimentation and state socialism."

The Republican party, meanwhile, was undergoing an orgy of soul-searching.

There was, for instance, a character named Clarence Buddington Kelland. Most of you know him as a writer of transparent slick romances which appear with almost clock-work regularity in the Satevepost. Republicans also know him as a national committeeman from Arizona, whose political beliefs make Joe Pew and Joe Grundy seem like Trotskyites.

Kelland accused Tom Dewey of being what perhaps most New Dealers also thought he was—"smug, arrogant, stupid and supercilious." But Bud Kelland, who thinks that Tom Dewey is tarred with the New Deal brush, wants a "Republican housecleaning from top to bottom"—which means that the Grundys would assume an even greater control of the party.

On the other hand, there came an opinion from a Wilkieite Republican, Russell Davenport, husband of Marcia Davenport, Author of "Valley of Decision," a best-seller which used the Homestead strike massacre as part of its theme.

Warned Davenport: "The Republican party has failed to inspire the American people with confidence. Its failure is a failure of leadership at all levels."

And from New Hampshire's oft-times maverick GOP Sen. Charles Tobey there emitted a sardonic blast: "Instead of forever being against everything, the party must once in a while be in favor of the plain interests of the people."

* * *

It looks again as if the Republicans are sad because the republican form of government is not Republican.

"I didn't get this way until I started working for Denham."

Parley Blasts At Mich. U. Action

A strong protest against action taken by the University of Michigan to abolish its Workers' Education Service was voted unanimously at the CIO convention. The resolution pointed out that the action was taken "at the behest of the General Motors Corp. and other reactionary forces in the state."

The CIO voted complete support for the Michigan CIO Council which is spearheading the fight to get the program restored, and for the other groups helping in the drive.

Pledging work unceasingly "to make the tools of education for democratic living available for all American workers," the CIO urged "the enlargement of publicly supported services within the states, and the enactment of a federal Labor Extension Service program in the U. S. Dept. of Labor."

August Scholle of the Michigan CIO Council in a speech supporting the resolution urged all CIO affiliates to back "an all-out drive" for the adoption of the CIO's program.

Delegate William Lavelle, Stark County Council said that the Labor Extension Service Bill would provide $30,000,000 a year "for educational services on a cooperative basis between the State universities and our union organizations."

Sentencing of 25 In Strike Denounced

The CIO Fur & Leather Workers denounced as "outrageous" the one-year prison sentences and large fines imposed on two IFLWU organizers and lesser sentences imposed on 23 strikers at the Virginia Oak Tannery in Luray, Va., who have been on strike since June 1. Charging that the punitive prison sentences were an attempt to break the six-month strike, the IFLWU branded the trial as a frameup by the employer to smash the union.

HONOR BREWERY WORKERS: Col. E. W. Palmer, retiring president of the Natl. Society for Crippled Children and Adult, presents a citation for the performance of the CIO Brewery Workers in the society's cerebral palsy program. Accepting the citation in behalf of the CIO union is Joseph E. Brady, the Brewery Workers' co-ordinator of state councils.

Public Health Service Probes Donora Disaster

A three-pronged investigation of the recent smog disaster in Donora, Pa., has been launched by the Public Health Service, according to Oscar Ewing, Administrator of the Federal Security Agency.

A team of Public Health Service physicians, nurses, engineers, and analysts arrived on the scene to study clinical, environmental, and metereological conditions. Medical data will be collected on smog casualties, and a survey will be undertaken of materials and processes used in industrial plants.

Metereological conditions in the area, which were responsible for the enveloping blanket of smog, will also be investigated.

The study is being made at the request of, and in cooperation with, the Pennsylvania State Board of Health, the Borough Council of Donora, and the CIO Steelworkers. Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers had written Dr. Leonard Scheele, Surgeon General, asking for a comprehensive probe. The Steelworkers gave the Donora Council $10,000 to conduct the investigation.

The Industrial Hygiene Foundation at Mellon Institute is also cooperating in atmospheric analyses.

The investigation will not only seek to discover the fatal elements in the recent smog that took 20 lives, but it will also serve as a pilot study to suggest control measures to protect other industrial areas in the nation from becoming future Donoras.

Frank Burke, safety and health director of the Steelworkers, and several physicians said that they believed that poisonous fumes were thrown off during the zinc smelting process used by the American Steel & Wire Co.

Flood Victims' Trailers Visited

More than 500 CIO families among the 18,000 people who lost their homes five months ago in Portland's Vanport flood are still living in trailers and other makeshift shelters, a group of delegates and visitors at the CIO convention learned last week.

An inspection committee composed of CIO representatives and local officials, including Mayor-elect Dorothy McCullough Lee, made a tour of the Guilds Lake trailers, and of the Swan Island shipyard barracks, during the convention. A pouring Oregon rain made the miserable housing conditions of the flood disaster victims seem even more dismal to the group.

Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers and chairman of the National CIO's housing committee issued a statement after the tour pledging cooperation with "all organizations to do everything possible to get the Vanport disaster victims out of those miserable trailers before winter sets in."

He was unable to make the tour with the inspection committee, but was represented by Leo Goodman, director of the housing committee.

Criticizing the delay in making adequate provisions for the homeless families, Reuther's statement declared that "ample funds are available out of a $10,000,000 allocation made by federal authorities to aid the victims of the flood."

NAM PARLEY 'IN SHOCK' FROM ELECTION

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THEY talked—at the NAM convention in New York last week—about how industry should bolster the morale of workers.

They should have talked—if the glum expressions, the nervous questions, the hesitating replies are any indication—about how to bolster the morale of the 17,000 members of the NAM.

For the 53rd convention of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers—held at the flossy Waldorf-Astoria Hotel—clearly reflected the "shocking" results of the Nov. 2 elections.

The tone of the meeting was in sharp contrast with CIO's "victory convention" at Portland, Ore., a week before.

It was an equally sharp contrast to the NAM's 1947 convention. A year ago the NAM was feeling its oats. Then, speakers were talking about the need for longer working hours, lower taxes for big business, removal of government "restrictions" on enterprise.

This year, it was different. They asked what Congress might "do to them" in January. They asked why American voters had failed to heed the NAM's program for the country. They even admitted that government, as a partner, was in business to stay.

They looked pretty glum, and the spirit was obviously low.

THERE were indications a-plenty that NAM was still engaged in post-election soul-searching:

1. Robert K. Burns, University of Chicago industrial relations expert, was on hand to give a summary and interpretation of the recent CIO and AFL conventions. What organized labor does these days is important—and no one knows it better than the NAM.

2. Morris Sayre, retiring NAM president, indicated that if owners of American business two or three generations ago had devoted a little more time to thinking about their motives and their good faith, "we wouldn't be facing some of the tough problems we face today."

3. Wheeler McMillen, editor of Farm Journal and Pathfinder (both magazines are owned by Joe Pew, oil baron and NAM stalwart) laced the NAM for not talking the American language. "You have a public relations problem of truly colossal proportions," McMillen said fliply.

4. Ira Mosher, former NAM president and one of its leading figures, warned NAM-ers they would be "unrealistic" if they failed "to recognize the newly-won prestige of government." Whatever the election meant, said Mosher, it "certainly was not a repudiation" of the Truman administration. (There was no dissent on that!)

IT was the session on industrial relations which showed most clearly the confusion and dispirit in NAM ranks.

A year ago NAM Counsel Raymond Smethurst—a smoothie who can tell a joke better than most people—was urging the membership to use Taft-Hartley for all it was worth. Last week, he talked defensively about a "fanatical campaign to change basic national labor policy."

Smethurst bemoaned the fact that revision of labor laws are not apt to be based on "experience" gained from 18 months of T-H. Instead, he complained, there's a move towards "restoration of an old law"—the Wagner Act—"which after more than 10 years of trial, proved inadequate, unfair and not conducive either to good labor relations or industrial peace."

"No one today can forecast" what will happen in Congress, Smethurst went on, and the NAM should hold fast to "fundamentals." Employers should be willing to welcome "an impartial restudy of the Taft-Hartley Act, and the correction of any defects which might be revealed."

(The NAM has been T-H's staunchest defender, and to date has not admitted any real defects in Taft-Hartley.)

Smethurst's prediction of drastic changes in Taft-Hartley left the audience stone-faced. The crowd of several hundred businessmen looked no happier when he predicted that minimum wages will be lifted to at least 75 cents an hour, that its coverage will be broadened and its loopholes tightened. He predicted a strengthened Walsh-Healey Act, covering workers employed by government contractors, and an increase of "up to 50%" in social security benefits.

W. H. WINANS, industrial relations boss for Union Carbon & Carbide, tried to lift some of the gloom that was rapidly settling over the audience as it listened to reports on the plans of the labor unions and the outlook in Congress.

"Keep in mind the workers who don't want to turn to unions," he grumped. A few people applauded.

"If management listened to people with gripes and ambitions, the way those union fellows do, more workers would turn to us." There was more scattered applause.

There's a "fourth round" of wage demands coming up, Winans said gloomily. "Where can the money come from?" The crowd of industrialists, perhaps conscious that this is the biggest high-profit year in history, offered no solution.

"Somehow we must get a fair day's work for a fair day's pay," Winans emphasized. That brought out the best round of applause of the speech.

Throughout the evening's talk about labor relations, and speeches during the three-day convention, some outlines of NAM's strategy could be seen.

Industrial leaders recognize, of course, that they lost the election. But they're digging in for a delaying action and sniping tactics.

They're hopeful that in the "four to six months" before new labor laws are passed, NAM principles can be written into the law. They're prepared to accept as inevitable the continued interest of government in economic problems—but they hope to limit its effectiveness.

They're supporting the European Recovery Program—but they still hope it can be used to hold back the progressive economic planning of labor governments overseas.

They're still against price controls and "government spending," and federal financial help to the various states.

NAM's morale is low—lower than it has been in years. Its leaders clearly realize that bills they don't like are going to be passed.

But labor would not be wise to ignore NAM's power—the power of the several score billion dollars in assets of its members corporations. Those dollars still have potency, and their strength will be felt in the months ahead.

"There goes the only person I ever heard of who was interviewed by an election pollster."

HST is Called Thunder Thief

The NAM convention was informed this week that Harry S. Truman had taken over the NAM's own techniques in his successful election campaign.

Wheeler McMillen, editor of Pathfinder magazine, reminded the NAM that its own 1948 public relations program was built on "an implicit faith that if the so-called 'man in the street' is given the facts truthfully, dramatically and repeatedly, he will always arrive at the right decisions and, what's more, he will always make his opinions felt."

Pres. Truman remembered that, and the NAM forgot it, McMillen said.

"Could there be a more perfect parallel between your statement and his strategy?" McMillen asked.

PAC Permanent, Biz Meet Told

Here's the "labor picture" given to NAM convention by Robert K. Burns of University of Chicago:

1. There'll definitely be a "fourth round" demand for wage increases.

2. "Labor is in politics to stay . . . CIO has given its PAC permanent status . . . powerful political organizations of labor . . . keep close, continual review over elected officials . . . labor has shown its enmity of the Communists and subversives . . ."

3. Big organizing drive will be centered on white collar workers. "This group is hard to organize, but management will have to do a better personnel job among white collar employes . . . white collar workers will benefit and that's a fine thing . . ."

Pro-Reds Lose Every Contest For National AVC Offices

On every issue, in every contest for national office, the liberal and trade union chapters of the American Veterans Committee last week triumphed over their pro-Communist opponents at the liberal veterans organization's third annual convention at Cleveland, Ohio.

Elected chairman was Gilbert Harrison, 33, one of the AVC's founders, whose race for the vice-chairmanship two years ago occasioned the first outburst of Communist opposition to liberal leadership in the organization. His running mate for vice-chairmanship was incumbent Joseph A. Clorety who last year took the lead in combatting Communist infiltration into AVC.

All but one of the eight regional chairmanships went to foes of the Stalinists, as did all of the 16 at-large seats on the Nat'l Planning Committee.

Trade unionists chosen for top offices in AVC include: AFL Ladies Garment Workers political action director Gus Tyler, CIO Auto Workers veterans director Harold Near, Harold Beck, AFL Office Employes' organizer, Art Buck, Wyoming secretary of Labor's League for Political Education and Harold Libros former director of organization and education of the AFL Upholsterers Union.

A high spot of the three day conclave was the presentation of one of the CIO's anti-discrimination awards to retiring chairman Chat Paterson. The plaque was presented to Paterson by George Weaver, secretary of the Nat'l CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

GUEST speaker at the convention banquet was Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen - unaffiliated. Greetings were received from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, UAW-CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, and Harvey Brown, president of the Int'l Association of Machinists-unaffiliated.

Murray said: "My associates and I have noted that whenever we engaged in a struggle in the halls of Congress for progressive legislation, AVC was always at our side. I notice that you are under attack by those who seek to pervert your aims or destroy your effectiveness. It is a credit to you that while resisting this effort to undermine your organization, you have always steadfastly adhered to fundamental democratic principles."

After being defeated early in the convention on the question of whether or not to sustain the executive committee's suspension of chapters countenancing defiance of national AVC policy, and identifying the vets with the Wallace party, the pro-Communist opposition virtually collapsed. Its only real attempt to alter AVC policy was its unsuccessful fight against re-endorsing the Marshall plan.

Reaffirmed was AVC's opposition to the Taft-Hartley law, its demand for a full employment economy, public housing legislation, health insurance, natural resources development, and a higher minimum wage.

Communist party members were barred from AVC by a 13 to eight margin. The incoming executive committee was instructed to "use all means appropriate under the constitution to clean out and keep out members of the Communist party."

Trade union delegates were active in the so-called Independent Progressive Caucus, which organized defeat of the pro-Stalinists, who called themselves "Progressives." The "center" caucus, Build AVC, which lost most of its genuinely liberal adherents before the convention, delivered its vote almost solidly to the pro-Communist group.

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 13, 1948 82 No. 49

Youthful Victim: Ten-year-old David Atkins (above) struck by a gunshot blast as he chopped wood in the yard of his home at Rome, Ga. His mother, Mrs. Robert Atkins, is at his side. Police arrested Pete Sealock, who the CIO Textile Workers said was a strikebreaker at the Celanese Co. plant at Rome where a settlement has since been reached. The union quoted police as saying they believed that Sealock had mistaken David for his father, a striker. (See story on P. 2)

Curran Says:

Keep U. S. Ships At 50% Of Marshall Plan Total

CIO maritime unions last week voiced sharp and angry protest at a government announcement that American ships would no longer be guaranteed half the overseas transport of European Recovery Program materials.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union demanded of Paul Hoffman, head of the Economic Cooperation Administration, that "this penny-wise and pound-foolish policy decision be rescinded, and that the 50% rule, meager as it is, be maintained and strengthened."

The 50% rule—inserted in the ERP statute at the insistence of labor—requires that half the ERP material sent abroad must be carried in U. S. ships. But two loosely-worded clauses in the bill led Hoffman to announce his decision to give up the 50% rule on Jan. 1.

Hoffman used as the basis for his decision a differential of $4.50 a ton between U. S. rates and those of other countries.

CIO maritime officials have pointed out that many of these "cut-rate" ships are chartered by "Greek" shipowners who live on Park Avenue and who register their vessels under the Panamian flag.

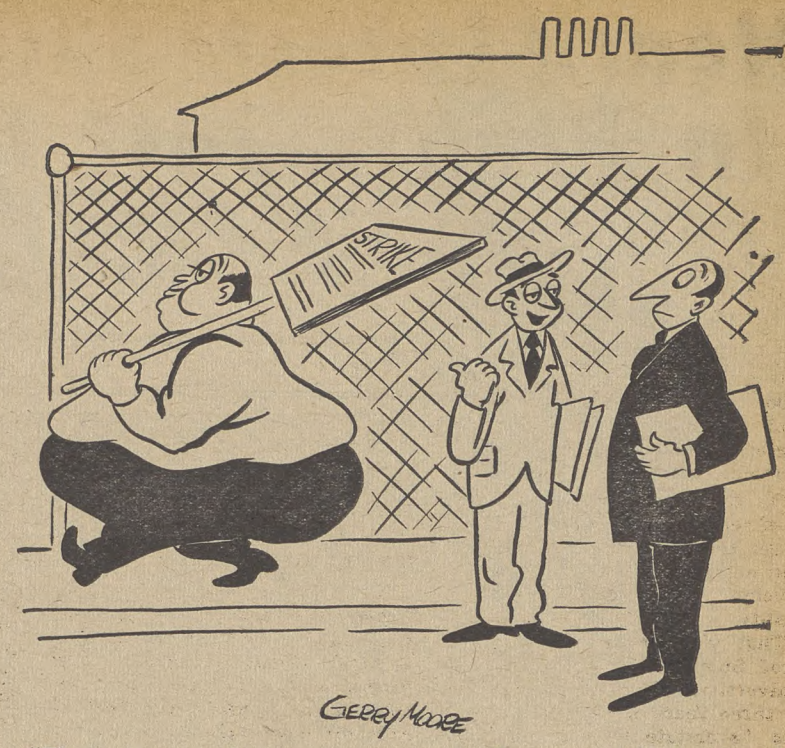
These ships are sea-going sweatshops, with wages and conditions far below American standards. In addition, CIO maritime union economists point out, the U. S. government would lose much of the alleged $4.50 a ton saving as a result of probable wide-spread unemployment among American seamen if the rule is revoked.

CURRAN, who heads the CIO Maritime Committee, said that "if rates and operating expenses are the problems, then these matters should be worked out by the agencies involved and not at the expense of the livelihood of tens of thousands of American seamen.

". . . We support the Marshall Plan, and we do not believe it was created to relieve hardship in Europe and create hardship here at home," Curran said.

He said that ECA's "short-sighted policy . . . can result only in further scuttling the American Merchant Marine and helping to drive the American Merchant Marine out of business." The union, he added, wants U. S. shipping preserved "not only for the purpose of keeping America in the forefront in world trade but also on the basis that America must have a strong merchant marine for its own defense in time of need."

Curran praised a statement by Commissioner Mellen of the U. S. Maritime Commission, who warned that the effect of Hoffman's ruling would be to make this country a "second-rate maritime power."



"There goes our temporary answer to the mass picketing ban."

Textile Wins Celanese Strike, 15c Increase

THE 17-week-old strike of the CIO Textile Workers at the Rome, Ga., plant of the Celanese Co., ended last week with the union winning wage increases averaging 15 cents an hour for 1800 workers.

The strike had been marked with injunctions against the union, and contempt of court citations against 270 union officers and members.

Settlement included the return to work of all strikers without discrimination. TWUA Exec. Vice Pres. George Baldanzi headed the union negotiating committee that obtained the settlement.

Five days before the strike ended David Atkins, 10-year-old son of George Atkins, a striker, was shot by a blast from a shotgun as he chopped wood in the yard of his home. He was taken to the Floyd County Hospital, Rome, where 15 pellets were removed. (See Page 1 picture.)

Pete Sealock, said by the union to be a strikebreaker, was arrested on a charge of assault with intent to murder. Police told union officials that they believe that the alleged assailant mistook George for his father.

THE STRIKE was caused by the failure of the Celanese Co. to give to employes at its Rome plant a 15c an hour increase which it had granted at its Cumberland, Md., factory. A 7½c an hour raise was the company's offer.

Using personal letters to strikers, radio and newspaper ads, the company late in October attempted to open its plant. To assure the entrance of the strikebreakers into the plant, the company obtained an injunction against mass picketing.

On the day of the "opening," 1500 strikers jammed the street in front of the plant. Less than 100 strikebreakers went through the picket lines.

The company three times refused to meet with Cyrus Ching, head of the U. S. Conciliation Service, and ignored the union's standing offer of arbitration.

CIO Gets Flood Victims Promise Of Better Homes

THE Natl. CIO convention at Portland, Oregon, accomplished a lot for the CIO, but it did more than that. It won the promise of homes "within a week" for 900 families washed out by the May 30 Vanport flood disaster. They have been living in a trailer camp sunk in mud, without indoor toilets or adequate heating, these past six months.

Federal action in behalf of the victims was swift after protests by the CIO Housing Committee during the convention caught nationwide attention.

Under the chairmanship of UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and directorship of Leo Goodman, the committee sponsored a well-publicized tour of the bleak Guild Lake trailer camp. Portland's lady mayor-elect, Dorothy McCullough Lee, accompanied the CIO group.

Three days after the CIO left Portland, U. S. Public Housing Administrator Jack Egan took a flying trip to the flooded area. One week later he was able to assure Goodman that the trailer inhabitants would be housed within a week.

To remove the Vanport victims from the Guild Lake trailer camp—the trailers measure 7 by 22 feet on the outside—the government is conditioning the Swan Island shipyard barracks nearby. Suggestion to use the idle barracks had been repeatedly made by a number of Western Congressmen and Senators, as well as the CIO, since last June.

No explanation was given of the government's failure to act until prodded by the publicity flood.

First to be moved to Swan Island will be families with children, Egan said.

Otto S. Beyer, Labor Relation Expert, Dies

Otto S. Beyer, labor-management relations expert, well-known to the trade union movement, died in Washington, D. C., Dec. 8, after an illness of three weeks. He was 62. His wife, Mrs. Clara Mortenson Beyer, is associate director of the Bureau of Labor Standards, U. S. Dept. of Labor.

A leader in labor-management cooperation for more than 25 years, Beyer was sometimes called "the father of the B & O Plan," the well-known experiment in union-company cooperation which he worked out for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad following the 1922 railroad strike.

From 1936 to 1942 Beyer was a member of the National Mediation Board, the government agency set up under the Railroad Labor Act, and during the war he was director of the transport personnel in the Office of Defense Transportation.

Labor Ambassador Idea Is 'Catching On'

RECENT suggestions that leaders of U. S. labor unions could serve the country effectively as ambassadors to other labor-minded nations are receiving a warm editorial response.

Both Supreme Court Justice William Douglas and Eric Johnston, head of the Motion Picture Association of America, have made similar proposals that U. S. diplomacy could well use a transfusion of new blood from the ranks of labor.

Douglas made the point in his speech to the CIO convention, and Johnston spoke the same piece in his recent book, "We're All In It."

Both emphasized that American democratic ideas and institutions could be explained to the peoples of other countries by labor ambassadors who can talk plainly and whose reputations belie any "Wall Street" bias.

The Detroit Free Press said Johnston's proposal "has a practical ring . . . It strikes us as pretty good sense. After all, the kind of people abroad among whom communism is trying to plant its roots can be much better reached by a sincere labor leader than by bankers, diplomatic careerists, professors or even editorial writers."

The Chicago Daily News noted that an account of the virtues of the American economic system "would be more persuasive to foreign workers coming from Philip Murray than from, say, Henry Ford II."

The Cedar Rapids, Ia., Gazette editorialized that the "time has come to quit awarding ambassadorships on the basis of the amount contributed in the last campaign and either give the jobs back to proven career men or hand them over to some intelligent, plain-spoken citizens who know from their own experiences what the average American is thinking about and what he wants in the way of a foreign policy."

Conference Plans To Push Health Bills

Delegates from 50 local unions and 17 other organizations took part in the conference of the Labor Education Association union health and welfare program at Philadelphia.

AFL, CIO Railroad Brotherhoods and unaffiliated unions from the Philadelphia area discussed their experiences with health and welfare plans and planned to push health bills in the coming session of Congress. Alice Hanson Cook told the unionists that they should be giving active support to the Truman program which will probably include health insurance and greater social security benefits.

Research Director Isidor Falk of the Social Security Administration told the gathering that the administration program would broaden social insurance to cover the whole population and lift benefits by 50% to 100%. Even if this program is adopted, he made it clear, unions must continue with their health and welfare plans.

FE Board Says 'No' To Immediate Merger

THE Farm Equipment & Metal Workers executive board has voted not to carry out a CIO directive to merge the union with the United Automobile Workers.

The FE Board, meeting in Chicago, referred the merger request to the union's next convention, scheduled for Cedar Rapids, Ia., next March 25-27.

The CIO directive was voted at a post-convention Executive Board meeting in Portland, Oreg., Nov. 27. It called for merger steps to be completed within 60 days.

A CIO investigating committee was named at the same time to study the problem of merging the two unions. Appointed to the group were Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union.

Only the FE membership could act on what it described as a "dictatorial order" from CIO and from the UAW, the farm equipment board declared. It described the CIO Board directive as a threat to "constitutional rights" of all CIO union members.

The CIO Board noted that the UAW has enrolled more members in the farm machinery industry than the FE has done and that its organizing activities preceded those of FE. The resolution indicated that a single union in the industry would benefit all workers concerned.

15% Pay Increase Is Sought By NMU

The CIO Maritime Union is seeking a 15% pay increase under the contract signed with Atlantic & Gulf ship operators last August. The sailors won an agreement giving them a raise and allowing a wage reopening every six months. The six months are up, and NMU now wants its raise to catch up with higher living costs and boost the living standards of its members.

Heard Latest? $20 Billion In Profits Just Illusion

THE "why and wherefore" of the country's record-breaking corporation taxes came in for thorough examination last week before a Congressional committee.

Five days of testimony found labor spokesmen demanding action to limit excess profits and restore balance to the country's economic machinery.

On the other hand, some business economists trotted out a novel theory—that those $20 billion net profits are just an optical illusion which don't exist in reality.

That viewpoint was voiced by Prof. Sumner Slichter of Harvard University, who maintained that in three years American industry has "overstated" its profits by nearly 16½ billion dollars. He said the overstatement was based on old-fashioned accounting methods, and that profits aren't really profits when many forms of replacement items have gone way up in cost.

Slichter's viewpoint was disputed by another Harvard professor, Seymour Harris, who found profits too high and advocated a rise in profits taxes, and by Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director.

By the end of the week, it was obvious that Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.)—head of the subcommittee of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, which is conducting the hearings—was not impressed with the "profit overstatement" theory. He charged it was intended to have political effects on Congressional tax policies next January.

Both Ruttenberg and Nelson Cruikshank assailed the present high rate of profit-making, with the CIO official calling for a new excess profits tax and the AFL spokesman pointing out that it calls for new wage increases.

Ruttenberg pointed out that high profits are curbing the "incentive to increase production and expand capacity." He said that industry, realizing it can make high profits with things as they are, "has no drive to meet the ever-increasing demand for many American products."

THE CIO economist called for an "all-out attack" on "monopolistic and self-interest practices of American industry" as well as taxes both on excess profits and on profits which are earned by corporations but not passed on to the stockholders.

He warned that "the seed germs of the next depression" are being planted by the super-profits of U. S. industry, bringing with them serious distortions and maladjustments between prices and incomes.

These super-profits, he added, are being made "at the expense of other segments of our national income. Profits increase because prices increase, and when prices increase faster than wages, serious distortions in our national income occur."

Many firms, he added, have increased prices "not just to cover increased costs but far in excess of what was necessary to cover costs." Profits are now more than five times the pre-war level.

A process of "gouging the public" has helped create big profits, Ruttenberg asserted, and pricing policies are being made with attention "almost solely for what the market will bear."

"These four factors combined represent the self-interest, short-sighted, depression - producing thinking of American industry that must be altered if we are to avoid serious economic dislocations," the CIO official warned the Congressional group.

(A New York Times survey last week found "Industry's Profits Up All Along the Line." The survey, among 291 industrial concerns in every manufacturing field, showed that up to Sept. 1, profits were up an average of 33 per cent over last year.)

Many of the price policies of big corporations are explained away as preparing reserves in case of depression, Ruttenberg said, but they actually help to bring on conditions that make depression more likely.

"If industry would moderate its avaricious appetite for profits by moderating its pricing policies," he said, "it would go a long way toward stabilizing our economy, and thus postponing, maybe indefinitely, 'the inevitable depression.'"

One effect of industry's big profit-making spree, the CIO economist pointed out, has been to place control over increasing billions of dollars in the hands of a small group of corporation directors.

Before the war, firms "were distributing a large share of their profits after taxes" to the stockholders, he recalled. In 1929, 70% of these profits were passed along in dividends; in 1948, only about 35% of these funds are being distributed. The remaining 65% is kept under the control of the small group of men who dominate American corporations.

This practice of holding control over profits and of using them to expand already big businesses "has a tendency to eliminate new competition," Ruttenberg charged.

These trends, he indicated, could be curbed by taxes on excess and undistributed profits, which would force corporations either to use their big surplus funds for expansion or to pass them along to the stockholders.

MONOPOLY TREND: Corporation profits — after taxes — have reached an all-time high of $20 million in 1948—but stockholders are getting a smaller share in dividends. Dividend portion has dropped from 69% in 1929 to 35% in 1948. Rest of it piles up in big reserves controlled by corporation directors.

NEW NAM HEAD

71 Reinstated

Seventy-one workers who were blacklisted from the huge Armour plant at Chicago after their strike last spring have won reinstatement. The case had been slated for arbitration. A settlement was reached, however, after a number of days of steady meetings between management and representatives of Local 347, CIO Packinghouse Workers.

UNCERTAIN FUTURE: Optimism about prosperity is dropping down. University of Michigan surveys showed that in early 1947, 55% of consumers were optimistic about economic future; now the figure is down to 41%.

Rieve Spells It Out

States Have Mandate For New Deal Program

PRES. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has served notice on state governments that they, as well as the Federal government, have a mandate to carry out a New Deal program.

He developed this idea at the Rhode Island CIO convention at Providence. Rieve said the fact that federal action is required to curb the abuses of charitable trusts, curb inflation and relieve the shortage of electric power does not relieve states of all responsibility.

The textile union head said that when the shutdown of the Esmond mill, one of the Textron chain of textile mills, was announced, the union asked the Rhode Island authorities about the possibilities of an investigation.

"A good many of our political friends in this state asked us not to demand action publicly," Rieve said. "They said that it would prove embarrassing" to Sen. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), who, Rieve charged, drew $15,000 a year as one of the trustees of the Rhode Island Charities Trust, set up in connection with Textron, Inc.

Rieve said that only after the union demanded an investigation of the closing of the Nashau mill in New Hampshire, another of the Textron enterprises, did McGrath, Sen. Theodore Green (D., R. I.) and Gov. John O. Pastore, Rhode Island's Democratic governor, join in the request for the probe.

RHODE Island re-elected Pastore and Green, and sent a Democratic delegate to the House. The State Senate is half Democratic and half Republican with the lieutenant governor, a Democrat, in the position of casting the deciding vote in the case of a tie. (There is a Democratic majority in the State's lower house.)

The textile union head said that he was not charging that "McGrath had been guilty of any wrong doing, but I do not think that it is proper for a public official to be tied up in this sort of enterprise."

Rieve said that Royal S. Little, president of Textron, Inc., bought the Esmond mill, but that he didn't run it at all, except to meet unfilled orders. He charged that "charitable trusts made such deals possible," provided the cash and freed Little from any responsibility, for the workers, or for the community."

Rieve said that while it was up to Congress to eliminate the tax exemptions now enjoyed by the trusts, it was Rhode Island's responsibility to change the laws governing the trusts, which, he said, do not have to issue any statements.

He also said that there was no reason to put on the Federal government the entire responsibility of public development of power and suggested that Rhode Island join with other New England states in using its resources.

McGrath was quoted by the Associated Press as saying that he had no connection with the Textron organization, and was "not interested in anything that Mr. Rieve might have to say."

PASTORE said that "he had never tried to dissuade anyone from doing anything in connection with the Textron affair."

Green, who also addressed the convention, was critical of textile barons "who have closed some of our Rhode Island mills to the discomfort and distress of families who have been earning their livelihood for many years in the Textile industry."

He said that he will present to the 81st Congress legislation designed to prevent Puerto Rico from giving unfair competitive advantages to American mills in the form of low wages. He said his proposal would take the form of an amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

He added that he hoped that when Congress considers a new tax bill it would remedy present laws in the tax bill "so that all textile manufacturers, whether they are founders of trusts or not, would be treated as equals."

Council Pres. Frank J. Benti and Victor J. Canzano, executive vice president, were re-elected without opposition and Antonio DiPinto of the Electrical Workers was re-elected secretary-treasurer, defeating Thomas Rusbino of the Steelworkers by a vote of 182 to 74.

The minority group which supported Rusbino claimed that the small unions in the state should be permitted to elect their man, chosen at a caucus, to the secretary-treasurer post so that he could represent the "minority unions in the CIO family."

The majority group maintained that all officers, including the secretary-treasurer, should be elected from the convention floor regardless of any prior caucus.

OH, UNHAPPY POST!

Yes, sir, things are really in one devil of a shape. We're heading right straight for a regimented economy—for the creation of a police state, if you please.

And if you don't believe it, just read the lead editorial in the Dec. 4 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

The editorial—"Did We Buy Socialism With Truman?"—contains such statements as—

"The President is hooked with zealots like Senator-elect Humphrey of Minneapolis, who wants to push so-called 'civil rights' down the throat of the South. The CIO will expect prompt repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. Other pressure groups will remind Mr. Truman of his promises on price control, rent control, housing and health programs.

"Mr. Truman's program, as pieced together from his campaign pledges and speeches, contains the seeds of 'planning' and a regimented economy. Call it a police state if you want to, because this is the way a police state begins."

Just imagine it! Humphrey is shoving us toward police stateism because he's an outspoken advocate of civil rights. The CIO is doing the same thing—because it wants repeal of T-H, which placed democratic trade unions under a large measure of government control.

And at this point we'd like to observe that "Did We Buy Socialism With Truman?" should have run in the fiction—not editorial—section of the Post!

DAILY WORKER UNHAPPY, TOO

The Satevepost was no more unhappy over the results of the Nov. 2 election than the Communist Daily Worker was over the outcome of the Portland CIO convention, where left-wingers got their sails trimmed every time they started fanning the breeze.

The Worker headlined one of its convention stories, "Right-wingers Tie CIO to War Drive."

There was nothing to justify such a headline, but that seemed not to bother the Worker.

The story itself, written by George Morris, started off with:

"For hypocrisy and cynicism the tenth convention of the CIO has no second in American labor annals. In their speeches and resolutions, Philip Murray and associates poured out 'democracy' and 'tolerance' by the barrel. In practice the whole affair was prepared to stifle and terrorize opposition and whip up such a frenzied craze on the convention floor that the viewpoint of the progressives would be drowned out.

"That was exactly how the administration machine's program went, although the effort to black out the program of the progressives failed."

The Worker—unlike the Post—doesn't have a fiction department (well, not really) so we'll have to find some other place to which to consign the Morris story.

How would the garbage bucket be?

CHI TRIBUNE'S STILL AT IT!

Because we're observing "Heckle the Publications Week" we feel it necessary to call attention to the latest pipe dream of the Chicago Tribune, which ran a big, black headline telling about the "Dewey victory" the day Truman was re-elected.

The Trib says, "Wouldn't it be curious if, as the years passed, it became apparent that the Democrat was elected President in 1948 as a result of the statesmanship in the Republican Congress, which he opposed and condemned from beginning to end of the campaign."

"Curious" isn't exactly the right word for it!

Headed Down Same Old Path

It Led Nation Into Great Depression Once and Can Do It Again

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AH, it was a beautiful dream! But suddenly it turned into a horrible nightmare which left its victims stunned.

There was going to be a car in every garage, a chicken in every pot and a Republican in every postoffice.

Instead—

Stock brokers jumped out windows. Sheriffs got writers' cramp turning out foreclosure notices. Factory furnaces became cold. Men walked the streets in search of jobs that didn't exist.

The era of "everlasting prosperity" was at an end—and soon we were witnessing want in the midst of plenty, proverty in the world's richest country.

It was tough—really tough.

Undoubtedly there were many things which contributed to the last depression, but one thing stuck out like a bandaged thumb.

Because of increasing prices, the purchasing power of industrial workers and business employes dropped so low they were no longer able to buy the products they made and distributed.

This slowed, then halted production in many fields. The resulting unemployment only added fuel to the fire.

Finally, to stave off complete economic collapse, the government established such agencies as the CWA, WPA and PWA to pump purchasing power into the channels of trade.

Business and industrial leaders should have learned a valuable lesson from what happened, but obviously many of them didn't.

WE'RE now in another period of "everlasting prosperity," according to many of the "experts" who conveniently forget what happened in 1929.

They point to the stupendous profits of business and industry and to the fact that there are many Americans still trying to buy products which are not available.

But they ignore the storm warnings.

They ignore the relationship between wages, prices and profits.

They add fuel to the fire of inflation which is eating up consumer purchasing power.

They peddle pure economic hokum!

CORPORATE profits for 1948 will total between 20 and 21 billion dollars after payment of taxes—five times as high as they were during the 1936-'39 period.

Maybe 1936-'39 isn't a good period for the purpose of comparison—so let's take 1943, the year in which profits reached their wartime peak. That year they totaled $8.9 billion.

They climbed to $12.5 billion in 1946 and to $18 billion last year.

Those profits weren't created out of thin air! They resulted from high employment, increased production and excessively high prices.

They have risen so high they actually constitute a serious menace to our economy.

LET'S see what else was happening during the period in which the corporations were skyrocketing their profits.

Prices increased more than 37% during the past three years.

During the same period weekly earnings increased 13%.

The wartime savings of wage earners began disappearing as prices climbed. The Federal Reserve Board reported one-fourth of the people spent more than they earned last year.

In 1945 the top 10% of the nation's income earners had less than half of the savings. By the end of 1947 they had more than three-fourths.

THE nation is definitely heading down the same path it followed to near economic chaos in the 1930's.

Consumer purchasing power, though still strong, is gradually growing weaker.

Trade unions, a greater factor in our economy than they were 20 years ago, are going to be forced to seek and obtain another round of wage increases next year. The corporations have left them no alternative.

Another round, however, won't solve the problem.

It won't be solved until the leaders of business and industry are willing to to forget their hoggishness and bring prices into line with the ability of workers to pay.

Child Labor On The Upswing

CHILD labor, instead of continuing to drop sharply after the war as expected, has been on the increase since 1947, due to the continued high level of general employment, states the annual report of the National Child Labor Committee, just released.

Figures based on an October 1948 census estimate, show 2,300,000 school-age children at work, two and a half times as many as were employed in 1940. Although this is below the peak figure of 3,000,000 working in 1945, it is more than 300,000 above the figure of 1,970,000 for April 1947.

The report, issued by Mrs. Gertrude Folks Zimand, the committee's general secretary, under the title "Child Labor after Ten Years of Federal Regulation," in addition to the current picture of child labor, also takes stock of what the Federal law has accomplished during the past decade.

"Nobody suspected how many children the Federal child labor law was going to protect when it was enacted in 1938," says Mrs. Zimand in her report, "but the fact that it was on the statute books and being vigorously enforced by the Children's Bureau when the war came, prevented children under 16 from flocking into factories, canneries and mills as they did in World War I.

"Violations rose from 1% of inspected establishments in 1941 to 8% in 1945 and it is easy to see what would have happened had there been no Federal law setting a 16-year age limit for employment in manufacturing establishments.

"In contrast to the Federal law, weak state laws let children of 14 and 15 leave school by the thousands for work in stores, offices, bakeries, laundries, restaurants and many other places which are subject only to state regulations.

"A quarter of a million 14 and 15 year old children were out of school for work at the peak of wartime employment in the many states which let children leave school for work at 14, or on completion of the eighth grade, or because of 'economic necessity.'"

The Committee report recommends three lines of action: 1. Extension of the child labor provisions of the Federal law to cover all interstate commerce industries. 2. Efforts to bring all state laws up to the standard of the Federal law so that all children will remain in school until they are at least 16. 3. Better enforcement of child labor and compulsory school attendance laws.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By Yomen

"Let's have them all jailed for contempt of Congress."

He Came Out As Fast As He Went In

IT happened back during the war, when the armed services were yelling for more and more production of strategic material.

As a result, the president of a CIO union was tossed into jail—and then tossed back out again in a hurry.

Two rookie cops were given a rough "dressing down."

A police commissioner found himself in an embarrassing situation.

A chief of police publicly apologized to the union officer.

MANAGEMENT representatives of a big industrial firm began throwing their weight around after they convinced themselves that workers would not walk out on their jobs even if they received bad treatment.

After all, there was a war on—and officers of the union at the plant had made a no-strike pledge.

The situation, insofar as workers and the union were concerned, rapidly went from bad to worse.

Foremen became super-tough. Settlement of grievances lagged. Supervisors heckled those working under them.

Employes were ordered to work seven days a week, and were "called on the carpet" and bawled out if they were required to miss work for any reason.

WORKERS began complaining to union officers and the officers took the complaints to management. Management, figuratively, shrugged its shoulders.

Tension in the plant mounted and tempers became short as the hottest period of summer arrived.

One day, in the middle of a shift, a workman shut off his machine, turned to the fellow next to him and declared, "Damned if I'm going to continue to work under these conditions."

He began walking from the plant. Others shut off their machines and followed him. Within a few minutes one of the important departments of the plant was not operating.

Other departments closed down—and a full-fledged unauthorized strike was under way.

THE following day two men stood before a crowd near the plant entrance while one of them made a speech.

Two policemen rushed up in a squad car. They jumped out, grabbed the speaker, took him to jail and tossed him in the "bull pen."

The secretary of the local union called the president of the CIO Industrial Union Council and told him, "The cops have just picked up our president and tossed him in the jug!

"He was out on the corner making a speech—urging the men to go back to work—when they picked him up. If we don't get him out in a hurry there's likely to be some trouble out here."

THE council officer called the police commissioner and asked him to "spring" the union president immediately.

The commissioner said he'd "investigate." The council officer urged that he act without delay.

A quick investigation was conducted and the union officer, against whom no specific charge had been placed, was hustled from behind bars.

The chief of police met him in a corridor, shook hands with him, and—with reporters looking on—apologized for the conduct of the squad car men.

Reporters, who had seldom seen the police department operate with such haste, started interviewing the union president.

"Say, who was the fellow standing with you when they picked you up?" one of them asked.

The union officer replied, "He was an Army Intelligence officer who asked me to make the speech urging the men to go back to work!"—A. L. S

A GOOD PROPHET

Britain's Unions Back Drive For Greater Production

By GEORGE DARLING

Industrial Correspondent of the British Broadcasting Corporation

THE leaders of Britain's trade unions have pledged their full support to a concerted drive for greater industrial efficiency. The good intentions of trade union leaders, however, have to meet a ready response from the workers in the workshops, factories and mines if they are to be anything more than expressions of opinion.

The biggest difficulty is to get the workers to understand that improved methods of work, with greater efficiency and a bigger output from each, will not lead to general unemployment, wage-cutting or a lowering of living standards.

For generations the fear of unemployment has hung over the British workers who, in their trade unions, have built up defenses to protect their jobs. Their union leaders have now told them that practices restrictive of production must be thrown overboard, and have urged them in their own interests to welcome new methods of production.

This reversal of traditional ideas, rules and customs was decided on at a conference of 1,350 trade union executives, the elected local and national leaders of 144 unions, held recently in London. The General Council of the Trades Union Congress called the meeting and placed before the delegates a document which historians will call revolutionary.

In forthright terms it asks every member of every union to understand that Britain's future depends solely on British industry being made fully efficient and highly productive. The document tells the workers plainly that their living standards are at stake; they cannot have full employment, high wages and reasonably priced goods unless each of them produces more goods, or transports more goods, or cuts down the labor employed in providing public utility services. And then it goes on to lay down the lines of action which the unions must follow to make labor more productive.

HERE are some of the proposals: The unions must inform their members in the workshops about the need for greater productivity. Workers' representatives should keep an eye on bottlenecks and focus public attention on anything which impedes production or wastes labor, materials and powers.

Shop stewards should be trained in the techniques of management and given greater responsibilities, and the unions as a whole should have a bigger share in the management of plants. Trade union rules and practices which slow down production should be discarded. Trade union leaders should be trained in industrial management.

Trade unions should encourage a big-scale transfer of labor from unimportant jobs to the main, important, under-manned industries—from shopkeeping to the textile mills, for instance—even though some unions would lose members, influence and prestige in the process. These proposals show that the top leaders of the union have broken with the past.

The conference of all union executives was called to see whether they, too, were prepared to discard old customs for new. Their response was one of the most encouraging things that has ever happened in the British labor movement. With only a handful of dissenters, and a small group of non-voters, the executives endorsed the TUC's proposal. A surprising feature of the conference was the silence of the few Communists present.

They were silenced perhaps by the opening words of the Chairman, Will Lawther, President of the Mineworkers' Union, who "hoped that delegates would not come to the rostrum to tell the conference why they should not increase productivity, because that would waste everybody's time." It is more likely, however, that the Communists were following a party instruction to lie low so as not to invoke another outburst of anti-Communist feeling.

The TUC showed its new concern for the uses of science, by inviting a guest who gave a most impressive speech to the Conference—Sir Edward Appleton, Director of the British Government's Department of Scientific and Industrial Research, who explained what scientists were doing to help make production methods more efficient.

He said that apart from the immense amount of research done by individual firms, there were 38 public research associations now at work in Britain with a total income of about $10 million a year, about four times the amount that was spent on public industrial research before the war.

To explain what research could do, Sir Edward described the results of a scientific study of American and British industry, which had shown that American workers did not work faster or harder than British workers but they worked more effectively. And he thought that one of the reasons why British industry was not up to American standards was that management and labor in Britain had made unsatisfactory agreements about working methods, speed of work and bonus systems.

BUDDIES ON RE-SAW: These three IWA-CIO members work on what they call the No. 1 Re-Saw, which cuts about 90,000 ft. of lumber a day. A. E. Harper (center), has worked for at the big Weyerhaeuser plant for 20 years. Bert Relf (left) says he's just a "greenhorn" at the plant—there about a year. He's a line-up man. CIO Parley Group Sees Giant Sawmill

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE noise was terrific. We yelled futilely into one anothers' ears as we walked gingerly along the network of catwalks, inclines and up and down rough stairs, watching the operations of the huge sawmill, roaring, buzzing and shrieking angrily all around us.

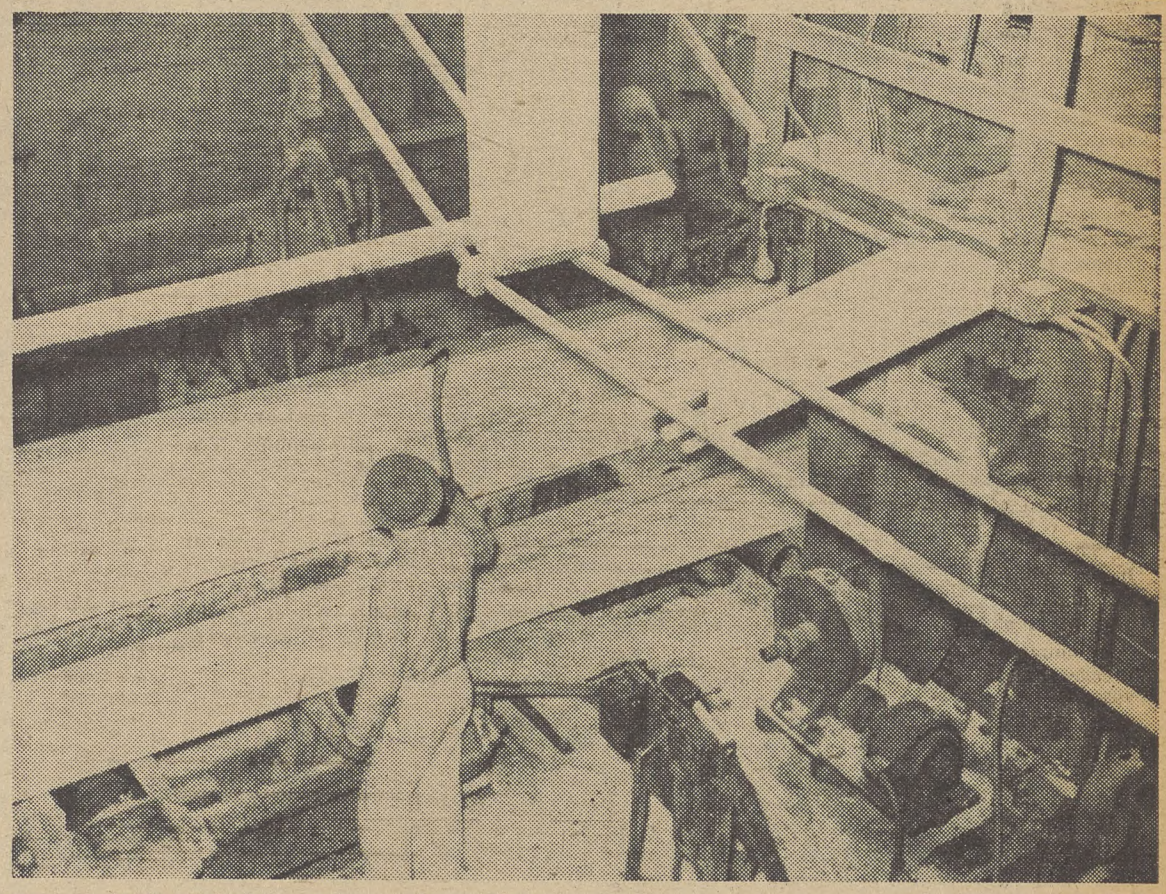
The CIO convention in Portland had just ended, and a group of us who wanted to see something of the big industry of the Northwest from the inside, were visiting a plant of the Weyerhaeuser Company at Longview, Wash., about 50 miles from Portland, a trip arranged through the courtesy of officials of the CIO International Woodworkers of America.

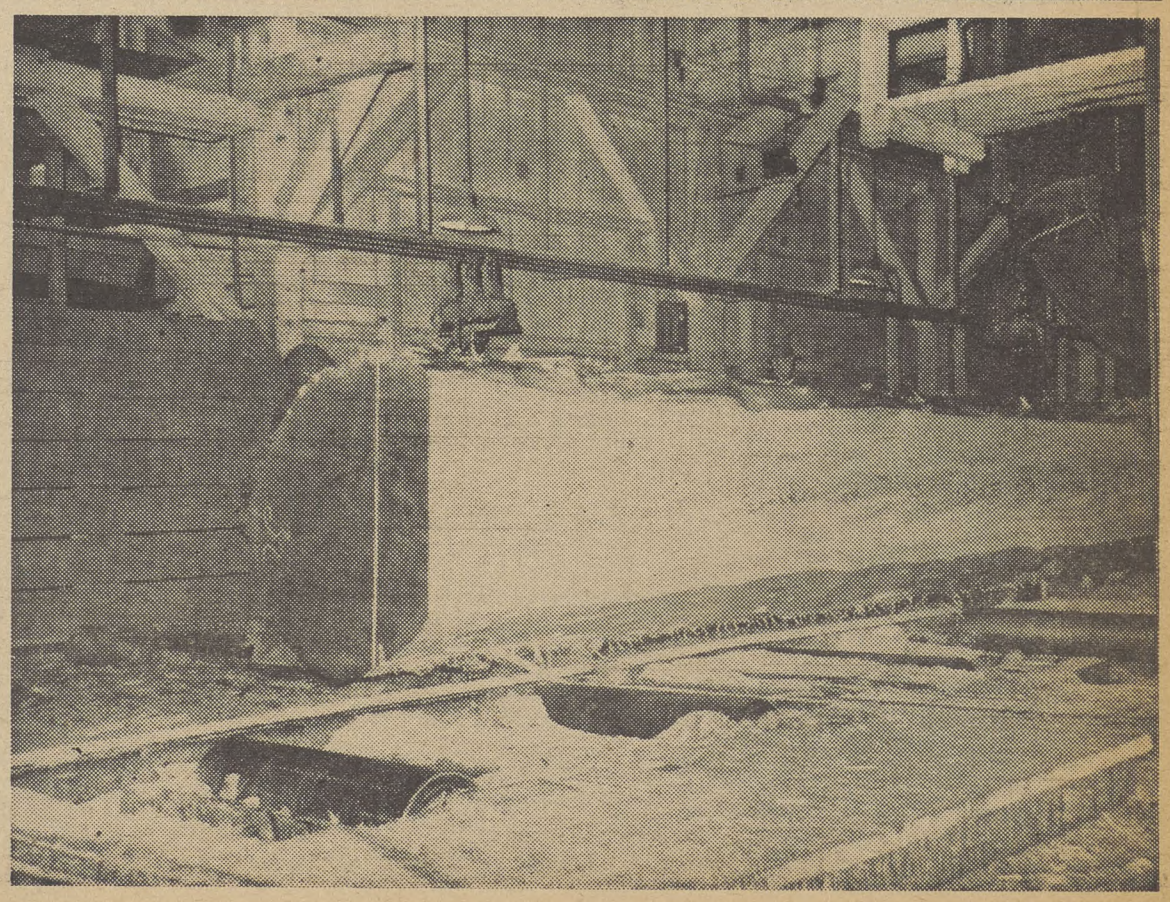
The union, which has its international headquarters in Portland has some 100,000 members working in the lumber centers of the United States and Canada, 14,000 of them in the Columbia River District which is IWA Dist. 5.

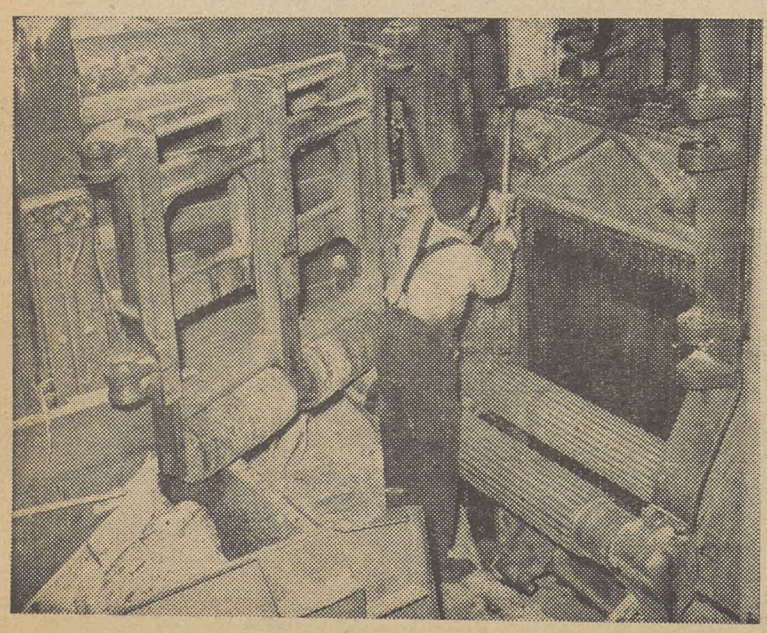
ROLAND Roley, district organizer, and Max Gardner, business agent for Local 5-3 in Portland, who guided the CIO party through the plant, said it was the biggest sawmill in world. We believe it also made the biggest racket.

Some of the operations the CIO party saw at the plant are shown in the pictures on this page taken by Leland Beard, vice-president of the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers of America, one of the convention delegates who made the trip.

The big greasy rollers which are sliding the naked logs along, after they've been skinned of their bark, to be cut into huge slices first and then into smaller slices and finally into boards, are called carriages. Don't ask us what the other machinery is called. We don't know, and we couldn't hear what anybody said. What we remember most vividly was the awful noise, and the respect we felt for the workers who endure it.







Documented Report Says:

D. C. Segregation Stems From 'Special Interests'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THERE'S something wrong in Washington, capital of the democratic United States and the most important political center in the world today.

The "something" is segregation by race or color—a policy that tragically limits the rights and privileges of a third of the citizens of Washington. And segregation in the capital city is doing this country endless harm in its relations with the rest of the world—a world in which only one out of three people happens to have a white skin.

A spotlight on the harm to Americans at home and to Americans abroad was flashed last week on the Washington discrimination scandal by a thoroughly documented report of the National Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital.

The report was prepared under the direction of Joseph D. Lohman of Chicago. The project was headed by George Shuster, president of Hunter College in New York. Its sponsors are a hundred leading citizens—among them Pres. Murray, Secy.-Treas. Carey and Vice-Pres. Reuther of the CIO; Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; several members of the President's Committee on Civil Rights; and a number of leading writers, ministers, educators and professional people.

THE report underlines the fact that racial discrimination in Washington is getting worse, not better. And the trouble stems, the report flatly charges, not from the poor white people but from "men of acknowledged culture and refinement, the leaders of the community."

While "officially" the city of Washington is managed by three commissioners appointed by the President of the United States, "unofficially" it is run by the dominant real estate, commercial and financial interests, formally organized as the Board of Trade, according to the report.

"Those are the special interests which have planned the segregation of Negroes in housing, jobs, theaters, restaurants, parks and playgrounds," the report states.

Although Washington's population increased from 620,000 to 1,200,000 between 1930 and 1947, the proportion of Negroes dropped from 33.6% to 30%.

Grant Arrested

Seventy-five years ago, Pres. Ulysses S. Grant was arrested by a Negro policeman for driving a spirited team of horses at a dangerous rate of speed.

Pres. Grant congratulated the cop for doing his duty, and put up the necessary $20 cash bond for a "traffic violation."

But while white residents have been spreading out in the cities, the Negro population has been crowded together in black belts. In those small areas population has grown, crowding has become the familiar pattern.

WHAT those slum conditions mean to Washington Negroes is easily seen from the statistics:

1. 70% of Washington slum dwellers are colored. The 30% of the population which is Negro has 69% of the tuberculosis deaths.

2. In 1946, a newborn Negro baby had exactly half the chance of a white baby to live through infancy. Six Negro mothers died in childbirth for each white mother so afflicted. One-quarter of the city's 12 private hospitals exclude Negro patients—and the remainder allow them only a limited number of beds in segregated wards.

"In the treatment of illness, segregation is worse than it was 60 years ago," says the report. "Colored people can be segregated, but not disease and death. Bacteria know no color line."

3. Schools for colored children are far inferior to those for whites.

Most of the buildings were built before the First World War; a third were built before the Spanish-American War; and another third acquired since 1900 have been old buildings formerly used by white students. Playgrounds, gymnasiums, athletic fields, auditoriums, class rooms, desks, maps, blackboards, shop fixtures—all are inferior.

Negro schools are too few in number and too small in size. In 1947, 15% of the city's colored children were getting only part-time instruction. In the same year, the schools for white children were only three-fourths filled.

4. Job discrimination is complete and systematic. Negroes are excluded from most skilled trades, in many cases through the policies of AFL craft unions, and from whole industries by management policies.

Washington Negroes work longer hours than white workers; they go to work at an earlier age. Their opportunities in trade, commerce, utilities, communications and transport are limited. In the city government they are limited "almost exclusively" to jobs as laborers, janitors and elevator operators.

In the federal government, "equal opportunity" is largely a matter of flouted regulations. Uncle Sam, the report says, is "systematically denying" equal opportunity to Negroes, despite laws and Executive Orders. Some improvement was made among the war agencies—but it has largely been wiped out since V-J Day.

THIS discrimination pattern was not always in effect.

"Jim Crow seems to have been first recognized in the administration of William Howard Taft," the report recalls, "but segregation did not become general government policy until the presidency of Woodrow Wilson." At that time a flock of "white supremacy" advocates came into Congress, and the clock started to run backwards.

"Negroes lost what rights they had previously enjoyed in Washington theaters and restaurants, and were systematically segregated in housing and private employment. . . . The colored people of Washington have never recovered from the blow that struck them in the time of Woodrow Wilson."

Benjamin Banneker, a Negro, was appointed by George Washington to serve on the Commission which surveyed and laid out the capital city of the United States. But of the city which he helped design, a visitor from India said this year:

"I would rather be an Untouchable in the Hindu caste system than a Negro in Washington."

What can we do about it?

Says the report of the National Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital: "We must mean what we say, and give people of all races, an equal chance to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

"When people are divided by a master-race theory, liberty and justice are impossible. Nowhere is this plainer than in the Capital, where one-quarter of the population is segregated according to color. Here we have been building ghettoes of the mind, body and spirit."

It's time we tore down those ghettoes.

Who Really Runs Washington

Who runs the city government in the vote-less national capital?

In theory, it's a three-member board of Commissioners appointed by the President; actually, it's the powerful Board of Trade.

This organization was described by Rep. Deane (D. N.C.) as a "glorified chamber of commerce which represents the business, banking and . . . professional interests. . . . It has a membership of about 8,000—only 1% of the population of the District. . . . By any standard of measurement it is the most powerful single organization in Washington. Its board of Directors, numbering 40 powerful men, determine its policies and actions."

These trade and real estate interests control housing, have powerful influences in the city government's most important bodies, and control the federations of citizens associations.

Women Are Helping Lick Britain's Labor Shortage

MARGARET BONDFIELD, former Minister of Labor in Great Britain and the first woman to hold a post in the British cabinet, was in Washington last week.

CIO'ers who attended the National CIO convention at Detroit, in 1941, will perhaps remember the cheerful little gray-haired, spectacled British woman with the round, pleasant face and engaging smile.

At the 1941 convention, Miss Bondfield told briefly of the hunger, suffering and death the Nazi blitz had brought to her country, particularly to the children, and in behalf of the British Trades Union Congress, she warmly thanked the CIO for its sponsorship of a union drive for funds to aid the child victims of the war.

She has again come to America with a story to tell. This time it is the story of the bitter, stubborn and successful struggle the British people are making to pull themselves out of the dreary mess the war left in their country.

At a press conference held at the Dept. of Labor, Miss Bondfield described some of the production problems the British are working tirelessly to solve, in the mining, steel and other industries, and explained why it is so important for English labor to have the understanding and help of the workers.

Shortage of labor is one of the biggest problems at present, Miss Bondfield stated. Industrial employment is now at its peak with about 23 million out of a total population of 47 million working.

This has meant a tremendous increase in the employment of women, she said. Between 10 and 11 million are now working, only two million less than the number of men employed. Many of these women never worked before. They include young girls going to work for the first time and housewives. Many of the latter worked in war industry, but left their jobs after the end of the war and then returned to factories to work on a part-time or full-time basis, some for patriotic reasons, some because they needed the money.

MISS Bondfield says Britain has the best politically educated women in the world, and she thinks the part they are now playing in helping get England back on her feet industrially has added greatly to their knowledge of national and world affairs.

Questioned as to whether women have equal pay for equal work, Miss Bondfield said, "Alas, no, British women don't have it, but it will come, slowly." She said she regretted that the minimum working age was 15 years, instead of 16, but this will be changed later, she believes, when the labor shortage becomes less acute.

MISS BONDFIELD, born in 1873 in Chard, Somerset, the tenth of 11 children of a factory worker, has been active in the trade union and Labor Party movement since her early youth. In 1899 she became the assistant secretary of the Shop Assistant's Union, and from then on she rose rapidly in the union movement.

She was elected a national officer of the National Union of General & Municipal Workers and served on the General Council of the Trades Union Congress from 1918 to 1924.

One of the early leaders of the Independent Labor Party, Miss Bondfield sat in Parliament as the Labor member for Northampton from 1923-24, and when the first Labor Government was formed in 1924 she was called upon to be a junior Minister—Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labor.

SHE was returned to Parliament again from 1926 to 1931, this time for Wallsend, and in 1929 she was made Minister of Labor, the first woman to sit in the British Cabinet.

During the last 10 years, Miss Bondfield, now 75, "has left the active fight to younger warriors, but men and women of the younger generation still go to her to draw on her wisdom and experience," states the British Information Service, which is sponsoring her lecture tour this winter in the United States.

Lame-Duck Unit Would Bar Farm Workers From Unions

A TASTE of what labor laws might have been like under a Dewey administration was offered last week by a lame-duck subcommittee of the House Labor Committee.

A high proportion of GOP members of the committee were defeated in the November elections, including one member of the three-man group which last week suggested that labor unions be prohibited from organizing among farm workers.

Headed by Rep. Wint Smith (R. Kans.), the group opined that such union activity would "destroy" independent farmers. The report was based on hearings held in three cities and three western states during the summer of 1947.

Principal point of the committee's "suggestions" was that the agricultural exemption written into the Taft-Hartley Act be broadened out. The exemption has worked against the interests of many workers on "factory farms" and food processing plants throughout the agricultural states.

But the Republican sub-committee's report will receive little recognition, it is believed, from the New Deal leadership expected to take over direction of the House Labor Committee in January.

Big Libel Suit Against Pegler

Westbrook Pegler, heavy-handed Hearst columnist, is on the receiving end of a $2 million libel suit.

Suit was filed in a Chicago court by Maurice Parmelee, economist for the U. S. Railroad Retirement Board. The government official claims that in a column last June, Pegler created the false impression that Parmelee is a Communist.

In another column last September, the suit charges, Pegler discussed nudists and "gave the public to understand he (Parmelee) engaged in depraved private or public practices."

The libel suit is also directed against the Illinois Publishing & Printing Co., publisher of the Hearst paper in Chicago which carried the Pegler columns.

Attorneys Seek 'Closed Shop'

Florida lawyers apparently feel the state's anti-closed shop law applies to everybody but lawyers.

The Florida Bar Association has asked the state supreme court to require all Florida lawyers to join a self-governing professional organization. Such a group, requiring annual dues payments, would have powers to discipline over the membership, with its actions reviewable by the courts.

The Supreme Court turned down a similar petition 10 years ago. A Florida anti-labor law, passed two years ago, prohibits all forms of closed shop in union contracts throughout the state.

If the lawyers group gets its way, attorneys will be the only people who can enjoy closed shop rights in Florida.

GI's Will Be Eligible To Sit On Courts Martial

RESPONDING to three years of pressure by civilians who spent World War II in uniform, the Army will inaugurate what it says is a new deal in military justice next Feb. 1, it was announced at Washington, D. C. The CIO was among the organizations that called for improvement in military justice.

Court martial procedure will be changed, the Army said, partly through legislative mandate written into the draft act of 1948, and partly through the Army's own inspiration. Army Secy. Kenneth C. Royall said the new court martial rules "provide the means of a better and more equitable administration of military justice," and will make Army court procedure more like that in civilian life.

1. Coercion of courts martial and the use of improper measures to secure confessions of the accused are forbidden.

2. The accused must be furnished defense counsel with legal training equal to that of the prosecutor.

3. Enlisted men are "eligible to sit as members of general and special courts martial when requested by the accused."

The Army described this last change as "an experiment which may enhance the confidence of enlisted persons in the basic fairness of court martial action."

'If the Farmer Gave Away Wheat, Loaf Would Cost 14.7c'

WHO is making a huge profit on the high-priced food Americans are buying?

Not the farmer, says John W. Sims, secretary of the Ohio Farm Bureau, and he cites figures to prove his contention.

"If the farmer gave away the wheat for a 16-cent loaf of bread, it would still cost 14.7 cents in the bakery," Sims said.

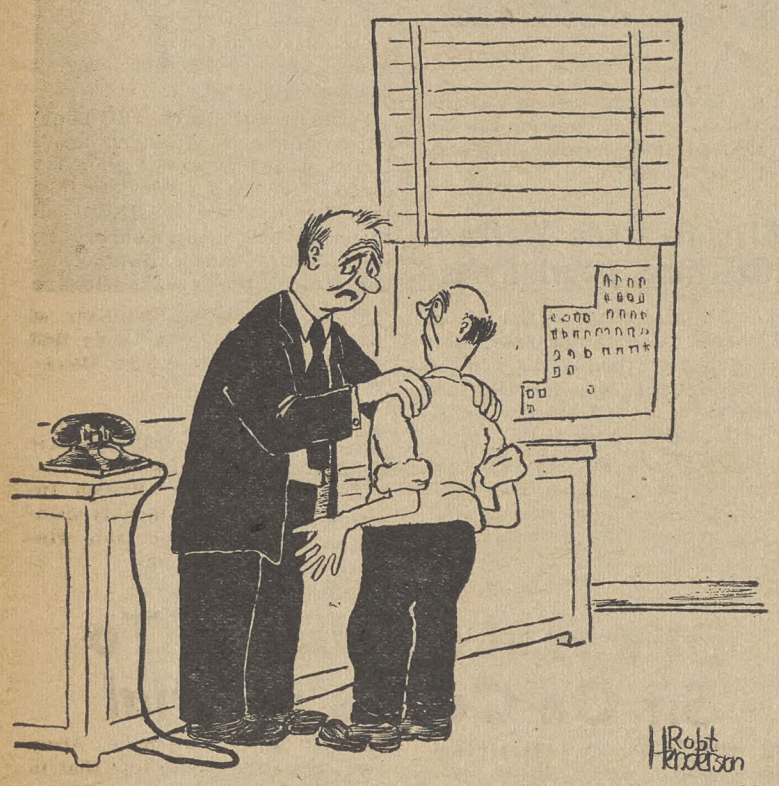
His figures revealed that the high cost of food results, almost invariably, from the middle-man's profits.

Sims added:

"If the farmer gave away the livestock for $10 worth of meat it cost you $44.30.

"If the farmer gave away the livestock for $10 worth of meant it would still cost $4.90 in the butcher shop.

"If the farmer gave away his milk, it would cost consumers 12 cents delivered to the door."



"I, too, have my problems, Wharton. I've got to support a wife and two Cadillacs."

Parley Planned To Set Up Another N.Y. City CIO Unit

A CONFERENCE to create a new organization to replace the now defunct Greater New York CIO Council will be held sometime late in January, according to Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council.

The charter of the old left-wing city council was revoked about three weeks ago by the CIO executive board at a meeting in Portland, Ore. The Council's officers announced that they would not appeal the decision to the convention.

Pending formation of a new group, Hollander said that all matters involving the city council would be handled by the State CIO. The question of liquidating the old council's obligations, he stated, would be taken up when the State CIO meets in Syracuse, N. Y., beginning Dec. 15.

Hollander said that debts totaling nearly $10,000 including printers' bills and staff salaries, and assets of less than $300 were left by the old council. He added that while the State Council did not feel morally or legally bound to pay off the debts, it did not want "to take it out on the staff or the printers."

The new organization to be formed, Hollander stated, will operate on a democratic basis, as a true central labor body, "not as an adjunct of the Cominform or the Kremlin."

Declaring that the present location, name and policies of the Greater New York CIO Council would all be changed, Hollander said the new council "will be set up on the basis of national and state CIO policies," and will be "devoted to promoting not opposing, CIO policies."

All unions functioning in the New York area, including left-wing groups represented in the former council will be invited to send delegates both to the State CIO Convention and to the conference at which the new council will be set up, Hollander declared. Each local will be represented and will vote on the basis of the per capita it pays, he said.

Management Is Seen Blocking Safety in Ohio

Ohio's industrial accident and occupational disease claims in 1947 were nearly double the 1938 total, the state Industrial Commission reports.

The Commission says a permanent, state-wide safety campaign by both management and Labor "is imperative." The Ohio CIO Council has long and vigorously fought for such a joint campaign.

In its annual report, the Industrial Commission touched briefly on the big obstacle to such a program — management's refusal to spend the money necessary to insure industrial safety.

AMA Plots Health Plan Burial

THE American Medical Association will attempt to bury plans for a national health program under a blanket of money.

The association's house of delegates—meeting at St. Louis, Mo.—has announced that it will raise $3½ million to fight the proposed legislation—promised by President Truman during the election campaign.

The money will be raised by $25 levy on the association's 140,000 members, it was announced.

This fund is in addition to $1 million which the National Physicians Committee, AMA subsidiary, plans to raise from doctors and drug firms.

The physicians, however, apparently are not united:

1. Dr. Channing Frothingham, twice president of the Massachusetts Medical Society and chairman of the Committee for the Nation's Health, contended the AMA's house of delegates is not representative of the association's 140,000 members.

He said the action "is likely to precipitate a grass-roots rebellion among the ranks of American doctors.

"It is particularly disturbing to note that although many physicians of the AMA's membership support national health insurance, the proposal to embark on a Nation-wide multi-million-dollar campaign against it was not made known to the membership in advance of the closed session at which the decision was reached."

2. Dr. Paul Hawley indicated that the Blue Cross will proceed with a proposal to strengthen voluntary health programs by providing a "package" to be offered the public, despite the fact that the proposal did not receive AMA cooperation.

'DIMES' POSTER GIRL

Selected March of Dimes poster girl for the 1949 fund drive, 4-year-old Linda Brown of San Antonio, Texas, a polio victim two years ago, is well on the road to health. Linda's treatment was paid for with money received from the March of Dimes fund.

GE Pays Off $25 Million Loan; 'Need for Cash Not So Great'

GENERAL Electric Co. has decided to pay off immediately $25 million of a $50 million bank loan it negotiated in 1946, it was announced by GE Pres. Charles E. Wilson, who added the "company's need for cash is not so great."

The money was borrowed for five years with the privilege of prepaying all or any part of it on 30 days' notice.

For the first nine months of this year, GE profits totalled $83,893,459. The Wall St. Journal on Dec. 1 said "profits for 1948 are expected to be the largest in the history of the company, exceeding last year's $95,298,000 by a substantial margin."

When the CIO Electrical Workers were seeking a wage increase from GE last spring, a company spokesman said:

"Increased wages will do absolutely no good unless our own employes and those of other companies who receive wage increases put away in saving the total of such increases . . . as well as holding onto their old savings."

Because of rising prices it is doubtful whether many GE employes were able to follow this advice.

GE did better.

Pamphlet Answers Union Queries On Movies, Strips

DOES your union show movies? Do the education committee members know where and how to get good films for union showings? Would your union be interested in getting its own equipment for showing movies and film strips?

Then why not write for a free copy of the new 16-page catalog, "Films for Labor," just issued by the Film Division, CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

This pamphlet not only gives an extensive list of 16mm. films and film strips suitable for union showings, but it tells how to buy or rent films, how to obtain film equipment at a discount, and how to use films to arouse discussion at meetings.

Recommended films are listed under these subject headings:

The Development of Unionism, Fighting Discrimination, International Problems, Political Action, Domestic Problems, Farmer-Labor Cooperation and Free Films.

The films are described, and the rental price and showing time specified.

The CIO Film Division will also be glad to put teachers and others working in the audio-visual field on the mailing list to receive film releases.

FTA Locals Ask Change In N. C. Jobless Pay Law

Demands that a wage floor of 75c an hour for a 40-hour week be set on any job to which unemployed North Carolina workers may be referred as "suitable employment" were made at Raleigh N. C., at a joint conference of CIO Food and Tobacco Workers locals.

They charged that the present unemployment compensation law of North Carolina threatens workers in all industries with "potential strikebreakers" and forces Negro women to seek house work "under slave conditions."

A CLEVER LINE?

This is the cover of a pamphlet issued by the National Association of Real Estate Boards which seeks to prove that anyone wanting low-cost housing is just asking for charity.

CIO Offers Program in N. J.

A COMPREHENSIVE 22-point state legislative program for 1949 has been formulated by the New Jersey CIO's legislative committee and forwarded to Governor Driscoll for inclusion in his annual message to the State Legislature, according to Harry Kranz, State CIO legislative director.

The program includes provisions on unemployment compensation, sickness insurance, workmen's compensation, civil rights, taxation, housing, education, veterans' bonus and elections.

Eight improvements in the unemployment compensation law, including repeal of the worker contribution and an increase in benefits from $22 to $25 per week, plus $3 per dependent up to three dependents, headed the CIO's legislative program.

In the state's new sickness insurance law, the CIO will seek an increase in benefits equal to the increase sought in UCC; repeal of the worker contribution; and repeal of the sections permitting private insurance coverage, Kranz said.

On workmen's compensation, the CIO will call for repeal of the state's private insurance law; and for the establishment of a profit-free state fund. Complete coverage of all industrial diseases will also be sought.

IN THE field of civil rights, the committee voted support for a bill similar to this year's A-512, with "minor strengthening amendments proposed by the Joint Council on Civil Rights." A-512 passed the Assembly, but was killed in the GOP Senate caucus last summer.

Other CIO legislative proposals, Kranz said, include:

Taxation—Repeal of the three-cent per pack cigaret sales tax and support for a state graduated tax on corporation profits or on incomes exceeding $5,000 per year, if new revenue is needed.

Housing—A public referendum on a $100,000,000 bond issue for state public housing, with a written ban against segregated projects.

Education—"Strive for a state university in which the state has majority control of policies and in which increased numbers of youngsters can receive free or substantially less costly education. Neither of these conditions has been met at Rutgers since its designation as the so-called State University."

State licensing and regulation of private schools and state aid for adult education courses were also supported.

Bonus—A cash bonus for veterans up to $800 for overseas service, with funds to come from a bond issue to be paid off by a tax on incomes over $5,000 per year.

Elections—A bill requiring two hours' time off with pay for workers on Election Day.

George Berry Dies

Pres. George L. Berry of the AFL Printing Pressmen's & Assistants Union died Dec. 4 at the Pressmen's Home in Tennessee. He was president of the union for more than 41 years.

PHENOMENAL: This chart, which is from the Labor Dept.'s Information Bulletin, shows that in 13 years, from 1935 to 1948, membership in American labor unions jumped from 4 to 15½ million, a four fold increase attributable, in part, to the New Deal. During the 30-year period, from 1905 to 1930, membership only doubled, rising from 2 to 4 million.

State Councils Will Plan Drive On Anti-Labor Laws

Preparations for a concerted drive to bring about repeal of anti-labor legislation are expected to be made at the annual conference of CIO State Industrial Union Councils Jan. 4-6 in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' center, Chicago, Ill.

"Many critical issues are before us for consideration," CIO Councils' Director John Brophy said in a letter to the councils. "There must be a concerted drive to repeal anti-labor legislation in the states.

"There must be strong support for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. Much progressive state and federal legislation must be passed. Our political action work must be carried on. All the other activities of our councils must be intensified."

Educational Parley Planned By UAW

Delegates from the hundreds of locals in the CIO Auto Workers will attend a four-day international education conference to be held by the UAW next Jan. 20-23 at the Hotel Schroeder, Milwaukee, Wis.

Conference subjects include pensions, health programs, union counselling, political action, farmer-labor relations, housing, public relations and many other topics of interest to unionists.

Give Bermuda Workers Overtime, Court Rules

A 5-4 majority of the U. S. Supreme Court declared last week that wartime workers in the lend-lease base at Bermuda are entitled to overtime pay under the U. S. wage-hour law.

The majority opinion said that Congress would have had such workers covered by the law if the wartime base situation had been foreseen. American nationals in U. S. possessions, it was pointed out, are covered by the act.

The NLRB will face the court, arguing that the Stowe Spinning Co. and three other firms jointly owning a North Carolina mill town, were properly ordered to let the CIO Textile Workers Union use the only hall in town for a meeting. Refusing to concede the NLRB verdict of unfair labor practices, the companies have fought the NLRB in courts for more than two years. Their unfair acts occurred in Jan. 1945.

Scabs Kept To Load U.S. Army Ships

ALTHOUGH the bitter west coast maritime strike was settled with a three-year agreement, 250 scab longshoremen are still being retained to work Army cargo under Army Dept. orders, it was learned at Washington, D. C.

The men were put on government payrolls by the Army during the strike. They were hired directly by the Army, outside of the regular west coast hiring halls. They are now handling Army cargo at Ft. Mason Army base in Oakland, Calf.

During the strike the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union offered to handle all Army cargo. The Army refused to take men directly from the ILWU, although it had done so during the war. Before independent stevedoring firms broke ranks with the Waterfront Employers Associate and offered to hire union men for the Army jobs, the Army hired the scabs.

D. C. Parley Discusses Wage Laws For Women

Minimum wage legislation for women was discussed at the annual conference on the subject held last week by the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Womens Bureau.

Administrators of wage laws for women from most of the states of the union, as well as Alaska and Puerto Rico attended the conference.

Topics discussed included occupational coverage, expediting wage board operations, the problem of finding qualified board members, and operation of the most advanced laws in various states.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

Dir. Paul E. Miley of Region 2A, UAW, reports that in an NLRB election at the Ternstedt GM Plant, Columbus, Ohio, the employes of the tool room voted 131 to 53 in favor of the UAW-CIO. Regional GM Reps. W. Sneary and J. Troeter, assisted by L. Ress of the Skilled Trades Department, carried on the organizatinal campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a recent NLRB election at the Niles Cement Pond Co., West Hartford, Conn., the workers voted as follows: UAW 1098; UAW-AFL 452; no union 71.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone also reports that the employes of the Benedict & Co. in New Haven, Conn., in a State LRB election voted in favor of PJNW-CIO, which polled 8; no union 0; 11 eligible.

USAPWA Secy.-Treas. John C. Lawson announces that in an NLRB election at the Vermont plant of the American Fork & Hoe Co., in Wallingford, the workers voted 90 to 31 in favor of USAPWA. Brother Lawson reports further that in a Union Shop election, the employes of the Sargent Roundy Corp. in Randolph, Vt., voted unanimously (20-0) for the union shop.

He also reports that in an NLRB election, the employes of the Pittsburgh Silica Sand Co., Everett, Pa., voted 34 to 1 in favor of the union shop. During the same week the workers of Branch No. 60 employed by the Hiram Swank Sons Co. voted 33 to 1 in favor of the same.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sander reports that victories in the following NLRB elections: Rodic Corp., New Brunswick, N. J., 61 voted in favor of URWA; 29 against; 1 vote challenged; District Dir. O. H. Bosley reported that Rep. Joseph Cramer was in charge.

Slick Shine Co., Newark, N. J., 24 voted in favor of UGCCWA; 15 for no union; 5 votes were challenged; Rep. Frank Gallagher assisted by Arthur Chapin was in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in an NLRB election held at the Denver Equipment Co., the workers voted 16 to 12 in favor of UAW-CIO.

CIO Field Rep. Joseph Lovas reports that in an NLRB election at Langtry Photo Service, Buffalo, N. Y., the employes voted 10 to 4 in favor of the CIO Paperworkers. One vote was challenged.

Convention Reflections

The CIO Convention held in the city of Portland is now history. It will long be remembered, not only for what happened, but the course it chartered for our movement. Delegates realize that the presidential election victory is just the beginning. Work and more work is the slogan.

The first objective is to intensify our drives in the field of organizing the unorganized—the real purpose for which the CIO was created. The Convention let it be known that those who fail in this objective are accountable to the officers of the National CIO Executive Board. Our CIO union members expect more and more organization so that their economic interests and freedoms can be bulwarked and advanced.

I had the opportunity to address the Transport Workers' Convention in Chicago en route from Portland. The delegates at that convention were determined that their union be built on the framework of loyalty to the CIO and following of CIO policy and its objectives. These delegates reelected Michael Quill as President, and elected Gustav Faber as Secretary Treasurer and an Executive Board to guide their destiny, with these objectives in mind.

The strike on the Pacific Coast involving the Longshoremen, Marine Cooks, and Radio Association has been settled. These unions requested that President Murray step in and bring about negotiations to settle this strike. Both myself and Asst. Organizational Dir. R. J. Thomas joined with the officers of these unions and brought about and participated in negotiations.

I commend both R. J. Thomas and Richard Leonard for their fine work and for staying on the job all during the CIO Convention in Portland. The unions involved demonstrated that they are real union men. Unflinching they stood together through some fifteen weeks of strike and their ranks remained solid and unbroken. The CIO has guaranteed faithful performance of the contractual terms with every confidence that the above-mentioned unions will carry out this pledge. The terms of the contract were a great step forward. The members of these unions will be found united in this great army of human betterment and, with the facts presented to them, they can be relied upon to stand "four square" with the CIO and CIO policy.

After Victory At TWU Parley

QUILL SAYS: 'WE'RE BACK WITH MURRAY, CIO'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

FOUR days before the 6th biennial convention of the CIO Transport Workers opened, in Chicago, the area's top CIO leaders refused invitations from the TWU executive board to attend the sessions.

The leaders, Joseph Germano, president of the Illinois CIO, and Michael Mann, secretary of the Chicago CIO and CIO regional director, refused because they declared the majority of the TWU board was defying CIO policy.

The day after the convention opened, the leaders accepted invitations from the new executive board to attend.

The reason for the change of heart? It had happened in the course of one day. TWU Pres. Michael Quill had won a smashing victory.

The former majority was completely wiped out in a union election. Quill swept into office with him a group of vice presidents and executive board members sworn to carry out CIO policy. "We are now back alongside of Philip Murray and alongside CIO," declared Quill.

It had been a noisy day—that opening day of the convention. There were many speeches—in the 32 brogues of Ireland, in New York accents, in Southern and Midwestern and Far Western tones. All sides were intense.

The issue was this clearcut:

Quill: "These men are beholden to the Communist Party line and are defying CIO policy. I'm with the CIO and Phil Murray."

The opposition (led by Austin Hogan and Douglas L. MacMahon, who did not run for reelection as secretary-treasurer): "Quill is attempting to set up a one-man dictatorship; he wants to steamroll the convention so he can be in full control."

Quill's forces, in which he had the almost solid backing of delegates from the big New York and Philadelphia locals, moved fast to achieve their victory. One of the first orders of business was the report of the Rules Committee, which called for an election at 6 P. M. that opening day.

They argued: "This convention cannot get down to business as long as obstructionists are in office. Let's do the job now!"

The other side said that was not the way to do it. "Let's get all the issues on the floor and then elect men who'll back the convention decisions."

The delegates backed Quill's plan by a three (or better) to one vote.

QUILL defeated Hogan, who is president of TWU Local 100, New York, by 473 to 186 on a roll call vote. Hogan had been executive vice president of the international. That office was abolished.

Gustav Faber, of the Quill camp, was elected secretary-treasurer, defeating Hugh O'Donnell, Local 234, Philadelphia, by a vote of 463 to 209. Three-quarters of Local 234 delegates voted for Faber, who is secretary-treasurer of Local 100, New York.

Faber, a native of Hamburg, Germany, transferred his union membership from the German Metal Workers to the Machinists less than a month after coming to America.

Swept out of office along with MacMahon and Hogan was John Santo, organization director, whose post was abolished. From the executive board, 17 members in all were ousted.

After that was done, the convention got down to other business. It adopted resolution after resolution backing CIO policies on such matters as the third party, the Marshall Plan, etc.

One of the major actions was that on wages.

The convention unanimously adopted a wage plan which calls a minimum wage of $2 an hour and a 40-hour week for all transit workers.

The delegates also adopted a constitutional change, modeled on a clause in the Steelworkers' constitution, barring Communists and their "consistent supporters" from union office. There was no opposition.

MOST touching scene of the convention was a visit from 12 striking members of the Intl. Typographical Union, who have been out for more than a year against Chicago newspapers.

Many TWU members have been on strike themselves. In their historical fashion, they took these stikers, led by ITU Local 16 Pres. John Pilch, to their hearts.

The convention officially donated $500. Then, local after local and delegate after delegate stood up and made contributions until a total of nearly $4,000 was reached. Quill, Faber and others gave personal contributions of $100 each.

There was hardly a dry eye in the hall when Frank McGuckin, Local 234, took the mike and in a voice broken with emotion, contributed $20 "in the name of my father, John McGuckin, who was shot in the back and killed by a scab in the 1910 Philadelphia traction strike."

When the money all had been handed up—the working press gave, too—Pilch, wiping tears from his eyes, said "you're the greatest bunch of trade unionists I've ever met."

Pilch had been high in his praise of CIO support for the ITU strike. He particularly lauded Mann.

JOHN Lopez, president of Local 101, the utility division, assailed Quill for failing to include a member of 101 on the executive board. Lopez announced that 101 would stay in TWU, but that his delegation would leave the convention.

The convention, after the new officers were chosen (they took office immediately) heard several addresses. They included:

Allan S. Haywood, CIO Org. Director: "I don't give a damn for the Wallacites." He also brought greetings from President Murray.

Mayor Martin Kennelly, Chicago: "I am proud of the cooperation I have received from the CIO."

Michael Mann: "You have done a heroic job."

Rev. John Cantwell, Catholic Labor Alliance: "The Taft-Hartley Law should be repealed."

Joseph Germano: "We of Illinois won a smashing victory this fall without the aid of the Communists."

Rabbi Louis Weinstein: "The 81st Congress must give the government back to the people."

Theodore Kheel, for Mayor O'Dwyer, of New York: "Let the Communists stand up and be counted."

While the opposition fought hard, its spokesmen announced after Quill had won that their locals would stay with TWU and not secede, as some newspapers had reported they were planning to do.

Gustav Faber

Sacher Sacked

The TWU has dismissed Harry Sacher, its general counsel for more than 10 years.

Sacher, who had been at odds with Quill for some time, recently was dismissed as attorney for Local 100, TWU. Quill accused him of following the Communist party line.

The TWU chose John F. O'Donnell, its special counsel, as general counsel. O'Donnell, a native of Ireland, has been an attorney for 11 years. He has a wife and four children.

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 20, 1948 82 No. 51

There Is 'Good Will Toward Men' And . . .

You turned on your radio and you heard the familiar Yuletide tunes and the familiar words, "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

Then the news commentator told about war in China, hunger, mistrust and a struggle for power in Europe, unrest and bloodshed south of our own border.

Perhaps you were a bit cynical about the whole situation. Maybe you became increasingly aware of the great need for the brotherhood which Christ preached.

Around you—if you looked for the right things—you found men of good will and little incidents which gave you new faith in humanity.

You found such things as the generosity of the Nace sisters of Harrisburg, Pa. (below), who walked into a toy mission and turned over their three pet dogs "so some other little boy or girl could have a pet for Christmas."

CIO Economists Say

'High Price-itis' Causes Layoffs

By GLORIA CAPLAN

GREENWICH and Stamford, Conn., were in a dither last week over a rash of layoffs and production curtailment in the area, and the alarmed Manufacturers' Council of the two cities called a meeting of community and state leaders in an effort to discover the monkey-wrench.

But Greenwich and Stamford were not alone in their anxiety. Elsewhere around the country both labor leaders and business men were wondering "what gives here."

With corporate profits running at the highest rate in history, industries throughout the country were curtailing production, and laying off workers, and retailers were noting slumps in pre-Christmas sales.

Industrial spokesmen volunteered all sorts of explanations—layoffs were "seasonal," employment had been abnormally high and is just now levelling off, workers' productivity was low, etc. None—none that made the newspapers, anyway—advanced the obvious possibility that prices are too high, and that consumers may be reaching the end of their budgets' "expendability."

Possibility that some industrialists are exploiting the situation in order to head off arguments for 1949 wage increases was suggested by the New York Times' business columnist C. F. Hughes Dec. 12.

Wrote Hughes: "In industry there was considerable news of layoffs for one reason or another until a suspicion was formed that some word had been passed along that it would be a good thing for Chamber of Commerce secretaries and others to publicize such information. The object required no Sherlock Holmes.

"If industry is firing instead of hiring, then a fourth round of wage increases is scarcely in order."

However much the layoffs have been exaggerated in some areas, the fact remains that CIO unions in the shoe, textile, clothing, electrical appliance and machine tool industries are having to cope with the problem first hand. In addition department store pre-Christmas sales in each of the last three weeks have fallen off from the same week last year.

All these symptoms spell just one thing, say CIO economists—"high price-itis." Since the death of OPA the CIO has warned that ultimately high prices would result in consumer resistance, necessitating production cutbacks and unemployment.

(That poor sales could be laid at the door of high prices was underscored by a report out of Chicago recently that mail-order companies plan to slice their average prices by 5 to 10% in the new Spring catalogues.)

Concerned over the increasing production cutbacks, the CIO's Full Employment Committee last week offered its prescription to the President's Council of Economic Advisers. In a memorandum to the Council the Committee outlined proposals for a comprehensive anti-inflation program, including a program for expanding productive capacity in industries now serving as bottlenecks, such as steel and electric power.

Such expansion would require the following steps by the government, the committee suggested:

- Increased appropriations for research and development.
- Subsidies to marginal producers.
- Encouragement of plant expansion through RFC loans.
- Government construction of new facilities.
- The Government to lease or operate such new facilities.

The rest of the anti-inflation program included the following:

- Price controls on industrial products whose prices are still rising, such as steel, tin, nonferrous metal, automobiles and machinery.
- Stand-by power to control other prices when it becomes necessary.
- Roll-back of food prices where reductions have occured at the farm level, but have not been reflected at the consumer level.
- Allocation and rationing authority.
- Extension of consumer credit controls beyond present expiration date.
- Authority to further increase demand and time deposit reserves.
- Undistributed and excess profits taxes.
- All-out drive against monopoly and monopolistic practices.

The memorandum noted that "demand and consequently employment are falling off" in certain industries and urged corrective measures in these particular fields along with enactment of the full anti-inflation program.

All Aboard! On Track Beyond Picket Line!

AN important decision affecting the right to picket has been handed down by a New York City magistrate.

The magistrate (equivalent to a police court judge), Harry G. Andrews, ruled that just about anything that can be done legally on a public street may be done in Manhattan's Pennsylvania Station.

The magistrate thus reasoned in dismissing disorderly conduct charges against four members of Local 906, CIO News Distribution Employes' Union.

The four had been arrested by private railroad police while picketing newsstands of the Union News Co., against which Local 906 has been on strike since Oct. 1. The railroad contended that the station is the line's private property.

MAGISTRATE ANDREWS said he had given more study to this case than to any other that had ever been before him in his 12 years on the bench.

It is a matter of common knowledge, he said, that the station "was not conducted solely for railroad purposes." He noted:

"In the station many stores are located where anything from a hamburger to a dress suit may be purchased. Hence, by becoming realtors, by opening up their property to the general public, the owners of the station have made it a quasi-public place and as such their ownership is circumscribed by the constitutional rights of those who use it.

"The right to picket and publicize a labor dispute is a protected constitutional right of free speech."

He declared the picketing was against the Union News Co., and not against the PRR. He asserted that testimony had "evidenced no acts by the defendants which would have justified their arrests if the picketing had taken place on a public thoroughfare." He also noted that the pickets have been quiet and orderly and few in number.

Samuel Sacher, attorney for the union, said that "numerous other arrests had been made by the PRR for the benefit of Union News." It is his opinion that the Andrews ruling established that the other arrests also are improper. The four men affected directly by the Andrews decision are Charles Barisi, Garson Rosen, Salvatore Bartolotta and Philip Bentivegna.

IN 1946 the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that it was legal to picket and distribute literature in a company-owned town.

The case, which overruled arrests of Jehovah's Witnesses members, affected Chickasaw, Ala. (near Mobile), which is owned by the Gulf Shipbuilding Corp.

Tax Proposal Irks Tycoon

ROBERT G. DUNLOP, president of Sun Oil Co., last week threatened the company would halt all modernization and expansion of facilities if Congress passes an excess profits tax.

Testifying before the profits subcommittee of the joint committee on the economic report, Dunlop told of company plans to build a huge new plant in Toledo, O. Rising prices have increased the projected cost of the plant from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000 since it was planned, he said.

"Are the proponents of the proposed excess profits tax willing to take responsibility for halting the enlargement of our productive facilities?" Dunlop asked the committee. "I am frank to state that if Congress should pass an excess profits tax all plans of our company would inevitably have to be reconsidered."

Dunlop made it plain that the Toledo project would be abandoned. He has stated previously that "good profits" were necessary for big industry to get new capital through sale of stock. Later he said that Sun Oil has a regular policy of financing expansion and replacement through earnings.

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) seized upon these statements as contradictory, and won from the witness an admission that the company had not tried to sell stock in the last 25 years. Then O'Mahoney asked how the government should stop inflation if not through heavier taxes.

"Through monetary policies cutting down the amount of money in circulation," replied Dunlop.

"But wouldn't an excess profits tax cut down the money in circulation if it were used to retire the national debt?" the senator said. "Taxation should be only part of it," Dunlop replied. "What the government should do is stop deficit financing."

"That," replied O'Mahoney, "is just what we want to do. Stop borrowing and start taxing."

Mayors Back TEW Bill

A strong long-range housing bill will be advocated by the nation's mayors, as a result of a fight led by labor-backed city officials from Detroit at the sessions at Washington, D. C., of the American Municipal Association.

At the yearly conference of the municipalities, City Council President George Edwards and Mayor Eugene Van Antwerp took the lead in rewriting and strengthening the cities' housing demands to include passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner long-range housing bill. Both Edwards and Van Antwerp were elected a year ago with solid labor backing.

Getting down to specifics, the municipalities urged that the Congress be asked in the TEW bill to provide for $1 billion in long-term loans for local low-cost housing projects, and special financing to enable replacement of the "temporary" World War II housing projects.

Congress will be asked, also, to keep federal control over wartime public housing projects to the extent necessary to keep them out of the hands of speculators.

A 'Quizzer' Again

IT'S IN THE FAMILY, CIO's entertaining weekly quiz show, comes back on the ABC network Tuesday night, Jan. 4, at 10:30 P. M. EST.

The show, which won radio industry plaudits last year, will be heard in all parts of the country. But you'd better consult your local paper for exact time, since many stations rebroadcast the show at other hours.

If the program is not going to be heard in your city, ask the manager of your local ABC network station to carry "IT'S IN THE FAMILY" starting Jan. 4. The CIO program will be heard for 26 weeks.

Winning couple on each program receives a $100 U. S. bond, while the loser gets a $25 bond as consolation prize.

Members of CIO unions and people in the audience at the ABC studios in Radio City, New York, will appear on the show. They'll be quizzed about current events and facts about American unions and their program.

The questions are asked by Joe O'Brien, one of the best radio quiz masters in the business. The show is produced for CIO by Bill Todman and Marc Goodson, who supervise such popular quiz programs as Hit the Jackpot, Winner Take All, and Stop The Music.

IT'S IN THE FAMILY is good listening, full of chuckles and full of facts you may not have known before. You can test your knowledge against the players on the air—and have a good time, for all your family, too.

LABOR UNITY ON LEGISLATION URGED

THE CIO last week sounded a call for close cooperation among all major labor groups to help win passage of a New Deal legislative program in 1949.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray called on leaders of the AFL and railway brotherhoods to join in a legislative conference "as quickly as possible."

Goal of such a meeting, he said, should be to "coordinate our efforts in support of a common program of legislative measures for the 71st Congress, and of agreeing in principle upon the necessary means to implement such a program."

Murray's letter followed a meeting in Washington on Dec. 14 of CIO's executive officers and nine vice-presidents, who unanimously approved the suggestion for a joint labor conference. The letter was addressed to AFL Pres. William Green; to Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; to H. W. Fraser, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives Association; and to Alvanley Johnson, grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

MURRAY noted that the CIO legislative program, adopted at last month's convention in Portland, is closely related to the platform on which Pres. Truman, Vice President-elect Barkley "and other forward-looking candidates who ran successfully for office."

"Both the CIO and AFL are in substantial agreement in their support of the legislative program to which President Truman and his incoming administration stand pledged," Murray said. "The same holds true with respect to the railway labor unions."

The 80th Congress—"and its evil creature, the Taft-Hartley Act"—were repudiated in the elections, Murray recalled. The new Congress has "a great opportunity and an equally great responsibility."

"The people have voted for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, decent housing, improved social security, adequate minimum wages, relief from inflation, other necessary social legislation, and enactment of a genuine civil rights program," the letter pointed out.

"The results of the 1948 elections clearly establish that the American people stand solidly behind the principles of the New Deal and want these principles translated into constructive action."

Murray said the "entire matter of achieving united action in support of these legislative objectives" was carefully reviewed by the CIO officers at their Dec. 14 meeting. He said that if the proposals for the meeting are accepted, a CIO committee selected from among the organization's "executive officers and vice-presidents" would be selected.

WHEN the CIO News went to press, there had been no reply from officials of the other labor organizations. Pres. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, however, has long been a supporter of the type of joint action suggested in Pres. Murray's letter.

In the past the AFL has tended to couple any suggestion for joint action with a proposal for merger of the two big labor groups. Such a statement, proposing steps leading to "organic unity," was voiced by Green at the AFL convention last month.

Pres. Murray, in his final speech at the CIO's convention in Portland, replied that the CIO "is prepared to meet with representatives of the AFL for the purpose of giving consideration to plans of a social, economic and political nature, designed to advance the cause of the American people."

"We propose to develop," Pres. Murray added at that time, "if it is humanly possible, cooperative relationships not only with that organization but with all other labor organizations in the U. S. A. to look toward the attainment of our common goals."

The last formal meeting between CIO and AFL occurred in May 1947, but at that time the AFL refused to consider any proposition short of merger of the two groups on terms which were unacceptable to CIO leaders.

That conference arose out of a letter on Dec. 6, 1946, also addressed to the AFL and the brotherhoods. At that time Pres. Murray warned of possible action by the incoming 80th Congress which would damage all unions in the country. Correspondence continued between Murray and Green until March 1947, when plans were laid for the "unity meetings."

At these sessions the CIO urged constant cooperation between the two groups on legislative, political and economic measures, and suggested that this form of cooperation might pave the way towards eventual merger. But the AFL officers at that time insisted that merger must come first, and the meetings were adjourned.

13-Point Program Advocated By CIO

HERE is a summary of the CIO's 13-point legislative program, which Pres. Murray suggested last week could be a basis for joint activity by CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods during the 81st Congress:

1. Repeal of Taft-Hartley and re-enactment of the Wagner Act.
2. An anti-inflation program.
3. Housing legislation, along the lines of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill.
4. Civil rights laws, including action on lynching, polltaxes, fair employment practices, elimination of segregation in the military, and home rule for the District of Columbia.
5. Improvement of the Wage-Hour law, with minimum wages of at least $1 an hour.
6. Strengthening and improvement of social security.
7. An adequate national health insurance program.
8. Federal aid to education.
9. Restoration and strengthening of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.
10. Adjusted veterans' benefits.
11. Support of TVA and other public power and river valley developments.
12. A farm program "geared to a full economy."
13. Extension of U. S. authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements with foreign nations.

CIO Vice-Presidents Request:

Amalgamated To Organize Store Employes

AN INTENSIVE organizing drive among store employes will soon be started by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, acting on request of the national CIO.

Announcement of the drive was revealed in the publication of a letter from Pres. Murray to Pres. Jacob Potofsky of Amalgamated, following a meeting of CIO vice-presidents in Washington last week. Pres. Murray's request of the Amalgamated —which Potofsky accepted — was authorized by unanimous vote of the vice-presidents.

Potofsky

At the same meeting, the vice-presidents also voted to prepare concrete proposals for organization of unorganized government and white collar workers. The plans will be submitted to the next meeting of the CIO Executive Board, scheduled for Jan. 26.

Both actions follow convention decisions to press ahead with organizing drives in fields where CIO unions have organized only small proportions of the workers in their industries.

At the convention, Pres. Murray named the store employes, government workers and white collar workers as three large groups —comprising several million people—who are still largely unorganized.

Immediately after the CIO convention the Board directed the United Farm Equipment & Metal Workers to merge with the United Automobile Workers. At that time it was pointed out that the UAW has organized more farm equipment workers than had FE.

RECALLING these policy decisions by the convention, Murray said the vice-presidents' meeting "gave careful consideration to the present state of lack of organization of workers in the department store, wholesale and retail industry.

"After full discussion and due deliberation, it was determined by unanimous vote that immediate steps would have to be taken to preserve and protect the position of the CIO in this jurisdiction.

"It was decided that this could best be done by requesting the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America to establish an organizing committee under its leadership, to provide the benefits of organization to workers in the department store, wholesale, retail and allied fields, within the framework of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

"It was the unanimous feeling of the CIO executive officers and vice-presidents that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, with its fine and established tradition of organization and collective bargaining, and its present state of organization in the field, is ideally suited to provide the necessary leadership and guidance to the unorganized workers in this industry."

Noting the vote of the vice-presidents and the convention resolutions, Murray's letter continued:

"I hereby, on behalf of the CIO, request that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers establish within its framework an organizing committee or other appropriate instrumentality to embark immediately upon the task of extending to the unorganized workers in the department store, wholesale, retail and allied fields the benefits of union organization within the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

"I further pledge to you the wholehearted support and cooperation of the CIO until this important task of organization has been carried to successful completion."

DISCUSSING the status of the retail industry in a speech at the CIO convention, Pres. Murray said, "I confess very frankly the inadequacies of the present organizational set-up in that industry to meet the requirements of the people.

" . . . There are millions to be organized in that field, and it should be our bounden responsibility as a great national movement to render assistance toward the perfection of a type of administration and organization that will sense its responsibilities and the obligations of the people employed in that mighty industry. . . .

"We were created to organize the unorganized; not to issue charters to small cliques for the purpose of protecting their security as officers of certain international unions. We must organize the unorganized. That . . . is a factual appraisement of certain of the problems which confront the CIO today."

The Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, headed by Samuel Wolchok, has been the scene of considerable internal dissension for many months. Early this autumn, a group of left-wing locals in New York City withdrew from the national organization, and other, right-wing groups have talked of secession.

In the midst of a welter of charges from both sides in the union, national CIO officers offered varied plans for "straightening out" the union and paving the way for organizational work, but these offers were turned down.

Organizing Committee Named

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers will make immediate plans for intensive organizing activity among store employes, Pres. Jacob Potofsky announced in New York last week.

He said that the union's new Department Store Organizing Committee will meet in New York on Tuesday, Dec. 21, to plan details of the campaign.

The committee, he announced, is headed by himself, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Executive Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg, and six ACW vice-presidents: Louis Hollander, New York; Charles Weinstein, Philadelphia; Abraham Chatman, Rochester, N. Y.; Joseph Salerno, Boston; Samuel Levin, Chicago, and Gladys Dickason, New York.

Potofsky noted that in this country "department store workers perform an invaluable service. They are in direct contact with the buying public . . . They are entitled to job security and other safeguards surrounding organized labor."

Plan For Curbing House Unit Launched

Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D., Pa.), assistant Democratic House whip, launched a drive to trim permanently the power of the undemocratic rules committee. He invited House Republicans and Democrats to join with him in formation of a committee to map out a campaign to bypass the dictatorial powers which in past sessions have tied up vital legislation in the committee.

Strike Ends, Baby Born, As Predicted

Mrs. Hugh Bryson—wife of the head of the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards—is a staunch unionist.

Back last September Mrs. Bryson told friends that her expected baby would be born when the west coast maritime strike was settled. Her husband and friends pooh-poohed any such time-table program.

At 3 P. M. on Dec. 2, the Marine Cooks & Stewards finally worked out the last details of their new working agreement. Pres. Bryson signed the pact—and rushed to the nearest telephone.

Mrs. Bryson lived up to her promise.

At 4 P. M., Henry Wayne Bryson was born.

PUMPKIN PROBERS

Until Whitaker Chambers began basking in the national spotlight the lowly pumpkin was merely a melon used principally for making Jack-o-lanterns and pies.

Somebody found a "special" pumpkin on Chambers' farm—and in the pumpkin was some microfilm—and on the microfilm was a record of "secret" documents reportedly stolen from the State Dept.

The discovery may have added dignity to the pumpkin but it didn't do likewise for the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The Committee in pre-pumpkin days, not long ago, went into a decline when its chairman, Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, was indicted on salary "kickback" charges.

But then the melon was found—and the Committee was off to the races again. In addition to headline hunting, it engaged in open battle with the Dept. of Justice and a special Federal Grand Jury.

Some of the nation's newspapers said, in effect: "Goody! Out of that pumpkin came justification for our headlines and for our position that the Committee is doing a fine job."

Other segments of the press disagreed—violently. We find ourselves lined up solidly with the latter group.

And we don't like Communists—and we think spies should be put behind bars!

MELON DOES NOT ALTER THE CASE

One pumpkin—or a dozen—regardless of contents, could not possibly erase the stigma which the Committee has attached to itself as a result of its fantastic tactics. Its behavior in many instances has been thoroughly un-American.

It has—as we've pointed out time and again—attempted to serve as prosecutor, judge and jury.

It has played the role of character assassin. It has largely ignored the privileges and rights that would be extended a horse thief on trial in criminal court.

The fact that some of its victims may be guilty does not alter the case. A madman with a machine gun probably could spray lead into a huge crowd and hit a criminal.

Our complaint is not against the stated objectives of the Committee. It is against the Committee's behavior.

NO EXCUSE FOR CONTINUING IT

Even if the pumpkin probers dig up a hundred "special" melons between now and the beginning of the new year, Congress should abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee as quickly as possible.

It has been a bad Committee since the days of Martin Dies. There is nothing to indicate it would improve under the new leadership it would acquire under House "seniority" rules.

We're not suggesting that Congress forget about subversive activities or that it give up the right to investigate matters which are in the public interest.

We're merely saying that the House Un-American Activities Committee should be abolished because of its unfitness.

Furthermore, Congress should prescribe specific rules for its investigation committees—rules which will prevent probers from abrogating civil rights and using their congressional power for selfish or political ends.

You Just Push A Button And--

'Robots' Take Over Jobs of Human Hands, Thus Creating New Problems

By ALLAN L. SWIM

WHEN I was a youngster I worked as a soda jerker but never with the speed and tireless efficiency of those mechanical drink mixers you now find in public places.

You drop a quarter in a slot. In a jiffy you have a properly mixed iced beverage—and 20 cents in change.

Ah, they're wonderful—mechanically—but they're pikers compared with some of the other gadgets the inventors are turning out.

Many of them duplicate and improve upon the most highly developed human skills.

They're going to delight the public—and they're going to give us one big headache unless we're smart enough to make proper use of them.

THE United States appears to be entering a "robot" era which will have as much effect on the nation as did mass production.

Jobs now performed by hand will be done entirely by machines—machines with "fingers" more sensitive than those of the most highly skilled workmen and with "eyes" that "see" things no human eye can discern.

Entire factories will operate at high speed with few or no workmen on the "line" and with only a handful of "operators" twisting dials.

Machines will perform in minutes functions which require hours of human endeavor.

THE "robot" era is not a pipedream about the far-distant future which those now living will never see.

We have already entered it. Its effects are being felt in some industries.

Its full impact may be years in coming, but we might as well start getting used to the idea—because it will alter the lives of millions who work with their hands.

Increased mechanization and improvement of electronic devices—plus possible startling use of atomic power—could mean a much better life for us if we're smart and great tragedy if we're stupid.

MANY of the men who built our big industrial enterprises made a pretty bad mess when it came to employer-employe relations.

They tried to treat production workers like machines. They tried to maintain long hours and low wages. They made little or no effort to provide year-around employment.

So there's good reason to wonder about what they'll try to do in the "robot" era.

Will they fight against the adjustments that will be necessary before society as a whole can benefit from "push-button" manufacturing and processing operations?

Will they fight against the shorter hours and the pension systems that the "robot" era undoubtedly will require?

Their past performances indicate they probably will.

IT'S time for trade unions to do a bit of hard, sound thinking about the probable consequences of "robot" production.

There will be serious problems—and the answers to them will not lie in fighting against technological development. To buck progress is stupid.

The task will be to find a means of spreading the benefits of such production among the whole population.

A way must be found to cushion its impact.

A way must be found to prevent a handful of powerful men from monopolizing the new gadgets and devices.

It's going to be a big, tough job.

Ewing: Health Plan Enemies To Fail

The American Medical Association's $3½-million campaign to block a national health insurance program is doomed to failure, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing predicted at New York City last week.

Referring to a secret meeting of the AMA House of Delegates in St. Louis Dec. 1, where it was agreed to assess each member $25 toward a $3½ million fund, Ewing described the AMA decision as an attempt to "finance the greatest lobbying effort in history for a last-ditch stand" against health insurance and warned that the money would go "down the drain."

"The whole fund is all silly," Ewing told 300 guests at the fifth anniversary dinner for the interracial Sydenham Hospital. "If their cause is any good they don't need $3.50, and if the cause is no good 10 times $3½ million won't enable them to fool the American people. The hour of these gentlemen is past and they would do better to use their money to educate some of their colleagues to the real truth of the situation."

THE government official said the recent elections had given Pres. Truman "the green light" to go ahead with a program which would provide "every individual in the country, regardless of race, creed, color, economic status or place of residence, the amount and quality of medical care now available only to the genuinely well-to-do."

Need for such a program is urgent, Ewing indicated. "Only 20% of the people of this country can afford to pay anything approaching adequate medical care," he pointed out. "Each year 325,000 persons die needlessly in this land of ours whose lives could have been saved by the knowledge and skills we now have."

EWING said the government's program, which will be submitted for action to the 81st Congress, includes the following features:

A worker earning up to $50 a week would have a $1 weekly payroll deduction for health insurance for himself and his family.

Maximum deduction for persons with incomes of $4,800 or more a year would be $1.90 a week.

Each doctor would be free to decide whether he wanted to serve under the plan.

A committee of doctors in each community would work out a basic set of service fees suited to the economic standards of that particular community.

Each person covered would be free to select his own doctor and each doctor free to accept or reject a patient.

"THE only difference between the insurance system and the present system is that the doctor would receive the agreed-on fees out of a general insurance fund," Ewing said. In an interview before the dinner he explained that the proposed federal legislation would not conflict with voluntary groups such as the Blue Cross plan. The voluntary groups could be incorporated into the national system and under a contractual arrangement perform "the bookkeeping," Ewing said.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"Mr. Dripp says we aren't having pumpkin pie this Christmas."

He Fed Them First And Then They Sang

IT was one of those nasty nights when you really appreciate a warm fire and a good roof over your head.

A cold rain turned to stinging sleet as a bitter wind from the North sent the mercury downward.

The downtown section was nearly deserted—and the residential district looked desolate despite bright Christmas lights which shone through the haze.

It was Christmas Eve—and throughout the city families put the finishing touches on their trees and wrapped the last of their gifts.

But there were men who had no families and no homes.

A LEAN slightly stooped, old man dressed in clothes that were not warm picked his way carefully over the icy streets.

He was familiar with all of the flophouses in town and he knew where to find the down-and-outers. So, as the hours passed, he rounded up—without difficulty—about 50 of the most hopeless looking men you could imagine.

These he took or sent to his small mission on a dimly-lit side street.

There they found warmth and soup. The soup was hot and delicious—and there were gallons of it.

SOME of the 50 wore dirty, ragged clothes. Most of them had not shaved for several days.

Some of them undoubtedly were bums—men who merely existed from one handout to another. Others were just down on their luck—and the depression was on in full swing.

Among them moved the slightly stooped old man, ladeling out soup, pouring coffee, passing the cracker box. He was cheerful and obviously doing work that he loved.

Finally his "charges" had all the soup and coffee they could hold.

THE old man walked to the front of the room and clapped his hands until he gained the attention of his guests.

"In a few minutes it will be Christmas," he said. "Because I am a minister I, perhaps, should preach a short Christmas sermon—but I don't intend to.

"All I want to say is that all of you are welcome here—welcome at all times. You can come in for soup when you're hungry. You can come in and pray when you feel like it. You can sleep here if you have no other place to go.

"In this mission we pay more attention to the practice than to the preaching of Christianity."

THE minister took off his glasses, wiped them carefully and then set them astride the bridge of his thin nose.

"I'll bet a lot of you fellows haven't sung Christmas songs for years, but let's see what we can do."

He began singing "Silent Night" in a voice not designed for singing. At first only a few joined in. Then, gradually, the volume of sound grew.

Within a few minutes every man in the mission was singing. In a way, it sounded terrible. But it had beauty, too.

AS Christmas Day arrived the old minister said a brief prayer, told his guests to make themselves at home and walked out into the cold night.

When he arrived at the bedside of his semi-invalid wife he didn't have a cent in his pocket and he knew there was no money in the mission's treasury.

But he knew he could always get 10 or 15 bucks from the "boys" up at CIO headquarters if he told them he needed a bit of help.

OPTICAL DELUSION!

British TUC Moves To Oust Communist Leaders

By ERNEST CALLOWAY

THE powerful general council of the British Trades Union Congress has departed from its traditional "hands-off" policy by calling for an extensive campaign to uproot the "pockets" of Communist leadership throughout the British labor movement.

The drive came in the form of a 3,000-word policy statement to TUC's 190 affiliated unions. It urged them to investigate Communist infiltration in each industry and to bar from positions of leadership or responsibility all members who serve on Communist national or local bodies.

Strong Communist local organizations exist in locals of the railway, transport, maritime, textile, electrical and mining unions—all vitally important to the British Economic Recovery Program.

The situation is somewhat different from that in America, however. Most British Communist union leaders openly proclaim their party affiliation. They include in their ranks leading officials in half a dozen unions.

Perhaps the most important is Arthur Horner of the Federation of Mineworkers, who is a member of the executive committee of the British Communist Party.

IN London and in Birmingham, the industrial nerve center of the country, the district councils of the TUC are under Communist domination. Many other district councils in industrial areas have met the same fate. Another area of Communist concentration is the shop steward and shop steward councils. Among the shop stewards, the Communist "cadres" are able to obtain the most damaging results.

The TUC document pointed out that these "cadres" are used to secure vital information for the Party, and acting on this information, officials of the Communist Party who have no connection with the industry concerned "frame industrial policy and tactics which are used as the basis of instructions and propaganda directed at all levels within the union."

"The trade union movement," the TUC indictment declares, "has never precluded the minority within the movement from seeking to change its policy. But it is contrary to the whole conception of our movement, foreign to its traditions, and fatal to its prestige, if it permits its democratically determined policy to be disrupted at the behest of an outside body."

As part of the general drive to smash the Marshall Plan in western Europe, the Communists of Great Britain have concentrated their energies on the specific task of undermining the Labor government's campaign for increased and more efficient productivity.

However, there have been many gyrations and violent contractions of the "party line." It was only in August of last year that the Communist Party of Great Britain called for increased productivity on the part of the British workers.

A MONTH later, the Cominform was created and the Labor government's policy seeking to increase British productivity was blasted in the Communist press, forums and trade union meeting halls. TUC's recent decision to give full support to the drive for a higher national output was described by the Communists as "criminal deception of the labor movement" which according to them indicated that "the right-wing leaders of the government, the Labor Party and the TUC are already preparing to reduce the standards of the working class still further."

An interesting comparison of this attitude of British Communists can be made with their attitude on increased productivity within the Soviet eastern satellites. Behind the "Iron Curtain," higher industrial productivity is still necessary and religiously supported by British Communists.

"Probably, we have been too patient," commented Vincent Tewson, TUC general secretary, "but now the time has come in which the Communist issue must be faced—and it is going to be done in a way which will surprise some people."

Arkansas Tough On Pickets

IN Arkansas you can be sent to the state penitentiary for one to two years for the "felony" of being on a picket line at a time when violence breaks out.

And that's exactly what happened to Roy Cole and Louis Jones, two peaceful participants in a CIO Food and Tobacco Workers picket line during a 1945 strike at the Southern Cotton Oil Co. plant, Pulaski County.

While the shadow of a one-year penitentiary sentence hangs over Cole and Jones, pending appeals to the State and U. S. Supreme Courts, the slayer of a picket walks free, untroubled by any threat of Arkansas justice catching up with him. He was a strikebreaker.

The men on the picketline in December 1945 were Negroes. The line was quiet when Otha Williams sought to break through it and go back to work. When Walter Campbell, a picket, attempted to discourage him from crossing the line, Williams killed Campbell with a pen knife.

Arkansas "justice" swooped down—but fast. It took in tow three men who were on the line at the time, none of whom was engaged in the fight. The killer has never been apprehended. In the indictment (or "information," as it is called) handed down by the Pulaski County Court, it was charged that Cole, Jones and Bean "did, acting in concert with each other, promote, encourage and aid such unlawful assemblage." They were not accused of engaging in violence.

UNDER Arkansas' O'Daniel Act, enacted in 1943, a picket line on which violence occurs is "unlawful," and anyone participating in the line at the time is guilty of a felony. It was under this provision—the law's Section 2—that the men were convicted by the lower court.

When the case was appealed to the Arkansas Supreme Court, the conviction was upheld—not on the grounds cited by the Circuit Court, but based instead on Section 1, which makes the use of force and violence illegal in efforts to prevent strikebreaking. Thus State Supreme Court Judge Ed. F. McFaddin, in upholding the conviction, misquoted the lower court's findings and found the defendants guilty of something with which they had never been charged.

Actually the "information" had charged that the defendants "did promote, encourage and aid such unlawful assemblage."

Noting this discrepancy, and seeking a test of the law's constitutionality, the CIO appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court for a review. The High Tribunal last March reversed the conviction on these grounds and threw the case back to the state court for a rehearing.

THE CASE has been before the State Court judge three times now. Each time he has repeated his previous misquotation of the original charge. In the second hearing Judge McFaddin did, however, acquit Bean on grounds of insufficient evidence.

Last month the CIO petitioned the State Supreme Court for a fourth hearing. If it is denied, the CIO will appeal again to the U. S. Supreme Court, says CIO Assistant Counsel Tom Harris. (Harris is from Arkansas himself and his father was once judge of the same Circuit Court which first sentenced Cole, Jones and Bean.)

While the case seesaws back and forth between the U. S. Supreme Court and the Arkansas Supreme Court, the slayer of a striker is forgotten, and two pickets wait to learn whether they'll spend a year in the state penitentiary for walking a picket line.

MILES APART: Although only a chair separates Ethel B. du Pont (l.), labor reporter for the Louisville (Ky.) Times, and Ruby Cooper, Daily Worker correspondent, at the Transport Workers convention, their philosophies differ widely. Miss DuPont, liberal member of the Kentucky branch of the Du Pont family, wrote a story lauding CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood for his blistering attack on the Communists and their tactics.

Haywood Spellbinds Reporter

"I have heard spellbinders all my life. I had thought that I disliked that brand of oratory until I heard the speech by Allan Haywood, the CIO's director of organization, delivered at the convention of the Transport Workers Union in Chicago."

That is not an excerpt from a labor paper. It was written by Ethel B. du Pont of the Kentucky branch of the wealthy du Pont family for the Louisville, Ky., Times.

The newspaper's labor reporter, Miss du Pont is unlike most of the members of her family. She is a liberal. For example, during the CIO Auto Workers' strike against General Motors, she headed a committee of GM stockholders who went to a board meeting and asked for better labor relations. She also contributed GM stock dividends to the strike fund.

"The speech was interesting in its own right. Haywood simply told the story of the American labor movement, as he had seen it and lived it. He spoke forcefully, as a man with faith in aims and the ability of American labor.

"He chastised and ridiculed the role of the Communists in the labor movement, making three major charges against them—that they are not loyal to the Government of the United States, that they disrupt unions, and the labor vote, and that they had opposed the labor-indorsed policy of feeding and housing the families of Europe made destitute by the war.

"Haywood's speech was remarkable in its effect on the delegates in the convention hall. During the defendants guilty of somegates who had opposed the non-Communist slate headed by the union's president, Michael J. Quill, sat silent and made no attempt to hide their anger.

Haywood had the right wing majority on its feet, cheering a number of times before he got any response from the section where the leftists sat. Gradually, the applause came from all over the hall.

"After stressing the harm done the CIO by its Communist members Haywood told of what unions have done for Negroes in the south.

"I shall never forget the expression on the face of an elderly Negro who was sitting with the lefties and had voted with them. His pain and uncertainty was tragic.

"Another point was scored, and Haywood had half a dozen of the delegates sitting with the lefties on their feet cheering with the labor men. Before he closed, most of the men on the floor were standing and cheering together uproariously."

16 Fired As TWU Intl. Reps.

SIXTEEN international union representatives have been ousted and another has resigned since the complete rightwing sweep at the recent Transport Workers Convention in Chicago.

Among the sixteen dropped by the new executive board immediately after the conclave were two former vice presidents and five members of the pre-convention executive board.

The new board had left the status of John A. Cassidy, international representative in Omaha, Neb., in question. Accused by some of left-wing sympathies, he was told that he might continue on the staff if he accepted a transfer to Houston, Texas, and pledged future support of the new anti-communist TWU constitution.

In a heated letter to TWU Pres. Michael Quill Cassidy declined the offer. "In short," he wrote, "I'm expected to grovel on my knees like an abject serf."

"I am not a captive of the Communist party or any other party," he continued.

Cassidy's resignation put an end to the long-term disagreement between himself and R. A. Hayes, president of the Omaha local. The dispute broke out on the convention floor when Cassidy opposed the seating of Hayes as a delegate on grounds of dues-paying irregularity. His objection to Hayes was quickly overriden by the convention delegates.

GREETING, KID!

Songsters Didn't Help Much

Hardest, Noisiest Campaign Landed Hank In 4th Place

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE most-times non-partisan Associated Press has compiled state by state figures on the national election vote which are highly interesting.

The AP figures—"compiled from official canvassing boards in the 48 states"—cover all the major candidates and most of the minor ones.

If the AP figures are fairly accurate—and they may be—three things stand out:

1. The total vote of 48,680,416 for President (in all, 49,363,789 cast ballots, but 683,382 failed to vote for President) was the second highest in history. In 1940, there were 49,820,312 votes for President; in 1944 there were 47,976,263.

2. "Henry A. Wallace lagged in fourth, in the AP's figures, with Dixiecrat J. Strom Thurmond (pronounced Thuhmond) beating him out for third.

3. Pollster George Gallup was away off in his estimate of the total vote—off by about 3,000,000.

4. The CIO had hoped for a vote nearer 60,000,000. Why the vote fell far below that can be ascribed to many reasons—poor weather in some areas, the weak registration in New York City, confusion among voters over the press, radio and political attacks on Truman, etc., coupled with a lack of confidence in Dewey.

One thing is sure. If Pres. Truman had not made his brave, fighting campaign, the vote would have been far lower; if labor had not mobilized its members and the community, it would have been lower; if farmers and other liberal groups had not worked so hard, it would have been lower. For the GOP planned it that way. The Republicans didn't want Americans to vote in large numbers.

THERE were many interesting angles to the campaign.

For instance, Wallace and his songsters made the hardest and loudest campaign—and the most expensive per capita on votes. Yet the best Henry did was to get 0.8% of the New York State vote. Thurmond, on the other hand, ran as high as 79% of the vote in Alabama.

There must be a nest of Dixiecrats left over in Pennsylvania from the stragglers after the battle of Gettysburg. Thurmond received 45—yes, 45!—votes in the Keystone State.

In Arizona, Thurmond got 1—yes 1!—ballot. Idaho gave him 3.

In the major Presidential race, no state was as close as Ohio. Truman accomplished a feat which Pres. Roosevelt was unable to turn in 1944. He won the state. But, his margin of victory was 7107—according to AP—or 0.024% of the vote cast.

THERE were some brighter spots in the votes by States.

These states showed a Truman vote higher than Roosevelt's in 1944: Arizona (up 15,000); Arkansas (up 1,000); Colorado (up 33,000); Indiana (up 26,000); Iowa (up 23,000); Kansas (up 68,000); Massachusetts (up 116,000); Minnesota (up 103,000); Missouri (up 110,000); Montana (up 7,000); Nevada (up 2,000); New Mexico (up 24,000); Oklahoma (up 51,000); Rhode Island (up 13,000); South Dakota (up 21,000); West Virginia (up 37,000); Wyoming (up 3,000).

Just before this writer typed this piece, he watched Pres. Truman walk across Pennsylvania Ave. to the Blair House—temporary White House—for lunch. One of the main reasons for Truman's victory was apparent. He put on no pretentions, acted like anyone else walking home to lunch.

LIKE YOU AND ME: President Truman crosses Pennsylvania avenue on his way to work at the White House, diagonally across from his temporary home, the Blair House.

CIO Asks Pa. Legislature Same Break Employers Get

"Pennsylvania CIO is of the people, made up of 600,000 who are voluntarily members. On behalf of this number and their families, we ask to be heard, that you read what we send for or against a bill, equally with your listening to what is asked by the lobbyists for the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, State Chamber of Commerce and others of the very few in number who control the utilities and the rest of industries and occupations where our people are employed . . .

"Every measure we favor will be for the general welfare. More than being for us, it would benefit the workers not yet under the protection of a union to raise their working and living conditions. Every measure we support will be for the mutual advantage of management and labor by free and amicable agreement to stabilize our industrial economy, increase production by sustained consumer purchasing power, insure national prosperity and do all we can in Pennsylvania to make America endure as the light of liberty for the whole world."

UAW Member Lauds Chicago X-Ray Center

A bright new spot in a dismal Chicago slum block is a modern one-story building that houses the Michael Reese Hospital X-ray Center, according to Robert Voss, UAW-CIO representative in the Health Division of the Chicago Council of Social Agencies.

The center is part of a community health and preventive medicine project planned two years ago by the people and the organizations right in the area where many CIO members live. When the center is operating at full capacity it will give free chest X-rays to approximately 100,000 people a year.

Refusal To Aid N. J. Jobless Is Scored

Refusal of Harold G. Hoffman, executive director of the New Jersey Unemployment Compensation to take emergency steps, as he did earlier this year when a similar deficiency in funds threatened the UCC, has been attacked by the New Jersey CIO Council. Council Pres. Carl Holderman called the refusal "total unconcern for the plight of thousands of unemployed workers."

In a letter to the UCC director, Holderman stated that Hoffman's refusal to use the funds made available to the state on Dec. 1 to reopen eight shut-down offices, in anticipation of a deficiency appropriation from Congress was "difficult to reconcile" with the view he took last March 2. At that time, Holderman pointed out, Hoffman ordered additional help and overtime work and requested additional funds from the Social Security Administration.

Unions Disapprove Of Mich. Study Plan

Proposals to reopen a revamped Workers Educational Service by the University of Michigan early in 1949 do not meet with the approval of organized labor in the state.

The program "is a fraud that was cooked up in the Industrial Economics Section of the General Motors Corp.," Education Dir. Victor Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers charged. "It gives no assurance that there will be classes in subjects that workers need; the instructors will be selected apparently only if their ignorance of labor unions and economics qualifies them for positions, and the very people who are most directly concerned with the program are explicitly barred from taking part in the planning of the program."

In equally strong language, Sec'y-Treas. Robert P. Scott of the Michigan Federation of Labor asserted that the AFL "is not interested in any program offered by the University on a take-it-or-leave-it basis."

Many New Jobs In Western Canada

Alberta Has Oil Boom Without Shanty Town

ON the prairies of Alberta, Canada, an oil boom is developing.

It has all the social and economic significance of the Texas booms of 25 years ago—but little of the razzle-dazzle and shanty-town disorder of the Ranger and Spindletop bonanzas.

This new oil boom is going to mean a lot to Alberta and Canada and to the oil industry. It means jobs for men who know how to drill wells, attend pumps and do all the other skilled jobs attendant on oil production and refining.

This boom began in Feb., 1947, when oil was found at Leduc, near Edmonton. Oilmen soon discerned that they had found one of the great producing regions of North America.

Then, last summer, a well was drilled at Redwater, 87 miles southwest of Edmonton, that showed an oil producing zone four times as thick as that at Leduc. This field hasn't been fully proven yet, but cautious wildcatters think it may be as big as several Leducs.

IT is likely that these Alberta fields will be supplying the needs of western Canada by the end of another year. In another year after that, Alberta probably will be exporting petroleum products to the U. S. Middle West, whereas up to now Canada has had to import most of its oil.

Eventually, the Alberta boom may make Canada self-sufficient in oil, producing the 98 million barrels of petroleum that the nation requires each year.

At present Alberta supplies only 7% of Canadian oil requirements. That country has been buying more than 200 million dollars worth of oil and its products from the U. S. and South America. That has meant a drain on Canada in U. S. dollars—something of which Canada needs more.

What does the oil boom mean to individuals? Well, first let's take a look at the labor picture. There are hundreds more jobs there than there are people to take them. However, housing is tight in Alberta—a little tighter than in the rest of Canada. Men going there to look for work probably can find it—but it would pay them to investigate first.

This can be said of the boom: It is no fly-by-night matter. Development is proceeding in orderly fashion.

It might be a good place for an out-of-work oil worker to take a look around.

What does the Alberta boom mean to the residents of the area? Well, the Canadians move a little slower and a little more cautiously than their U. S. brothers. They've been bitten twice before by oil booms that petered out. This time it looks like the real thing, but the Canadians aren't going crazy.

In the first place, few overnight millionaires will be made. For the Canadian farmer, unless he bought his farm prior to 1905, does not own the royalty under it. It is held either by one of the big trading companies which sold him the land, or by the government. In such cases, all the landlord gets is rental for the actual space occupied by the rigs.

THE greatest profit from the Alberta boom will be to the Alberta government. And that government drives a hard bargain with the dozen big oil companies who have moved in to develop the field.

For one thing, the Alberta government doesn't like monopoly. So it permits the discoverer to lease only nine square miles around his discovery well. Beyond that, the land is broken up into checkerboard tracts of which the discoverer may lease half—but with no two contracts adjoining.

The government gets lease money and then collects a royalty on each barrel of oil produced—12½% being the usual take.

This new bonanza means a lot to Alberta. In the past it has been a poor, have-not province.

But already oil is bringing in money to change the picture. Income from petroleum will pay half of the highway bill. In a few years, oil will buy a nice system of roads.

Illinois CIO Bars Supporters Of Totalitarians From Office

THE sixth annual convention of the Illinois State CIO Council, Dec. 11-12 at Chicago, followed through on CIO policy as adopted at the National CIO Convention in Portland, Ore.

The Illinois convention, keynoted as a "Victory" Convention, never deviated for a moment from its obligations as an arm of national CIO in Illinois.

Resolutions that passed urged all affiliates to implement national CIO policy on all levels. Political and legislative action received special emphasis.

Speakers, beginning with the opening address by Pres. Joe Germano, drove hard at Communists and Communist followers, branded them disrupters and political agents of a foreign ideology, rather than genuine unionists.

A constitutional amendment, unanimously adopted, barred advocates or supporters of totalitarian forms of government from holding office in the council. Mentioned as totalitarian groups were Nazis, Fascists, Communists and Ku Kluxers.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, hit hard at the Communist Party and its followers, saying: "We are going to map our own destiny . . . but it won't come from any Messiah from the clouds but from labor itself. . . ." Referring to the Communist element, he said: "The time has come to get right with the union . . . we can't accept you 75% of the way." Haywood paid a tribute to Philip Murray's leadership by saying, "You can get down on your knees and thank God for the leadership of Philip Murray." In conclusion Haywood paid a tribute to CIO-PAC in Illinois.

Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, emphasized the need for future political action on all levels. Speaking of the Nov. 2 victory, he said: "It will long be remembered by our friends as well as our enemies . . . it will be felt for the next 50 years. . . . The little people voted for principles and ideals . . . a re-affirmation of the voter's independence and belief in American democracy." Kroll scored the attempt of the Communist Party and the Wallace third party group to divide the labor movement in the field of political action.

CIO Council Dir. John Brophy emphasized the necessity of continued political activity by the councils "if we are to translate the election victory into legislative results."

In addition to calling for enactment of a complete program of social legislation, Brophy noted that the growth of industry and increased job opportunities depended in many areas on development of river valleys as a source of power and transportation. He pointed specifically to the need for a Missouri Valley Authority and a St. Lawrence seaway.

Other speakers at the Convention were: Mayor Martin Kennelly of Chicago; Senator-elect Paul Douglas; the Rev. Ray Freeman Jenney, Bryn Mawr Community Church; the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Reynold Hillenbrand; Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein; Dr. Phillip Bradley, University of Illinois; State CIO Secretary Maurice McElligott, Albert Towers, President Chicago CIO Council, Michael Mann, Regional CIO Director in Illinois.

The Convention declared vacant the office of Charles Lawson, Farm Equipment representative on the Council's Board of Directors. Reason for declaring the office vacant was the failure of Lawson to attend meetings and his opposition to national CIO policy during the past year. The resolution was carried unanimously and the Executive Board of the State Council has the power to fill the vacancy.

The Convention also went on record in support of CIO's order to Farm Equipment workers to merge with the UAW.

The Convention, through resolutions, adopted a comprehensive legislative program for Illinois. Resolutions covered such matters as housing, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation and occupational diseases, Illinois FEPC, voting machines, regulatory industrial standards for Illinois, indorsement of the demand for a Constitutional Convention.

Artist Thanked By Pres. Truman

Le Baron Coakley a few weeks ago sent President Truman at the latter's request the original of a cartoon which he had drawn for the CIO News. Coakley has received the following note from the President:

"Please pardon my delay in thanking you for the framed copy of your very clever cartoon, "News of His Death Greatly Exaggerated." I shall keep this among the more interesting souvenirs of my campaign.

"With my regards and all good wishes, I am very sincerely yours, Harry Truman."

"Miss Johnson! You put that book here on purpose."

Maritime Group Protests Navy Ship Control Plan

A PROTEST against expansion of the Navy Department's control over commercial shipping has been voiced by Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, in a letter to Defense Sec'y James Forrestal.

The protest followed announcement that all armed forces commercial shipping will be placed under control of the Navy Dept.

This, said Haddock, would result in the transfer of 200-odd civilian-manned vessels now operated by the Army, a step he termed "uneconomical and detrimental to the American Merchant Marine. . . ."

The letter renewed the CIO Maritime Committee's April 13, 1948, request that all merchant shipping of the armed forces be turned over to commercial, civilian-manned operations.

As an example of the economy of such a move, Haddock cited the experience during the war in which Liberty cargo vessels were operated by private companies with a civilian crew of 43, while similar Navy-operated vessels carried a crew of 167.

Haddock requested the Secretary to withhold action pending discussions between representatives of the seamen's organizations and the Dept. of Natl. Defense.

Steelworkers Get $4 Million Backpay

The Crucible Steel Co. last week paid more than $4 million to about 20,000 CIO Steelworkers to iron out wage inequities.

The backpay, averaging $200 per worker covered by the union contract, applied to three plants in the Pittsburgh area, three in New Jersey and two in Syracuse, N. Y. Highest check was for $2000.

Outgrowth of a 1944 War Labor Board ruling which directed the company to bargain with the union on inequities, the payments represent the difference between the negotiated rates and the wages paid between December, 1943, and April, 1947. In addition, all employes covered by contract received one cent an hour for every hour worked during that period.

Similar wage inequity payments have been made by other steel firms, including Carnegie-Illinois and Jones & Laughlin.

Layoffs At Ford Plant Hit UAW Members

Layoff of over 1800 tool and diemakers and apprentices at the Ford Motor Co. Rouge plant has been followed by layoff of skilled men in the maintenance and transportation divisions of the plant. Toolmakers are now down to 1927 seniority, according to Vice-Pres. Herbert LaMond of the Detroit-Wayne County Tool and Die Council, CIO Auto Workers.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

William B. Taylor, CIO Regional Director, Kentucky, reports that in an NLRB election at the S. J. Campbell Co. Shirt Factory at Madisonville, Ky., 149 workers voted for ACWA-CIO, 56 for no union.

George Brown, Director of Organization, IWA-CIO, announces that in a union shop election at the Bond Brothers, Inc., located in Louisville, Ky., the employes voted 104 to 25 in favor of a union shop.

Michael Livoda, CIO Regional Director, Colo., reports that in a consent election held in the Hecketborn Manufacturing Co., Littleton, Colo., the employes voted 146 in favor of UAW-CIO; 15 for no union and 14 did not vote. John Monarch of the Steel Workers helped in this election campaign.

James J. Leary, CIO Regional Director, Missouri, reports that in a union shop election conducted by the NLRB at the Fintex Mercantile Co., Kansas City, Mo., the employes voted 100% for a Union Shop. The organizational work was done by Mrs. Ruby Clayborn, ACWA Representative, with the aid of Minne Hatfield, Nellie Heagle, and May Williams, members employed by the company.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

Thirteen more victories have been reported for the Southern Drive by Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee. Three each went to Textile and Retail, Wholesale. Packinghouse and Auto won two each. Wood, Stone and Chemical each won one.

North Carolina Dir. William Smith reports Reliance Guano Co., Whitesville, N. C., RWDSU-CIO 13, against 8.

Mississippi Dir. Robert W. Starnes reports Laurel Textiles, Laurel, Miss., TWUA-CIO 240, AFL 209.

Alabama Dir. Carey E. Haigler reports Meadow Gold Dairies of Decatur, Ala., RWDSU-CIO recognized through card check. Brewton Weaving Corp., Brewton, Ala., TWUA-CIO 17 against 14. Harris Transfer & Warehouse Co., Birmingham, Ala., RWDSU-CIO 85, AFL 4, independent 3. Wilson and Co. Birmingham, Ala., UPWA-CIO 38, against 7. J. I. Case Co., Anniston, Ala., UAW-CIO 59, AFL 4, against 53.

Texas Director Robert Oliver reports Pangburn Candy Co., Fort Worth, Texas, UPWA-CIO 145, against 126. Lone Star Cement Corp., Dallas, Texas, United Stone 137, AFL 35.

Tennessee Director Paul R. Christopher reports Borg-Warner Corp., Memphis, Tenn., UAW-CIO 227, AFL 0, neither 4. Block Bros., Nashville, Tennessee, UGCC-CIO 22, against 3. American Enka Corp., Lowland, Tenn., TWUA-CIO 473, AFL 150, neither 61. Ed Gerhchak of Organizing Committee staff was in charge of the latter campaign, assisted by State Director P. R. Christopher and TWUA State Director H. S. Williams.

At the Vice Presidents' meeting last week the mechanism was settled for bringing to the attention of Congress the CIO program, not for itself but for the people of the nation in the interest of our whole economy. The membership of the CIO will be called upon in due time to activize themselves to bring to the attention of their representative congressmen and senators this program of the people. The people won the victory against forces of reaction, both left and right, and they must not let this victory slip from their grasp.

The repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act was a campaign issue, the people knew that despite statements of such "lame ducks" as Joe Ball and others.

Watch for the CIO program; watch for the call to action to organize and activize.

Auxiliaries Elect New Secretary

THE seventh annual convention of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries CIO, at Waterloo, Iowa, unanimously re-elected Faye Stephenson president, and elected as secretary-treasurer Mrs. Bertha Parrin, of Steelworkers' Auxiliaries and president of the Ohio CIO Women's Auxiliary Council.

The following vice presidents were elected:

Mrs. Corrine Fisher, Woodworkers' Auxiliaries; Mrs. Charlotte Sillers, Public Workers; Mrs. Ethel Swant, Farm Equipment Workers; Mrs. Dorothy Keene and Mrs. Catherine Gelles both of the Auto Workers; Mrs. Kathryn Hughes, Transport Workers; Mrs. Marie Goforth, Mine-Mill; Mrs. Clara Henkel, Electrical Workers; Mrs. Esther DuPey, Packinghouse Workers; Mrs. Wanda Klingerman, Steelworkers and Mrs. Helen Roberts of the Oil Workers.

Congressman-elect H. R. Gross, Third District, Iowa, who was elected with farmer-labor support, gave the official welcoming address. Vernon Dale, president of the Iowa State Industrial Union Council also welcomed the delegates. Kenneth Everhart, secretary-treasurer of the Iowa State Council was toastmaster at the convention banquet. Miss Anne Mason, representing PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, also spoke.

At the convention banquet Secy.-Treas. Lewis Clark of the Packinghouse Workers presented a scroll to Mrs. Hazel Farrell, whose husband, William Farrell, was killed in the strike at the Rath Packing Co., Waterloo, last spring.

The local Auxiliary Arrangements Committee was Mrs. Mildred Guynn, Mrs. Margaret Edsill, Mrs. Elmonda Fagerlin, all of the Packinghouse Workers' Auxiliaries, and Mrs. Dorothy DeLong and Mrs. Virginia Barber, of the Auto Workers' Auxiliary. The Arrangements Committee organized a trip through the Rath Packing Co., where the union is just now successfully negotiating a contract after long months of struggle.

Real Estate Lobby Plans Big Campaign

A lobbying fund that is more than double the 1948 figure will be asked of real estate men in early January, when various committees of the National Association of Real Estate Boards meet at Washington, D. C., to open their drive on housing and rent control legislation in the 81st Congress.

The 20,000 NAREB members will be asked to pay a $5 a year dues increase, which will go for "combating the drive under way in this country to socialize rental housing."

Descending on Washington Jan. 7 through 13 will be presidents of local real estate boards, members of the Realtors Washington Committee, and other NAREB subcommittees. All sessions at which strategy will be mapped are secret.

GOOD POLAR ADVICE

800,000 Low-Rent Public Homes in Year Urged

CONSTRUCTION of 800,000 low-rent urban public housing homes to be built by local housing authorities over the next four years, was the goal set by Pres. Edward Weinfeld of the Nat'l. Public Housing Conference in a meeting with President Truman last week.

Other proposals were:

- An additional 200,000 units be earmarked for rural non-farm public housing, constituting a total program of 1,000,000 federally assisted public housing homes to be constructed in the next four years.

- Direct Federal loans and the strengthening of existing aids to take care of families whose incomes makes them ineligible for public housing and for whom private housing is today not providing decent housing.

Recommendations for the national housing program had been prepared by the Legislative Committee of the National Public Housing Conference and were approved by the organization's Board of Directors.

They are being submitted, for study, to the more than forty other national public interest organizations which actively supported the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill during the 80th Congress, including the organizational representatives who accompanied Weinfeld to the White House last week.

PRESENT at the conference in addition to Weinfeld were: Leo Goodman, director, CIO housing committee; Peter Henley, AFL; Jack Carter, Veterans of Foreign Wars; Miss Anna Lord Strauss, League of Women Voters; Leslie Perry, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Russell Smith, National Farmers Union, and David L. Krooth, National Public Housing Conference.

Deep appreciation was expressed to the President for his continued fighting support of decent housing legislation through repeated messages to the Congress and throughout the recent presidential campaign.

The President was urged to recognize today's increasing housing needs and to recommend to the Congress comprehensive legislation, not just the enactment of those portions of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill which were defeated in the 80th Congress.

OTHER recommendations included:

- A separate housing constituent agency be established within the Housing and Home Finance Agency to carry out that portion of the program aimed to secure housing for those income groups whose needs are now neglected.

- Federal aid to localities for the redevelopment of slums and blighted areas as contained in the TEW bill as it passed the Senate last spring.

- Federal assistance to localities in helping to plan new communities in outlying areas.

- A much stronger housing research measure than that passed by the 80th Congress' to bring about building cost reduction.

Hoffman Summons Murray To Probe

Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.) has summoned CIO Pres. Philip Murray to a one-man House labor subcommittee hearing Dec. 22, it was announced at Washington, D. C., last week.

Hoffman said his purpose was to determine whether Murray, as president of the CIO Steelworkers, "condones" violence which Hoffman claims the union caused at the struck Shakespeare Co. plants in Kalamazoo, Mich.

The union-baiting congressman claimed that since the Nov. 2 election, "a lot of these international labor fellows think they can get away with anything." He said Murray's presence might be needed for only a half hour at the hearing.

At the same time, Hoffman and Rep. John Lesinski (D. Mich.), slated to head the House labor committee in the 81st Congress, have been feuding publicly over which of them should probe the Shakespeare situation.

Gibson Flays Affidavits

ASST. Sec. of Labor John W. Gibson gave strong indications at New York City Dec. 14 that the administration does not favor salvaging the non-Communist affidavit provision in the law that is to replace the Taft-Hartley act.

Addressing the Bronx Rotary Club, Gibson declared: "The anti-Communist affidavit provisions of the Taft-Hartley law, as they now stand, are discriminatory and unfair. On the other hand, nothing can be gained by requiring that management also sign the affidavits. Labor has demonstrated its ability to clean its own house of Communist influences by democratic methods without outside help."

This was in contrast to the position taken by Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin at the recent AFL convention that affidavits would be acceptable if employers were also required to sign them. It was noted, however, that Tobin has not repeated that view in recent weeks.

Gibson, a former president of the Michigan CIO Council, said repeal of the Taft-Hartley law would "go a long way toward improving labor-management relations."

"Labor and management will be free to bargain collectively without government interference," he said. "They will be able to bargain once again on such issues as the union shop, closed shop and welfare and pension plans. The relationship between labor and management will be taken out of the field of legal rigmarole and returned to the bargaining table."

Gibson said no answer had been worked out to the problem of handling "emergency" labor disputes. "Both labor and management are opposed to compulsory arbitration," he pointed out. "Plant seizures such as were carried out during the war do not appear to be a satisfactory solution acceptable to both parties."

NMU Wins $16 In Rises This Year

MEMBERS of CIO Natl. Maritime Union have voted overwhelmingly to accept a $3.50-a-month wage boost for all seamen, bringing their total raises for the year to $16 a month.

Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship operators granted the pay hikes under a wage reopening clause in the NMU contract. The sailors won the first $12.50 when they signed the contract last August. The new boost brings their wages up to those of west coast seamen, who recently ended a long strike.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran pointed out that before the strike, the west coast maritime workers were not getting as much as those in the East.

In addition to the $3.50 basic hike, the NMU members have won increased hourly rates for overtime.

Say 47 of 75 Broke Hour Law in Alaska

It's hard to be honest when there's no one to watch you. The old saying seems to apply quite well to Alaskan employers, it appears from a U. S. Labor Dept. wage-hour inspection in that territory.

For some time the Labor Dept., hard hit by 80th Congress economy, did not keep a permanent staff in Alaska. Recently four wage-hour inspectors were pulled into Alaska from the states for a four-month checkup. They found 47 of the 75 places they inspected were violating the wage-hour law.

The inspectors found the bosses had chiseled 217 workers out of $61,000 pay due them. In most cases, the employers were not paying time and half after 40 hours a week.

CIO DENOUNCES REGIONAL COLLEGE PLAN

WHILE some segments of the Nation's Capital were drawing themselves up to their full dignity and protesting an unflattering report by the Natl. Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital, a group of Southern governors and educators got together to cook up a way to out fox the U. S. Supreme Court.

The High Court has been annoying Southern states for some years with its insistence that a state must furnish equal educational facilities for both white and Negro residents.

This was the 14 Dixie states' problem: If, under their present system of segregation, they provided duplicate facilities of equal caliber, then obviously the state would go broke. It was financially possible to provide equal facilities only by permitting students of both races to share the same facilities.

Rather than part with Jim Crow, the Southern governors hit on a plan, whose constitutionality is questioned by many observers:

A PROGRAM of regional education was devised, whereby the 14 states would pool their resources to create segregated regional colleges. The initial expenditure—to amount to $2,434,000 annually after four years in operation—would finance medical, dental and veterinary training.

A two-year fund of $600,000 was approved for Meharry Medical College for Negroes in Nashville, Tenn., which the governors were warned would fold up without their financial aid. Three white and one Negro college will receive money for regional veterinary schools.

Two CIO representatives were quick to denounce the regional pact.

Said James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, secretary of the President's Committee on Civil Rights and chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination:

"The southern governors' regional educational plan is a device to sidestep Supreme Court rulings that the states must provide equal educational facilities for both Negroes and whites. Such equality is impossible on a segregated basis, which results in the expense of duplicate facilities and inferior educational facilities for both groups. If put into effect, the plan will definitely result in inferior facilities for both Negroes and whites."

"The plan," said George Weaver, director, CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, "is designed, in our opinion, to establish segregated regional universities in an attempt to evade the mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Gaines and Sipuel decisions."

LAST spring a group of southern Congressmen and Senators sponsored a Congressional resolution to authorize interstate compacts establishing segregated regional universities. The resolution was apparently inspired by the Southerners' fear that such an interstate agreement would be unconstitutional without Congressional approval.

The resolution passed the House and just missed passage in the Senate by a one-vote margin. Vigorous opposition to the move was expressed by the CIO, represented by Weaver, when he testified before a sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee last March.

At that time Weaver cited the Supreme Court's Gaines Decision, which stated that "if a state furnishes higher education to white residents, it is bound to furnish (within the state) substantially equal advantages to Negro students."

"Clearly," Weaver said, "the purpose of S. J. 191 is to substitute segregated regional schools for Negroes in the hope of avoiding the Constitutional responsibilities of the states to provide equal educational opportunities to all of its citizens.

"Study after study has conclusively demonstrated that educational facilities for Negroes in segregated areas are inferior to those provided for whites. . . ."

Another report was cited by Weaver to support the CIO's stand against segregation.

The President's Commission on Higher Education had concluded: " . . . there will be no fundamental correction of the total condition until segregation legislation is repealed."

CIO Pamphlet In Chinese Planned

Got any friends in China?

If so, you can tell them they'll soon be able to read CIO pamphlets translated into Chinese.

"The Bible and the Working Man" is being translated by the Christian Literature Society, which is reported "intrigued" with the CIO publication.

Plans are under way to translate the "Joe Worker" comic strip and run it in many Chinese papers.

News of the enthusiastic reception accorded to CIO pamphlets was sent to Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross by Henry D. Jones of the Natl. Christian Council of China. The Council maintains offices in Shanghai.

Union Will Offer Reward For Slayer

Local 2606, CIO Steelworkers, Columbus, Ohio, will offer a reward for information leading to the arrest of the slayer of one of its members. Three hundred members have already contributed to the reward fund.

Edward Coleman, 50, was slain under mysterious circumstances on Dec. 6 as he sat in his living room talking with his wife. The assailant fired through a window and the .32 caliber bullet entered Coleman's head. He died immediately.

Plan Drive For Pensions in Rubber

A CAMPAIGN for pensions throughout the rubber industry is under way.

This was announced by Vice-Pres. H. R. Lloyd of CIO United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers of America. Lloyd is chairman of a committee set up by the union's General Executive Board at its recent meeting in Portland, Oregon, to "make a survey and recommendations with regard to retirement and pension plans."

Other members of the committee are Pres. George Milliron of Goodyear Local 2, and Sec'y Francis Hannley of Firestone Local 7, both Akron members of the GEB.

"Our committee has met and begun a survey of all existing pension plans in the rubber industry," said Lloyd. "It is our opinion that existing plans are entirely inadequate. They do not afford sufficient benefits to the retired workers and workers have no voice in the administration of the pension plans."

"Our committee feels that rubber companies, in view of their record profits and tremendous financial reserves, should bear the costs of pension plans that would assure retired workers a decent livelihood. It is our opinion that the workers, through their union, should have a share in the administration of pension plans," Lloyd declared.

Lloyd said the rubber union was going to meet with the steel and auto unions to get data on pension plans in effect in those unionized industries, and the committee will submit a report to the rubber union executive board next February.

Bad and Good Sportsmanship

, Mrs. Amy Mallard (above, r.) swears out a warrant identifying William L. Howell (above, l.) as one of the mob of hooded white men who shot and killed her husband on a dark Georgia road Nov. 20. The lynchers halted the Mallard car, in which Mrs. Mallard and two young cousins were riding. Georgia police took no action following Mrs. Mallard's charges until the day of her husband's funeral, when they arrested the widow and charged her with the murder. Protests forced the dropping of this absurd charge. The two teen-age cousins were being held in jail as material witnesses.

Union Men To Help in Slave Probe

A special commission of trade union and liberal leaders will conduct hearings on forced labor throughout the world, the Workers Defense League announced.

Testimony is already being assembled from victims of slave labor systems, the WDL said. It will be studied by the commission in New York in February, and then presented to the public as part of the League's campaign to force a United Nations investigation of peonage and slavery, the Rev. Donald Harrington, WDL chairman, declared.

Pres. John Green of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, CIO Auto Workers Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, AFL Vice Pres. Matthew Wohl and Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters are among the commission members.

Dr. Harry Gideonse, President of Brooklyn College, is chairman of the commission, which includes Socialist spokesman Norman Thomas, and Americans for Democratic Action leader Arthur Schlesinger Jr.

"Any tolerance of slavery, or even silence in the face of it, daily rots the fibre of all mankind," the WDL said.

Slave labor camps in the Soviet Union, peonage in Latin America, and in the United States, outright slavery in Africa and forced prostitution in Asia, all will be exposed by the commission's report, said Harrington.

Ship Union Not 'Front,' NLRB Rules

THE NLRB tackled the problem of whether one union is really a front for another organization not permitted on the ballot under the Taft-Hartley act in an involved representation election ruling issued last week.

First of all, the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers sought bargaining rights at the Sampsel Time Control Co., Spring Valley, Ill. The company put up the novel defense that the IUMSWA should not be on an NLRB ballot, claiming it was merely a front for the CIO Mine Mill and Smelter Workers, which has not signed Taft-Hartley affidavits.

The company's argument: that the IUMSW unit organizing the plant, the Progressive Metal Workers Council, had an organizer who had formerly been with the mine-mill union. Actually, the council is a group which seceded from the IUMMSW and went over to the ship union in a body many months ago. The NLRB decided the company's "front" argument carried no weight.

But then the Central Trades and Labor Council (AFL) applied for bargaining rights, asking that its name be placed on the ballot. The NLRB would not admit the AFL council to the election, on the ground that it was really a front for Dist. 50, United Mine Workers (unaffiliated) which is not in compliance with Taft-Hartley affidavits. The fact that the UMW is no longer affiliated with the AFL apparently made no difference.

The NLRB reasoning here is that the UMW controlled four votes of 30 in the council, and that these four were a majority of the quorum of seven required for council meetings. Also, the NLRB said, the UMW allowed the council to meet in its hall.

Pa. CIO Asks Probe Of Utility, Milk Units

A demand for a sweeping legislative probe into the operations of the state's Public Utility and Milk Control Commissions has been approved by the Pennsylvania CIO Council.

The state CIO's legislative conference acted after a delegate charged that the public has been getting "dirty deals . . . from the PUC" and called for an "investigation to see what can be done."

State CIO Pres. Harry Boyer pointed out that members of both parties had been urging an investigation and asked for a motion instructing state CIO officers to work for one. The motion was later amended to include the Milk Control Commission.

The day-long conference, concerned mainly with discussing anti-labor measures enacted in 1947 by the state legislature, heard state CIO Vice Pres. Anthony J. Federoff call for a united labor front to fight the laws.

Dudley Urges Minn. CIO To Work For Victory In '50

THREE hundred delegates to the 11th annual convention of the Minnesota CIO Council at Winona elected without opposition Glen Peterson of the CIO Steelworkers as their president for the coming year and reelected Rodney C. Jacobson secretary-treasurer.

Both officers announced their wholehearted support of national CIO policy. Jacobson said he was willing to work with all, even those who supported Henry A. Wallace, provided they actively follow CIO policy.

An attempt was made by a United Public Workers business agent to put before the convention a resolution criticizing Minnesota Labor, official state newspaper. The resolution charged the paper with misrepresenting national CIO convention action on UPW. CIO Regional Director Frank Fulton retorted that for the first time since its formation, the Minnesota CIO had a paper devoted to national CIO policy.

ASSISTANT CIO-PAC Director Tilford Dudley was roundly applauded as he told delegates he was glad to be in Minnesota to help celebrate the defeat of Sen. Joseph Ball (R.). The anti-labor senator was defeated by Hubert Humphrey with the help of union doorbell ringers.

Dudley warned that unless a constant vigil is kept and all-out organizational work continued, the 1950 elections will find labor suffering the same defeat as in 1946. He pointed out that 1950 was an off-election year and that labor stands to lose unless it continues political action.

The convention unanimously adopted a program for action on a state scale, calling for a $1 minimum hourly wage, increased unemployment compensation benefits, stepped-up aids to handicapped children and additional services for the blind.

The convention did go on record to maintain and step up its cooperative educational program and seek better relations between labor and farmers.

Fertilizers' High Cost Protested

The high price of fertilizer was protested last week in a letter from Pres. James G. Patton of the Natl. Farmers Union to manufacturers of anhydrous ammonia. Because of high costs of fertilizer and other supplies, farmers have been forced to boost food prices for city workers.

Writing to officials of the Mathieson Chemical Co. and the Commercial Solvents Corp., Patton said that "since the demand for nitrogen is so far in excess of the supply, the consumers of fertilizer are pretty much at the mercy of the industry. We believe it would be an unhealthy precedent for you to raise prices again at this time . . ."

Santa To Call On Kids of Oil Strikers

By RAY DAVIDSON

THE children of 2,000 strikers against Union Oil Co. in California will be convinced Christmas Day that there IS a Santa Claus even if Daddy is on the picket line.

People all over the United States—union people and non-union people as well—are pouring real Christmas cheer into the union halls of Rodeo Local 326 and Long Beach Local 128 of Oil Workers Intl. Union. Both locals are in California.

Daily the postman brings to each of the halls a new stack of packages containing toys, candy and all the goodies that go to make Christmas merry. There are checks, too, with the instructions that the money be spent to make Christmas happy for the children. Cash contributions already total several thousand dollars.

For 500 or more children of strikers at Rodeo, Santa Claus was to arrive Dec. 20 at a big Christmas party in the Rodeo grammar school. Local union officials said every child would get at least one toy, along with good eats and entertainment.

Christmas Spirit

Members of the Laurel, Mont., local of the CIO Oil Workers—who recently gave a day's pay to the union's defense fund—have given another day's pay to the Christmas fund for the children of the locked-out employes of the Union Oil Co. Total of each contribution was $1700.

Date for the party for children of strikers against Union Oil's Wilmington refinery had not been set at press time. Local 128 will stage the party in its sub-local hall at Torrance, and more than 1000 children are expected to be present. They too will receive all the things that go to make Christmas joyous.

The strikers against Union Oil Co., are now locked out by the company. Nearly two months ago they offered to return to work on the company's wage terms, but the company replied that there were jobs for only 450 of the original 2,200 strikers.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers said that the union is determined to continue the strike. Contributions should be sent to Oil Workers Intl. Union, 210 Ledger Bldg., Fort Worth, Texas.

United Front Formed To Avert Sales Tax

Labor unions have joined with druggists, ice dealers, food dealers, jewelers, restaurant and bar owners and others to map a campaign against a sales tax in the next session of the Georgia legislature.

Representatives from all over the state, meeting in Atlanta, were told by John W. Piercy of the Georgia Workers Education Service that a 3% sales tax would take about $40,000,000 out of the pockets of the working people.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. 11 WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 27, 1948 82 No. 52

We Kept Our Date In '48

Seldom had a year started off so badly for American union members—and seldom did one end so well.

When the holiday celebrations were over, 12 months ago, the outlook was for trouble, trouble and more trouble.

When 1948 ended, the atmosphere was one of optimism and good cheer.

The turning point—in case you had not guessed it—was the second Tuesday in November.

Last JANUARY, though, the straws in the wind weren't flying in the direction of a tremendous liberal victory. "Business is Dreaming of a Golden '48," the CIO News said in a lead story.

The year's political confusion was off to an early start. Henry Wallace had just announced his Third Party. Pres. Truman had no comment. Bob Taft of Ohio was "very happy"—and PAC's Jack Kroll pointed out, "It has been the policy of PAC not to support a third party in 1948."

Sec. of State Marshall was telling Congress that dollars, not words, were necessary to produce European recovery. But in Birmingham and Memphis, the Freedom Train didn't stop because of segregation rules.

At month's end, the CIO Executive Board produced some important policy statements. CIO opposed the Wallace Third Party; it called for a "substantial" round of wage boosts; support of the Marshall Plan was tops on the legislative program for '48.

In FEBRUARY, policy was being translated into action.

The MARCH winds brought more Taft-Hartleyism from employers. Packinghouse workers went out on what proved to be a long, tough strike.

CIO's Economic Outlook showed the country getting deeper into an economic hole—the result of continued inflation.

CIO policy was being tightened up in every section of the country. Councils were asked to declare themselves —for or against CIO attitudes for ERP, against the Third Party. With few exceptions, they were strongly "for" the CIO's stand. In California, Regional Director Harry Bridges was "against"—and he was relieved of his post.

APRIL found Sen. Joe Ball (you know what happened to him in November) toying with the idea of weakening the Wage-Hour law.

The Taft-Hartley spirit was running high. A Chicago packinghouse worker was killed on the picket line; a 19-year-old textile worker was shot on the picket line at Rome, Ga.; rich U. S.

Steel said "no" to the steel union's wage demand.

PAC activity was stepping up around the country. In New York, Mike Quill of the Transport Workers quit the presidency of the New York City CIO Council (it wasn't following national CIO policy) and left the American Labor Party in a huff.

MAY brought signs that some Republicans weren't happy with Taft-Hartley. Two GOP'ers proposed to remove the union-shop election clause. A CIO News survey of Indiana showed hot PAC activity; "it's clicking" in the Hoosier state, the story said.

General Motors came through with a cost-of-living and production efficiency wage increase—the first from big business—and other corporations started to follow suit. Business papers began to admit that '48 profits would reach record highs, just as CIO had predicted. And the CIO News, taking a long look at the 80th Congress, predicted it would hand the people a goose egg. It did.

JUNE was the month that the Republican party nominated—let's see, who was it—oh, Tom Dewey, to be President of these United States.

But June brought roses, too. The U. S. Supreme Court threw out the T-H case against CIO and Phil Murray. The decision meant any labor union paper could talk about politics—a right presumably guaranteed by the Constitution.

Spirits quickened in JULY when Harry S. Truman showed his fighting spirit at the Democratic convention, and labor-liberal forces pushed through a militant party platform. The Dixiecrats pulled out of the party, and there was hardly a wet eye in the house.

The steel union won a husky pay increase throughout the industry.

CIO's 1948 Voting Record showed the worst about the 80th Congress, and you could smell the work of the big business lobbies.

As AUGUST ended, CIO voted a down-the-line endorsement of Pres. Truman and his program. The special session petered out, on a do-nothing basis, just the way the Republican smart boys had planned it.

With Marshall Plan getting under way, labor representatives moved into key posts. Averell Harriman, talking to U. S. and European union leaders, said labor "can do most for ERP."

In SEPTEMBER, Maine showed how the country might go in November but few could read the signs. Anti-labor bills were defeated in the Maine elections, and too many people thought the result was a freak. Primaries in other states showed the liberal tide rising higher.

A month later, in OCTOBER, evidence was beginning to pile up that should have led to more labor optimism than they did. Jack Kroll of PAC noted that registrations were at record highs. "Gallup Way Off on Vote Guess," a CIO News story said, thumbing its nose at the polltakers' "science."

You know what happened in NOVEMBER; there's no use repeating it here.

But other things happened, too. Sec. of Labor Tobin predicted Taft-Hartley would be repealed. Rep. J. Parnell Thomas of the House Un-American Activities Committee was indicted on a charge of taking kickbacks from his staff.

CIO held its victory convention. It slapped down Communist influence, charted big organizing drives among store, white-collar and government employes, gave PAC a big pat on the back, and support to the ERP.

DECEMBER found the Natl. Association of Manufacturers holding a very glum meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria.

CIO proposed joint legislative action with the AFL, but the AFL demurred —for the time being at least.

CIO asked the clothing union to organize store workers; the transport workers ended the reign of its left wing; and workers looked to the 81st Congress, soon to assemble in Washington, to carry out the program on which it had been elected.

Things were looking up, clearly, at the end of the year; and 1949 gave every indication of being a year of promise.

Economic Outlook Says It's No Cinch, But

'49 SOCIAL SECURITY ADVANCES LIKELY

THE year which begins this Saturday is expected to be one of major advances in social security, both at the collective bargaining table and through the legislative channels.

It won't be a breeze, the CIO's Economic Outlook points out. That's because "many reactionaries still cling to the idea that workers can be made to work efficiently only if they fear discharge and if there is a line of shabby men applying at the gate.

"Such people still think in terms of charity, not social insurance which maintains income as a matter of right without the miserable test of need. To them, social security payments seem objectionable costs which mean higher taxes.

"They ignore the blessings such payments mean to men, women and children who are given safe homes, enough food, clothing and heat, and the healthy atomosphere which develops sound citizens."

The Economic Outlook, which is issued by the CIO's Dept. of Education & Research, urges unions not to relax in their efforts to get social security benefits through contractual relationships. "Collective bargaining can obtain benefits which meet the special needs of the workers and union involved over and above the basic level eracted for everyone."

WHAT of the "vast variety of health and welfare plans started by employers years ago?" "Often such plans were intended to tie the workers to the company and keep out unions."

Why should such plans be part of collective bargaining?

"To prevent aged workers being fired just before becoming eligible for pensions, to avoid compulsory retirement of aged workers and in general to seek to have a voice about a matter of such great concern to them."

The Inland Steel case was used as an example. There, "the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the courts have decided that health and welfare plans are a proper subject for collective bargaining and that the employer must discuss them with unions on request."

The Outlook then went on to explain what some CIO unions have done or are planning to do about social security.

"THE Amalgamated Clothing Workers took the lead over 20 years ago in obtaining agreement by employers to finance benefit funds to protect union members from insecurity.

"Six thousand employers, making contributions ranging up to 5% of weekly payrolls, have entered into collective bargaining agreements setting up benefit programs.

"These programs cover more than 250,000 union members. A recent report showed $500 life insurance benefits for each, weekly illness or disability benefits of 13 weeks in any 12 months; $6 daily hospitalization benefits for 31 days and 31 days of accident confinement in any 12 months; up to $50 for incidental hospital expenses and up to $150 for surgical expenses.

"The CIO Auto Workers have set up a special social security department to assist its locals in the development and promotion of the international's program. One of its biggest successes is the recently established Kaiser-Frazer trust fund administered by a board representing in equal numbers management and the union.

"The program, which is operated by the UAW social security department as a part of its service for UAW locals is entirely financed by employer payments into the trust fund.

"Employes are assured full payment of hospital bills incurred by themselves and/or their families, $2000 death benefits, approximately $30 weekly disability benefits, and, pending the development of a more complete medical care program. Cash indemnity is given for workers and their families to help meet the cost of surgical care.

"The Textile Workers have obtained insurance provisions in contracts covering 75% of the union's 450,000 members.

"The Steelworkers' proposals presented to U.S. Steel provided (1) life insurance for covered employes amounting to 18 months of the average wages of the individual, an average of $5400; (2) that employes reaching 65 be given a fully paid-up life insurance policy amounting to $1500 (3) hospitalization benefits of $8 per day up to a year, provided by the company; (4) payment by the company of $35 per week to employes off work on account of sickness; (5) maternity care for mothers and child care for all children under 18 years of age."

Why does the CIO favor payment in full of all costs by the employer? Why, screams the employer, that's unfair!

Says the Outlook: "The reasons for this were effectively set forth by Pres. Philip Murray in an article in the Journal of Commerce. As he points out, an employer cannot compel employes to participate in a social security plan. He must offer the plan to employes and such of them as volunteer to participate do so and the others do not.

"In the Inland Steel unit of the Steelworkers, only 42% of the eligible workers were participating and only 26% of the total members. The only sure way of having all employes covered is to have a non-contributory plan."

This is how Economic Outlook

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

sums up the CIO's position on bargaining for social security:

"(1) To get a definite amount contributed by the employer; (2) to have the money put into a trust fund so it cannot be used for any purpose other than social security benefits, and (3) to obtain an equal voice in developing and operating the program."

NOW, as to our legislative program.

"The need is clearer than ever for a complete national program with adequate benefits and enlarged coverage to give protection against the economic hazards of old age, survivorship, sickness and unemployment," says Outlook.

"Such a program should also provide a strong national employment service and insurance against the costs of medical care. It should promote rapid expansion of the nation's supply of hospitals, doctors, dentists, nurses and other health services and facilities. It should improve the public aid program, which gives help, on the basis of need rather than insurance, by including minimum federal payments and helping all persons in need, even if they have not lived in the state a long time."

Just one example. Under federal old age and survivors' insurance the average aged worker who is entitled to benefits now gets only $25 a month, or $39 if he has a dependent wife over 65. The highest benefit now payable is $45 for one person and $67.50 for a man and wife.

"Few wage earners are entitled to these amounts since they are available only to persons who have earned $3000 a year steadily since 1936."

Needless to say, such payments are ridiculous when one considers the high cost of living.

Pa. Electric Co-op Votes For CIO

Reginald Brown, CIO Utility Union, reports the winning of an election among the employes of the Southwest Central Rural Electric Cooperative Corporation of Indiana, Pennsylvania. The vote was UWUA 28, no union 10, challenged ballots 2, employes eligible to vote 43.

"WE BETCHA—WE GETCHA!" was the challenge to Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.) by the conference of the 16th Ohio Congressional District PAC held at Canton, O. More than 160 delegates attended the sessions—pictured above—and formulated campaigns for the 1949-50 campaign. Speakers included Chairman L. W. Abel, Steelworkers; Frank Hoffmann, USA legislative representative; William Lavelle, Ohio PAC secretary-treasurer; Rep.-elect John McSweeney and Dillard Stokes, national PAC. Elected with Abel were Vice Chairman William Neal; Recording Secretary H. E. Knapp and Treasurer James Mason.

Taft just squeezed by in '46.

Dept. Store Drive Gets $1 Million

THE general executive board of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers will be asked to earmark "an initial $1,000,000" for organization in the department store and retail apparel fields, Jacob S. Potofsky, president of ACW, announced last week.

Potofsky made his announcement after a two-day meeting of the ACW's Department Store Organizing Committee.

Two days before the Potofsky announcement, the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes Union announced that its president, Samuel Wolchok, had taken an "indefinite leave of absence."

The RWDSU had been sharply criticized at the CIO convention by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who declared the union had failed in organizational work.

The week before last, the CIO vice presidents, meeting with Murray and CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, asked the ACW to bring to the department store, wholesale, retail and allied fields the "benefits of union organization."

Potofsky also announced that ACW would put all its resources and manpower in this drive in the department store and retail apparel fields, "carrying out the mandate of the CIO." He also said that a major educational program would be launched at once, with hundreds of thousands of pamphlets, leaflets, etc.

He also said that ACW would respect the collective bargaining structure of unions in fields where they have long existed.

Murray Flays Netherlands

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has condemned the "Dutch aggression in Indonesia" and praised the U. S. State Dept. for its leadership in seeking a speedy end to the hostilities.

In a letter to Secy. of State George C. Marshall, Murray said the State Dept. would be fully supported by American workers in whatever steps it takes to terminate the Dutch aggression.

"The CIO has always felt that the peoples of the colonial countries should be given the greatest possible assistance in developing free, democratic governments," Murray wrote.

"At a time when the world is striving desperately to find a road to peace, we feel that the action of the Netherlands government in suddenly and wantonly attacking the people of Indonesia conforms neither to the morality of our civilization nor to the practical political needs of the people of western Europe and the United States."

Murray urged the U. S. government to "take every feasible step in the realm of diplomacy and economics to help terminate the Dutch aggression in Indonesia."

Rep. Hoffman Had No Audience

Murray Ignores One-Man Strike Probe

THE House's one-man labor "sub-committee" — Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.)— was on hand in Washington last week for a hearing at which he planned to question CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Hoffman was there. Nine reporters were there. But Murray wasn't. Nor were there any spectators.

Murray had refused to answer a subpena from Hoffman, contending that the subpena was "void" and that Hoffman's claim that he constituted a one-man sub-committee was "null and illegal."

Hoffman said he wanted to question Murray about alleged violence in connection with a CIO Steelworkers' strike at the Shakespeare Co., Kalamazoo, Mich.

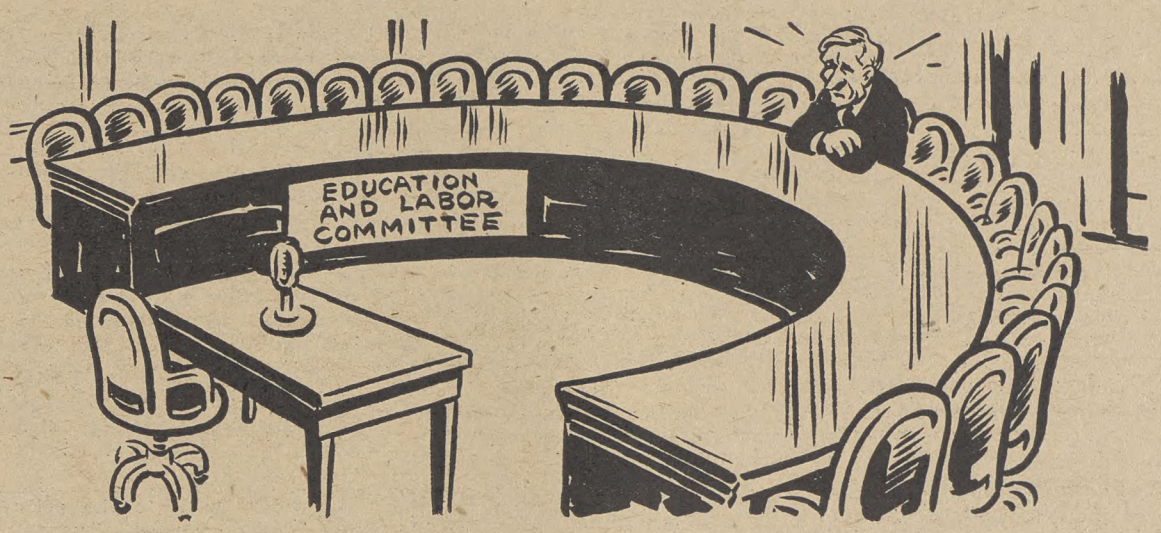
A letter sent by Murray, who was served with a subpena at his Pittsburgh office, said in part:

"I ASSUME that in claiming to act as chairman of a 'special committee' you are relying on Congressman Hartley's letter which purported to appoint you chairman of a special subcommittee of one. I am advised by counsel that no authority in law exists for the appointment by committee chairmen of subcommittees of one and that your purported authority under Hartley's letter is accordingly wholly void.

"Counsel advise me that the very term 'committee' or 'subcommittee' means a body consisting of more than one person, so that no so-called subcommittee of one can validly exist.

"I am further advised by Congressman Lesinski, who, as you know, is the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Education and Labor, that he is in accord with the views expressed in the preceding paragraph. He further advises me that, under the practice of the House, a subcommittee cannot be validly created without representation of the minority party, and that he was not even so much as advised of Congressman Hartley's purported designation of a subcommittee."

(Lesinski will succeed Hartley as chairman of the committee in the 81st Congress.)



NEXT act in this drama took place in Room 428, Old House Office Bldg.

The reporters mentioned before were there at the time the hearing had been called. There was not a single spectator in the 50-odd chairs in the visitors' portion of the room.

The usual half-moon-shaped committee platform, raised above the floor, was there. Finally, nearly a half hour late, Hoffman strode into the room, accompanied by his dignity as a Representative and by a committee investigating officer, F. Albert Reiman.

Hoffman strode to the center committee chair and, standing, declared: "The committee—I mean me—will come to order!"

Since there was no one else—except Reiman—for him to talk to—Hoffman talked to the reporters.

Asked they: "What are you going to do about this?"

Replied he: "I'm going to send all the communications to the Justice Dept."

ASKED they: "What do you expect from that?"

Replied he: "Nothing."

Asked they: "Well, do you think there is a case against Murray?"

Replied he: "There is some merit in his position and he has a good case in a moral sense."

Then up piped one reporter: "Say, how do you know Murray didn't come anyway? You haven't called out his name."

While Hoffman was pondering over that one, the reporters made a show of looking around the otherwise empty room.

"Oh, oh," cried Hoffman. "I suppose you want me to have his name called three times for technical purposes."

The reporters said that might be a good idea.

Hoffman replied that he would do it after the press left.

He then read a letter he said he was sending to Murray expressing surprise that Murray had not appeared.

He also said that he was calling as a witness the "sheriff" who had served Murray. (He meant deputy marshal, not sheriff.)

★ ★ ★

Some more pertinent material on Affair Hoffman:

1. There are 25 members of the House Labor Committee.

2. As we go to press, no one can find any evidence that Hoffman had the name of either Murray or the "sheriff" called out.

He Who Gets Slapped

Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.), one-man sub-committee, ran into a tartar in Michigan last week, too.

He called Michigan Attorney General Eugene Black in his investigation of the Kalamazoo Steelworkers' strike.

Hoffman asked Black why he had not prosecuted enough labor unions. Black shot back: "I don't play to the press as you do."

Eberharter Backed

Rep. Herman Eberharter (D, Pa.) announced his drive to curb the dictatorial powers of the House Rules Committee is winning substantial support.

Eberharter's plan calls for a change in House rules to force the committee to report within two or three weeks after it receives recommendations from a regular committee of the House.

Would Hit Dixiecrats

The Dixiecrats don't belong in the Democratic caucuses in Congress, the executive board of Americans for Democratic Action declared.

Removal of the Southern renegades from the House and Senate caucuses would automatically oust them from key committee posts, the ADA board members explained, adding that "this same discipline should be imposed on Wallace Progressives in either House."

Farm Corps. Are Flayed

Corporation farming is a serious threat to the welfare of the nation's farming population, says Stanley Vogt of the National Farmers Union, who recently made an educational and organizational tour across Tennessee, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

In Arkansas and Oklahoma particularly, he stated, it is extremely serious. One farm near Pawhuska, Okla., has 200,000 acres. "Thinking about the size of such farming operations, and others like it, with all the implications of corporate ownership of land, can make you lose sleep," Vogt says.

"Two weeks ago in an Oklahoma City paper, I read that since 1940 over 300 farm homes in one community have been moved off the land and into the town of Hobart. That is one more example of farms becoming larger, yet fewer, and farm families leaving the land."

CIO Member Wins $30,000 In Radio Quiz Contest

Plunged into national prominence Dec. 18, as the winner of the Papa and Mama Hush Radio Contest was Oscar Keith of Munster, Ind. He will receive prizes valued at $30,000 from the Truth and Consequences show.

Keith is a trustee of Local 120, CIO Gas Coke and Chemical Workers at the East Chicago (Ind.) plant of Harbison Walker Refractories Co. and has been active in the affairs of his local unions for several years. He is married and the father of four children.

Keith's good fortune came when he was chosen as the first of three persons scheduled to be called during the radio program which has for several weeks been attempting to identify Papa and Mama Hush through the sound of their voices and a rhyming jingle containing clues of their identity.

The answer which brings a cascade of prizes on the Keith household was Veloz and Yolanda, internationally famous dancing team. Keith extended full credit for his good fortune to his wife, Mary, who did considerable library work to establish the identity of Papa and Mama Hush.

Showing no emotion at all 12 hours after winning the contest, he calmly related his experiences to newspaper men and well wishers who swarmed down on his modest home. He anticipated an early avalanche of super-powered salesmen and a call from an agent of the Collector of Internal Revenue, since a sizeable portion of the estimated $30,000 winning is taxable.

Disposition of the prizes was a problem confronting the Keith family. Keith is hoping delivery is deferred until after Jan. 1 in order to appraise his windfall after that date and also defer the federal tax payments another year.

The prizes include a two-week trip for two persons to Sun Valley, Idaho, and another trip to the presidential inaugural in Washington, a new 1949 Nash automobile and a supply of tires that will keep it on rubber for quite some time, a $2,500 savings bond and a tremendous array of household and personal furnishing including jewelry, wearing apparel, food, electrical appliances and art goods.

Name Lavelle To D. C. Post

CIO Pres. Philip Murray announced the appointment of William Lavelle, as an assistant in the Legislative Department of the CIO in Washington, D. C.

William Lavelle

Lavelle is secretary-treasurer of the Ohio State CIO Industrial Union Council and resides in Columbus. He taught in an Ohio high school for several years and practiced law for a short time before joining the staff of the CIO Steelworkers in May 1937.

In 1939, he was assigned to the CIO Council office. In 1942 he was appointed regional labor representative of the War Production Board in Columbus.

In 1943, he was elected secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council, where he has been since, with the exception of two years he served with the United States Army.

Now Is The Time For All Good Men To Give PAC $1s

THE 'GREAT ILLUSION'

Big Business executives are doing their darndest to sell the public the idea that swollen corporate profits really aren't too high.

They're having about as much luck as the mahout who tried to hide his elephant in a pup tent.

Despite the fact that they talk in technical terms designed to confuse the public, they have been unable to hide two important facts:

1. Corporate profits (after payment of taxes) for 1948 will total between $20 and $21 billion—more than five times the average for 1936-'39 and more than double those of the wartime peak year 1943.

2. Prices which were necessary to bring about such enormous profits have risen so high they are rapidly drying up the consumer buying power needed for a healthy economy.

The situation as it stands today painfully reminds us of what was going on back in that period of wonderful nonsense which came just before the Big Bust of 1929.

Just so a little illusion won't be added to the Great Illusion which Big Business is trying to manufacture, let us point out one thing:

A lot of that "consumer resistance" you've been reading about is merely the inability of people to buy what they want and need because they haven't the money.

It's interesting to note that the crowd which is trying to sell the idea that profits aren't too high is the same one which peddled the equally sound proposition that Tom Dewey was a cinch for the Presidency.

What those lads need is a Houdini. There was a guy who could create an illusion and make it stick! ★ ★ ★

WE'VE OFTEN SAID THE SAME THING

We'll wager our best New Year's resolution against an injunction that a lot of folks (including us) were shocked by the editorial in the Dec. 18 issue of Business Week, a McGraw-Hill magazine.

The editorial, entitled "Why the Taft-Hartley Act Failed," says in part:

"What was wrong with the Taft-Hartley Act was that it went too far. It crossed the narrow line separating a law which aims only to regulate from one which could destroy.

"Given a few million unemployed in America, given an administration in Washington which was not pro-union—and the Taft-Hartley Act conceivably could destroy the labor movement.

"These are the provisions which could do it: (1) picketing can be restrained by injunction; (2) employers can petition for a collective bargaining election; (3) strikers can be held ineligible to vote—while the strike replacements cast the only ballots; and (4) if the outcome of this is a 'no-union' vote, the government must certify and enforce it.

"Any time there is a surplus labor pool from which an employer can hire at least token strike replacements, these four provisions, linked together, presumably can destroy a union.

"By going that far, the law defeated itself. It was more than a pendulum swing away from the Wagner Act . . ."

To us there are two interesting things about the Business Week editorial:

The magazine's labor editor served as labor adviser to Tom Dewey during the recent Presidential campaign.

The viewpoint expressed parallels the stand taken by labor publications.

Democrats Still Have Big Job

Their Task Is To Put New Deal Program Into Action Through Congress

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MANY persons who were riding high in the saddle—or thought they were—earlier in 1948 were trying to pick themselves up out of the dust as the year drew to a close.

Some of them were "thrown" because they applied their spurs too hard to too large a portion of the public. Others fell because they tried to sell a strange bill of goods which the public didn't care to buy.

So it's on the middle ground that history should be made during 1949.

PERHAPS it's old stuff now, but there are lessons to be learned from the political campaigns and the Nov. 2 elections.

But first let's go back to the discontent resulting from the war and the government regulations imposed on the public while the conflict was going on.

Nobody really liked wartime restrictions. The group which can loosely be termed "the NAM crowd" realized this perhaps more than others and decided to capitalize on it.

OPA was killed. The Wagner Act was amended until it became the Taft-Hartley Act. Need for a realistic minimum wage was ignored.

Prices and profits went up and up and up.

And most of the leaders of business and the GOP were predicting freely that the New Deal was on its way out.

AS the GOP and the NAM attempted to swing the nation far to the right and place organized labor in hobbles a new political force appeared on the scene.

Henry Wallace headed the new group, which hoped to swing the nation far to the left.

The voters went to the polls Nov. 2 and elected Truman, Barkley and a Democratic majority in the Senate and House.

And on one important point there should be no misunderstanding. The Democrats won because of their program—a program outlined in their platform and their campaign speeches.

THOSE who elected Democrats to the new Congress will expect them to do their utmost to carry out their campaign pledges.

That is the way it should be.

And that is the way it must be if the Democrats hope to retain control of Congress in the future.

That is the way it must be if the nation is to avoid the creation of a real third party.

Slick parliamentary maneuvers and use of the filibuster must not be permitted to halt the enactment of legislation which the majority in Congress favor.

The powerful special-interest lobbies must be pushed aside.

THERE will be more at stake than just the keeping of campaign promises when the 81st Congress goes into session in January.

What the lawmakers do will have an important effect on the worldwide ideological battle being waged between the forces of democracy and communism.

There are many other things Congress could do to demonstrate to an uneasy world that under democracy in this country we can solve vexing social and economic problems without resurt to totalitarian tactics.

Such a demonstration should reveal clearly that government functions for the benefit of the whole people—not small, special-interest groups.

CIO Leaders To Attend London Union Parleys

FOUR CIO officials leave for London next month for conferences with the British Trades Union Congress and other European labor groups.

Under discussion will be the future role—if any—of the non-Communist labor movements in the World Federation of Trades Unions.

It is expected consideration also may be given to a new organization if a decision is made to leave the WFTU.

Representing CIO in the talks will be Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Automobile Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers; and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers. The group was selected by Pres. Murray.

Following the meetings in London in mid-January, Carey will go to Paris for the quarterly meeting of the WFTU's executive bureau. Frank Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and CIO's representative on the bureau, has been prevented from making the trip to Paris because of union business in this country.

Elmer Cope, CIO's assistant secretary of the WFTU, will go from Paris to London to attend the conference between the CIO group and leaders of the British unions.

THE CIO convention last month authorized CIO officers and the Executive Board to consult with the British and other free trade union groups and to "take whatever action in relation to the WFTU and the international labor movement will best accomplish CIO policies and objectives."

The resolution noted that "serious cleavages" have developed inside the WFTU on many issues.

It pointed out that organizations affiliated to the WFTU took "directly opposed attitudes" on the Marshall Plan, which the CIO supported "as a step in the fulfillment of the post-war declaration" adopted by the WFTU in 1945.

"The Soviet trade unions and other trade union centers allied with them have conducted a campaign against this effort to restore Europe's economic life," the resolution said.

"On this question, as on many others, the CIO found itself aligned with the British TUC and other free trade union centers against the Soviet trade unions and trade union centers allied with them."

IT'S IN THE CARDS

Preachers Refused To Sit And Listen

ONE day a newspaper reporter picked up a bit of "secret" information which he relayed to a CIO representative, and as a result a meeting sponsored by the NAM fell flat on its face.

What had been planned as a quiet, hush-hush affair without fireworks turned out to be a heated session.

A group of business leaders and ministers were directly involved.

And, because the meeting was "off the record," not one word about it got into print.

THE reporter, working the Chamber of Commerce "beat," kept hearing rumors about a "secret" meeting at which NAM representatives would seek to line local ministers up behind the NAM in its fight on trade unions.

Finally he rounded up enough information for a story.

He turned the story over to the city editor—and that was the last he saw of it. It never appeared in print.

This angered the reporter, who suspected the editor was "playing ball" with the NAM on its little scheme. He picked up his 'phone, called a CIO representative and gave him all the details.

AFTER thinking the matter over for a few minutes, the CIO man called a young, courageous minister who had been friendly to the unions.

"It sems to me that the NAM crowd is sailing under false colors and is inviting ministers to the meeting under false pretenses," the CIO man said.

The minister agreed and promised to "do something about it."

He repeated the story to several ministers and then they worked out a little plan of their own.

Their scheme was outlined to the CIO man but wasn't made public.

THE day of the meeting arrived and several hundred persons seated themselves around luncheon tables in the city's leading hotel.

The master of ceremonies—a top-flight industrialist who served as an official of one of the city's leading churches—stepped to the microphone.

He talked for some time and then finally got to the point. He wanted the ministers to support his group—the local NAM crowd—in its plan for "improving" management-labor relations.

At this point things began happening!

THE young minister who promised to "do "something" about the meeting rose to his feet and interrupted the master of ceremonies.

"Am I to understand that the purpose of this meeting is to enter into a discussion of management-labor relations?" he asked.

The m. c. said it was.

"And am I to understand you are going to try to convince the ministers at this meeting that they should throw their support behind your group in this matter?"

"Well, naturally, we'd like to have you behind us," the m. c. said.

"How many representatives of organized labor will be permitted to speak and give their views on management-labor relations?

"Why, er, none. This is a meeting of . . ."

INDIGNANTLY, the young minister declared, "This meeting was described to us as one at which 'a matter of civic importance' would be discussed. We were not told you hoped to line the preachers up behind the NAM and against the labor unions.

"I, for one, will not participate in such a meeting."

Another minister got up and said he, too, would not remain for the session. Three or four others followed suit.

The sweating, red-faced m. c. tried to argue them into staying. Realizing he was getting nowhere, he adjourned the meeting.

A.L.S.

Will AMA Propagandists Admit This?

(From The St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

THE American Medical Association announces that it has hired a publicity outfit to fight the Administration's national health proposal.

The A.M.A. says it is the same one "which defeated the program of compulsory health insurance proposed in (California) by Gov. Earl Warren." Instead of a government plan, the agency is to "promote" voluntary health insurance.

This will be worth watching because, while the A.M.A. House of Delegates at its recent meeting approved voluntary insurance in principle, it severely rebuked those who are working hardest to make it available on a national basis.

The Associated Medical Care Plans, an agency created by A.M.A. two years ago, sought the association's support for a stock insurance company which would make Blue Cross and Blue Shield available throughout the U. S. The proposal was not only turned down, but its sponsors were told to leave policy-making and contract-writing in local hands.

SUCH local groups have done a great deal, especially in the last two decades, to ease the burden of the high cost of medical care. This is freely and generously conceded in the Ewing Report which is the basis for Pres. Truman's proposal. It is doubtful, however, whether they alone can ever do more than make it easier for some people to meet their medical bills.

Because they operate on a flat fee premium basis, most of these insurance groups are able to give their subscribers only specified cash payments.

Most hospitalization plans have a limit on the number of days in a hospital, and a ceiling on the cost per day. Most medical care plans are confined to care given by a doctor in a hospital. There are limits on how much will be paid toward the cost of a given operation. Further, the more lengthy and expensive illnesses—mental diseases and tuberculosis, for example—are not covered.

NON-PROFIT setups, such as those sponsored by co-operatives, industries and unions, generally offer more benefits than do straight commercial insurance policies. But they must keep charges down to what their subscribers can afford to pay. So coverage is highest in states in which the population is dense and the per capita income high.

Where the coverage is greatest, these plans make a real contribution to the maintenance of medical facilities. They take a good deal of economic uncertainty out of the lives of doctors and hospital administrators. But it is significant that only two states have better than 50% coverage; Rhode Island with 67.4% and Delaware with 50.4%. At the other end of the list, nine states—Florida, Oregon, Texas, Washington, Georgia, New Mexico, South Carolina, Mississippi and Arkansas—have less than 5% coverage.

There can be much argument as to how many families can afford fees which would provide all needed services. Probably none with incomes of $2000 a year or less.

In 1945, no less than 70% of American farm families had cash incomes under $2000 a year; 42% took in less than $1000. Price increases since then probably have improved these figures. Nevertheless, they do show how difficult it is for voluntary health insurance plans, no matter how well-intended, to meet the problem of adequate medical care.

Will the A.M.A. propagandists be frank enough to admit this?

D. C. Has Democratic Side Too, AVC Tells Students

The greater Washington Area Council of the American Veterans Committee has urged the senior class of the Spring Valley (N.Y.) High School to reconsider the decision to drop its plans for the annual visit to the Nation's Capital.

Mindful that the students had dropped the tour because of reported racial discrimination in Washington, Taft Feiman, chairman of AVC in the Capital, offered to show them "the democratic side of Washington instead." In a telegram to the senior class and to its faculty advisers, Feiman said AVC would house and dine eight of its students, including four Negroes of the class.

Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) was the target for a little disciplining action last week.

In a complaint filed with the Wisconsin Supreme Court, the Bar Commission stated that the Republican Senator failed to resign his circuit judicial seat until after his election in 1946. In Washington, McCarthy attributed the complaint to "political opposition."

MURRAY FIRST ADVOCATED IN

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PERHAPS no program of the CIO in recent years has created as much interest and controversy as the Industry Council Plan.

Just what is the Industry Council Plan?

● It has been "the central element in the CIO industrial and political program for many years, and is a permanent part of the long range peacetime policy."

● To the Communist Daily Worker—through its CIO-hater "labor" editor George Morris—the plan is a clerical plot.

It does seem strange that the Worker adopts such an attitude about the plan, since the small bloc of left-wing delegates at the CIO Portland convention apparently approved of the plan. For, none of them voted "no" nor did any of them ask to be recorded as voting no or even abstaining. In fact, the vote was unanimous.

The Portland gathering adopted three "resolves" on this matter:

"1. We commend Pres. Murray and CIO officers for their outstanding leadership in the advocacy of nation-wide democratic industrial planning . . .

"2. . . Such planning must extend to all the key decisions of industries which affect the lives of the people. . .

Legislation Needed

"3. . . Planning must be accompanied at the outset by industry councils through which planning and administrative work can be kept close to the people. There should be a National Production Board on which there would be representatives of organized labor, farmers, consumers, industrial management and government."

Now, as to the plan itself. First, it is definitely not another scheme for voluntary management-labor cooperation, which is what the Daily Worker would have you believe. This Industry Council Plan needs legislation to give it teeth so that it can provide the people properly with their needs.

Of course, the law would have to have enforcement provisions, with penalties for violations.

Says the CIO: "It is our firm conviction that the principles of democratic industrial planning for which we have declared ourselves must be taken out of the realm of speculation and imagination, and must be brought down to earth and applied through political action.

". . . the key decisions of the basic and monopolistic industries which affect the lives of the people are production and employment levels, the rate and nature of capital investment, the rate and nature of technological change, maximum prices, minimum wages, guaranteed annual wages, the size and location of industrial plants, the utilization and conservation of natural resources, and the policies of the great corporations in the fields of labor relations, public information and foreign afairs."

All those are items which do or could affect the lives of each individual, of each family, of each community, of the nation. And yet, under present industrial operation, the consumer and the person without whose brain and muscle "not a single wheel could turn" must take the decisions of the few who run industry.

Steel Situation

Consider "production and employment levels." All you have to do is to look at the steel industry—that colossus which can make or break all other industry.

It is pretty obvious to even the most unskilled observer that the steel industry is not producing enough steel to take care of the nation's needs—both domestically and commitments abroad.

It is also clear to even the most unskilled observer that the steel industry—the major portion of it—has no intention of expanding its productive capacity sufficiently.

That's where the Industry Council Plan would come in. The needs of the situation would be studied and industry would have to produce.

Now, there is "the size and location of industrial plants." Many workers, particularly in the needlework industries, are too well aware of the results of run-away shops. They have caused untold unemployment and tragedy. The Industry Council Plan would prevent that.

In some cases, plants may have been located in areas where they are economically unsound. The plan would help decide where to locate the plant to use it to best advantage and also to provide travel expense or recompense for the plant's force.

You can find examples to prove the worth of every point in the plan.

THE Industrial Council Plan was born of a national emergency. Back in 1940 CIO Pres. Philip Murray (then vice president of the Mine Workers) and CIO Auto Worker's Pres. Walter Reuther (then vice president of UAW) both advanced proposals which were forerunners of the present plan.

Murray's suggestion came during an address before the 1940 CIO convention at Atlantic City—a convention which later in the week chose him as CIO president.

Murray declared:

"Personally, I would be of the opinion that there ought to be created by the President of the United States industry-wide setups to administer efficiently the production of materials essential to the national defense and to see to it that labor is given adequate representation on each industrial board to make possible the perfection of adequate, proper joint labor and industry representation.

Consulted Officials

"I have talked to a number of agents of the Federal Government and to a number of distinguished representatives of both branches of Congress suggesting that in the first instance there should be created in each important industry directly affected by national defense joint labor, industry, consumer and government boards.

"That, sitting on each board, there should be an outstanding representative of that particular industry; that represented on each one of these boards there should be an outstanding representative of the CIO labor organization having labor jurisdiction over that industry; that in the interest of public welfare the consumer should be represented and that to represent the mass interests of the entire nation there should be designated to each board a substantial representative of government.

"It would tend to prevent the development or growth of racketeering in national defense, the labor representative being cognizant of the price factors having to do with production in each industry, giving labor an opportunity with industry, consumers and government to furnish the necessary checks and balances against the development of possible corruption in the letting of contracts and the stealing of money from the Treasury.

"It is true that immediately after the creation of such boards differences may arise concerning certain features of production, labor relations, or whatever it may be, in each industry.

"But to again check the possibility of confusion arising from these disagreements, there should be created immediately above each industry a board of review, a clearing house upon which labor would again have representation to clear upon all matters in which disputes may arise affecting the constructive prosecution of true national defense.

"And then there should be created above that a final board on which the President may be a member and attached to which there must be labor representation to definitely decide and pass upon all matters of dispute in each industry affected by the national defense situation.

"These proposals have to do not only with the ordinary prosecution of proper national defense, but they comprehend other things.

"It is my candid judgment that if we had such things created when the Natl. Defense Board was originally brought into being we would not today have the sorry, pitiful spectacle of Bethlehem being accorded contracts amounting to $1,200,000,000 whilst they were violating the Natl. Labor Relations Act and the Walsh-Healey Act. The same is true with regard to the Ford situation."

Today, with the Marshall Plan in operation, it is obvious that the Industrial Council Plan is of vital necessity.

Reuther based his proposal on a single industry—the auto industry. He urged that labor-management-goverment committees be set up to study the use of then unused space and facilities in auto plants to build airplanes.

Like Murray, Reuther was attacked by industry's spokesmen, who declared Murray and Reuther were trying to seize control of industry. The plans were denounced as radical, revolutionary and even anarchistic.

That seems strange indeed in view of the present Communist attack on the plan!

After Pearl Harbor, the War Production Board announced that union-management plant production committees would be part of the fundamental policy of WPB.

That, of course did not go as far as Murray had suggested. The WPB committees concerned themselves with taking care of tools, preventing breakdowns, cutting down accidents, getting good lighting, maintenance and repairs, adapting old machines to new uses, cutting down wastes, breaking production bottlenecks, using every machine to the fullest extent.

All those were important, despite the fact some industries, more intent upon profits than their country's good, sabotaged the plan.

However, it was a good step in the right direction.

In 1942, the CIO issued a pamphlet, "War Production," sponsored by the CIO's Dept. of Industrial Union Councils. Incidentally, John Brophy, director of that department, is one of the staunchest advocates of the Industry Council Plan.

The pamphlet gave ways and means of labor participation in national defense and proved of great worth to the war effort.

Aims Stated

Another CIO pamphlet, "Planning for Democratic Defense," stated the Industrial Council's aims this way:

"(a) Find out the domestic and arms requirement of each industry, coordinate production facilities, and expand capacity where necessary.

"(b) Put unemployed workers in jobs in industries and in areas where they are available, and train new workers where necessary.

"(c) Increase production by full use of all plants, eliminating bottlenecks caused by 'contract hogging' by some big corporations, by red tape in issuing orders and other technical factors.

"(d) Promote collective bargaining in all industries requiring industry to obey labor laws such as the Wagner, Wage-Hour, Social Security, Walsh-Healey, etc., acts."

At the CIO convention in Portland last month, Brophy explained the CIO's future aims:

"No one quarrels with genuine union-management cooperation where we can get it. But the Industry Council Plan is far more than a kind of suggestion box proposition, since it calls for public planning and controls and covers all the decisions of big industry which affect the lives of the people.

"What does this program mean in our daily lives right now?

"Take industrial capacity, for one thing. For the last year or two, the Steel union, the Auto union, and the CIO as a whole have taken the position that we need more steel-producing capacity in this country. We need it in order to fulfill our commitments under the European Recovery Program. We need it in order to have enough steel to make automobiles and keep automobile workers employed.

Price Studies

"This steel need extends far into our industrial fabric. Yet industry has refused to expand its capacity to anything like the degree the CIO thinks necessary. This constitutes a threat to our national security. It also constitutes a threat to the jobs of many CIO men in steel-using industries. We think we should have a voice in making decisions of this kind. We think there ought to be enforceable controls for getting such decisions carried out.

"The question of prices is another example. Both the steel union and the automobile union have gone to bat in their own industries against the policies of the big corporations whereby prices are increased every time a wage increase is granted. We have insisted and proved by figures that these price increases have not been necessary. We have shown that they were often two or three times the amount of the increase, in total money involved, and that even the amount of the increase could have been paid out of profits and surplus.

"It is a tremendous job to police prices at the retail end. It gets to be a nuisance which the public dislikes. The big corporations, however, have controlled prices for the last generation or so by systems of agencies, contracts, and the like, in spite of the anti-trust laws. They have a widely extended price-fixing system throughout the basic industries.

"Under previous resolutions and statements of the CIO, we say that the problem of price control should be tackled at the point where the big corporations now control prices. We say that the government of this country, acting through their economic organizations, ought to have a voice in this process.

People For It

"Our people will support this program: I know this because I have had ample opportunity to talk with them about it in industrial council meetings all over the country.

"Many of our international unions have gone on record for this kind of planning long since. I am satisfied also that the general public will accept this approach to industrial stabilization and democratization."

Oh, yes, let's not forget the Daily Worker and its "labor" editor, George Morris. George, ignoring the fact that there never has been a "no" vote at a CIO convention on the Industry Council Plan, says the whole thing is a clerical plot.

Well, one prominent clergyman, Rev. George Higgins of the Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference, has this to say of Morris:

"Mr. Morris is rather unhappy about the fact that the CIO convention address of Archbishop Howard (read by Rev. Thomas Tobin) emphasized the importance of the Plan.

"The Communist Party doesn't like the program; therefore, Mr. Morris doesn't like it either,

Not A Plot

"Mr. Morris, knows that there isn't anything specifically Catholic about the program. He knows that it was advocated by the CIO as far back as 1940—on its own and not at the instigation of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists or the Pope of Rome—and that since it has been vigorously advocated by Walter Reuther and other prominent non-Catholic leaders of CIO.

"He knows that not a single member of the resolutions committee which recommended endorsement of the program has any connection with ACTU.

"Mr. Morris stoops to conquer by pandering, none too subtly, to religious prejudice—an old 'fascist' custom, if anyone should happen to ask you about it, Mr. Morris."

Mr. Morris' face is red.

The above article is a broad explanation of the CIO's Industry Council Plan. From time to time, the CIO News will carry further information on this program, which is a key portion of our overall policy.

The office of John Brophy should be consulted for materials to promote this plan. He stands ready to cooperate with all in gaining the objectives of a plan for which he has worked so hard.

He suggests that materials be used widely to educate the membership to the need for this plan and to show the general public and industry how beneficial it would be to the entire community.

With the full cooperation of all of CIO, this goal can be achieved.

"The actual trend of CIO thinking is far to the left of the shoddy class warfare, Soviet foreign policy bill of goods which the Daily Worker has tried to sell the American people."

That statement was made by Richard Deverall, former educational director of the CIO Auto Workers, who has just returned from Japan, where he served as chief of the labor education branch of the Allied Occupation.

ACLU Asks Civil Rights In Germany

THE board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union has recommended to the State and Army Depts. a five-point program for improving civil rights in the three occupation zones of Germany.

The five points are:

"(1) Removal of the present restraints on criticism of the occupying powers.

"(2) Permission for Germans to travel abroad is so difficult to obtain that very few have been able to get it except upon officially approved missions.

"(3) The operations of the Counter Intelligence Corps under the Army, operating as a secret political police through the employment of scores of paid informers, is dangerous. Its operation should be curbed under top civilian authority.

"(4) On account of the lack of dollar exchange, no Germans can buy foreign books or periodicals.

"(5) Besides the Civil Rights Bureau in the Occupation, there should be a commission of private German citizens under the tri-zonal authority, with allied advisers, engaged in a continuous study of the defects of German democracy with a constant stream of publicity in support of remedial measures. The German governments, federal and state, should be encouraged also to establish civil rights bureaus."

BLS To Be Set Up In Greece

Boris Stern, chief of the Industrial Relations Branch, Bureau of Labor Statistics, has gone to Greece to study wage and work patterns for the Economic Cooperation Administration's Greek mission.

A BLS employe since 1925, Stern is on loan from the Dept. of Labor to ECA.

Boris Stern

He will help the ECA Greek mission and the Greek Dept of Labor in setting up a miniature "Bureau of Labor Statistics" to provide a flow of statistics, information on labor problems, for the use of U. S. and Greek officials.

Born in Kiev, Russia, Stern came to the U. S. in 1912. He served in the American forces during World War I and was wounded in action. In 1924 he graduated from Harvard with honors, and in 1925 received a Ph. D. from Columbia University.

His thesis at Columbia on the Works Council movement was purchased and printed as a bulletin by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and provided the basis of the present American Military Government German Works Council.

In 1945 Stern was sent to the Paris organization meeting of the World Federation of Trade Unions as an official observer for the Secretary of Labor.

ACW, Bosses Donate $70,000 To Sicily

A contribution of $70,000 to a boys' town near Palermo, Sicily, has been given by employers and members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the New York men's clothing industry, reports "Advance," the ACW's official paper.

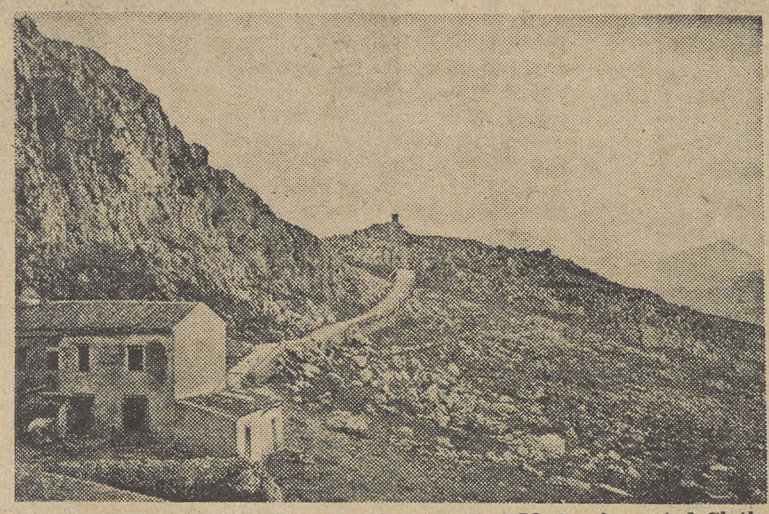
The idea for the project was conceived originally by Anthony Froise, co-manager of the ACW's N. Y. Joint Board, who worked with a committee composed of the union's Italian staff and employers to raise the fund.

The enterprise, called "New York Boys' Town," is located at Acquesanta, outside Palermo, and was built in only 120 working days after the first stone was laid.

This site was chosen partly because many New York clothing workers emigrated from Sicily and because Palermo is one of Italy's hardest hit cities. Some 10,000 children under 14 in Palermo, a city with a population of 500,000. have received no education because of the city's shortage of schools.

Three wings of buildings in Boys' Town will be named in honor of late Amalgamated officials: Sidney Hillman, former president; and Dorothy Bellanca and Joseph Catalonotti, both former vice-presidents.

The $70,000 contributed by New York union members and employers was matched by an equal sum put at the project's disposal by the Italian government, out of a fund resulting from United States aid to Italy.



ACW AIDS SICILY: Members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and employers in the New York men's clothing industry has contributed $70,000 to a boy's town near Palermo, Sicily. This photo shows the ancient road leading to Mt. Pellegrino, near Palermo.

The buildings in the Boys' Town include dormitories, schoolrooms, workshops, chapel, infirmary and theater. It will provide housing for 200 and school for 600 of the 50,000 Italian boys who still live in doorways, railroad stations, shacks and other makeshift shelters. The 50,000 are part of the 200,000 homeless boys who lost their families during the war, states "Advance."

The New York Boys' Town is the sixth opened in Italy since the war, modeled after the famous American institution in Nebraska founded by the late Monsignor Edward J. Flanagan. It was built under the direction of Monsignor Abbing, who founded, built and directed the "Boys' Republic" in Santa Marinella, near Rome.

The boys' town citizens will elect a mayor and a legislative council, and later may establish a currency for rewarding high marks in school and for purchasing meals, shoes and small luxuries. The Amalgamated will take part in the administration of the project.

"Social workers have found that Italy's homeless boys have been so toughened on the streets that they cannot be held inside the traditional orphan asylums," states Advance. "The comparative freedom inside the self-governing Boys' Town, however, has proved so satisfactory that only one boy has fled from such an institution, and even he returned voluntarily."

Peaceful Pact Facts Sought

A new type of report to determine how many of the more than 100,000 labor-management agreements are signed each year without a strike is being developed by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

An article in the December "Labor Information Bulletin" explains that at the present time no statistics exist which show the extent of peaceful collective bargaining.

The article says that "strikes are news. They make the headlines. The day-to-day, even year-to-year, peaceful and uninterrupted union and employer relations go unheralded and unnoticed."

BLS is developing a program intended to supplement its statistics on strikes with statistics on "industrial peace." This new approach will, for the first time, attempt to collect data on the number of agreements signed each month, the workers covered by the agreements, and whether the agreement was reached without a stoppage.

Unions will be asked to supply this information to the BLS at regular monthly intervals. BLS has drafted a simple post card which a union official can fill out and mail just as soon as the agreement is signed.

It is expected that BLS will obtain information which will show not only work stoppages but also the number of agreements signed without any loss in production time or workers' earnings.

Kagel Is Arbitrator For Longshoremen

The CIO Longshoremen's Union and the Pacific Waterfront Employers Association have jointly announced mutual acceptance of Sam Kagel as Pacific Coast Arbitrator for the new long-term waterfront agreement.

Kagel will serve for the life of the agreement and will act both as Coast arbitrator and area arbitrator for Northern California. Other area arbitrators will be appointed for Washington, Columbia River ports and Southern California. The agreement, which officially ended the longshore strike on Thanksgiving day and which went into effect with the resumption of work on Dec. 6, runs until June, 1951.

CIO Greets French Unions

AMERICAN labor leaders have sent greetings to CGT-Force Ouvriere, the French anti-Communist trade union federation, on the occasion of its first anniversary. The greeting read:

"We, the elected leaders of the organized labor movement of the United States, are pleased and honored to subscribe our names to this message of fraternal greeting to the workers of CGT-Force Ouvriere on the occasion of your organization's first anniversary.

"We offer you the gratitude of the free American labor movement for your struggle and your success in preserving a free labor movement in France.

"We promise you the solidarity of our great unions in your heroic efforts to protect the best interests of working men and women without surrendering the integrity and independence of your movement.

"We look forward to an ever-closer and ever more fruitful collaboration of our unions and yours in the great recovery effort of the Marshall Plan, toward the end that a free and prosperous European community may join with American democracy in the creative work of peace and civilization."

Among those who signed their following: CIO Pres. Murray; CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey; Pres. Emil Rieve, of CIO Textile Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, CIO Rubber Workers; Pres. Walter Reuther, of CIO Auto Workers, and Pres. Willard Townsend, of CIO Transport Service Employes.

TWUA Names Social Insurance Coordinator

Kenneth L. Kramer former executive secretary of the Labor Health Institute in St. Louis, Mo., and a member of the CIO Textile Workers since 1937, has been appointed coordinator of the TWUA's social insurance program.

Fitzgerald Raps Kersten Charges

Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald of the CIO Electrical Workers has termed a recent statement about UE by Rep. Charles J. Kersten (R., Wis.) as "the last quack of a lame-duck who was defeated by the people at the recent elections."

"As employes in the electrical manufacturing industry—in common with industrial workers throughout America—face a crucial problem of mass lay-offs and speed-up now and in the immediate future, Kersten and the House Labor Committee continue their campaign to smear the UE," Fitzgerald said.

Wisconsin CIO Parley

Gibson Would Put NLRB In Labor Dept.

Asst. Labor Secy. John W. Gibson proposed at the convention of the Wisconsin CIO Council that the National Labor Relations Board be put in the Labor Dept. Gibson is former president of the Michigan CIO Council.

The board has been an independent agency since it was created by the Wagner Act in 1935.

Gibson also said the Labor Dept. should include the conciliation service, the U. S. Employment Service and the unemployment compensation system, which at one time were in the department but which have been shifted elsewhere in recent years.

Gibson accused the daily newspapers of headlining "war" on the industrial front and ignoring "peace" in the majority of plants. This, according to Gibson, caused a "wave of hysteria which promoted the passage of the vicious Taft-Hartley Law."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, keynote speaker of the three-day parley, praised the state CIO body for its "sound and practical program." He reminded delegates that since the purge of left-wing elements at the 1946 Wasau convention, the Wisconsin CIO has "achieved a position where it is respected, recognized and admired by CIO groups throughout the country."

In line with a proposal made by CIO Councils Director John Brophy, the convention adopted a resolution requesting that the Citizens Non-Partisan Conference on Political Education be made a permanent organization on all levels.

The Wisconsin CIO co-operated with the conference which includes AFL, the Railroad Brotherhood, independent union and other liberal organization.

Brophy also called for continuous effort to obtain passage by Congress of the St. Lawrence Seaway proposal. He pointed out that not only would the project made available more electric power at more reasonable rates but also more iron ore for the steel mills in the lake region.

Herbert Steffes and John M. Sorenson were reelected council president and secretary-treasurer.

"We vigorously oppose all those who would violate the American and democratic emphasis of respect for human dignity, all those who would use this power to exploit the people in the interests of alien loyalties or dictatorial philosophies," the delegates resolved. Approximately 20 delegates, mostly from the Fur and Leather Workers, unsuccessfully tried to prevent passage of the resolution.

Resolutions Committee Chairman Fred Erschul, representing the Packinghous Workers, stated that "the only question is: Do you believe in our government or not? We won't tolerate Communists using our heritage to kick us in the face. We won't give a man a rope to hang us with."

Other resolutions adopted by the convention included proposals to extend and increase social security benefits, to work for a national health program, to repeal Taft-Hartley and to support ERP.

At N. Y. CIO Council

Left-Wing Gets Greatest Rebuff

THE Natl. CIO convention in Portland was virtually re-enacted in Syracuse, N. Y., as the New York State CIO Council convention routed the left-wing on every major issue and easily adopted the Natl. CIO program.

As at the National CIO conclave, the left-wingers:

1. Fought support of the European Recovery Program.

2. Attempted to include a ban on "cannibalistic" raids in the resolution on organizing the unorganized.

3. Opposed the political action resolution, which rejected proposals for a third party at this time.

On these and on other issues the minority received the most severe rebuff in the 10 years' of the Council's existence. Council Pres. Louis Hollander accused the leftists of having been chided into putting up a vigorous fight by the communist Daily Workers which criticized them for being "insufficiently aggressive."

ALTHOUGH the State CIO's close cooperation with the Democratic Party was symbolized by the appearance as a speaker of Paul Fitzpatrick, state Democratic chairman, delegates made it clear that support of the party's candidates would continue only so long as they carry out campaign promises.

As expressed by Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob Potofsky: "I have faith the Democratic platform will be carried out, but we of labor will not rely on faith alone. We will be watching, and we will not permit any going back on the promises that have been made during the campaign." If the party reneged on its promises, Potofsky continued, the need might arise for a labor party.

Fitzpatrick credited labor with a "vital part" in the Democratic gains in the state, and said that the election had given the state legislature a mandate to seek repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, enact a state health insurance plan, liberalize unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation, raise the state minimum wage to 75c an hour and abolish "nuisance" taxes.

Said Hollander when the Democratic leader finished: "If Mr. Fitzpatrick stays at the helm and the party holds fast to these principles, we can work out a coalition that will make New York once again a symbol of liberalism for all nations."

The appearance of CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey was protested by delegates from the Electrical Workers and the Public Workers, who staged a walk-out as the speaker was being introduced.

Referring to his left-wing critics, Carey said: "The condemnations they are currently directing against Philip Murray and the policies of the CIO sound very much like swan songs."

THE minority came in for some further denunciation from CIO Vice-President Allan S. Haywood and Transport Workers Pres. Michael Quill.

Haywood warned the left-wingers that they would encounter "insurrection" in their own unions if they persisted in defying CIO policy.

Quill threw out one of his typical "Quill-isms" when he said: "They Tito-ized me before Tito was Tito-ized himself, because I became convinced that the Wallace vote should split labor and make the 81st Congress worse even than the 80th."

On one issue there was unanimity—a civil rights resolution calling for abolition of the House Un-American Affairs Committee and passage of Truman's anti-discrimination program.

Both Hollander and Harold J. Garno, Council secretary-treasurer, were re-elected.

VISIT MEDICAL CENTER: On the way home from the CIO convention at Portland, more than 50 leaders of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers visited the Los Angeles Sanatorium and the Natl. Medical Center at Duarte, Calif.

50 ACW Leaders Visit S. Calif. Medical Center

MORE than 50 leaders of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers toured the grounds of the Los Angeles Sanatorium and National Medical Center at Duarte, Calif., on their way home from the CIO convention in Portland, Ore.

The union has supported the hospital since its inception more than 35 years ago. Amalgamated has erected several hospital buildings on the grounds of the Los Angeles Sanatorium and each year contributes a generous sum to the non-sectarian hospital where no patients pay for care.

Addressing the Amalgamated party, Exec. Secy. Samuel H. Golter of the hospital said, "The importance of the work being done at Duarte in the care and treatment of our unfortunate ill has always been recognized by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers from the start."

ACW Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum said, "The sanatorium and medical center is a reminder to all of us that we are our brother's keeper."

Look Who Want T-H Tightened

IGNORING the November election results, the Joint Labor-Management Relations Committee of the repudiated 80th Congress has prepared its final report. As was expected the anti-labor committee approved a set of amendments to the Taft-Hartley law designed to make it even more harmful to organized labor.

Sen. Irving Ives (R., N. Y.), who voted for T-H, refused to sign the document.

Only one of the eight House and Senate members to participate in the Committee's final session was a Democrat—an anti-union southerner, Rep. G. A. Barden (N. C.). He strung along with Republicans like Sen. Robert A. Taft (Ohio), Rep. Fred Hartley (N. J.) and Clare Hoffman (Mich.) in endorsing the Committee staff's proposals.

Among the report's suggestions are:

Repeal of the union shop elections provision. Even the Taft-Hartleyites admit now that workers want union security, and agree that the "u.a." elections are a waste of public funds.

Require employers and workers representatives alike to file non-Communist affidavits, and extend the provision to include all union negotiators and employer spokesmen who take part in collective bargaining.

Permit anti-strike injunctions in large-scale industrial disputes to be issued when a fact-finding board is appointed, rather than when it publishes its findings, and eliminate the requirement that workers vote on the employer's "last" offer. The latter provision, the committee concedes, has proven meaningless.

Exempt local business from federal labor relations regulations.

Retain restrictions on union-administered welfare funds, and give the Social Security Administration supervision over them.

Tighten up T-H's ban on mass picketing.

Benelux Workers In United Action

The labor movement of the Benelux countries—Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg—long plagued by schisms, is beginning to work out means for united action.

In Holland the social democratic, Catholic and Protestant unions of railroad workers last week set up a federation, with a single secretariat, to coordinate their activities. The fourth Dutch union group, Communist-led, has recently been losing strength, principally to the socialist unions.

Several weeks ago representatives of the principal transport workers' unions of Belgium and Holland met in Antwerp to plan future joint union action.

Brewery Union Elects Feller President

Karl F. Feller, since 1945 General Corresponding Secretary of the CIO Brewery Workers, was elected president of the organization in a membership referendum conducted from Nov. 10 through Dec. 10. Official tabulation of the ballots was completed last week.

Feller defeated his opponent, William J. Kromelbein General Secretary-Treasurer of the International Union, by a majority of 6,000 in a total of 42,000 votes cast by the members.

The office of International President was created by the International convention held in Milwaukee in September of this year; previously, the office of General Secretary-Treasurer was the highest in the 62-year-old organization.

Edward Hughlett, General Recording Secretary of the union since 1945, was unopposed for the newly-created office of General Corresponding-Recording Secretary. General Organizer Charles H. Lindberg, was reelected without opposition, Joseph Hauser was unopposed for the office of General Secretary-Theasurer, and Joseph E. Brady was reelected Coordinator of State Councils, the anti-prohibition arm of the organization, also without opposition.

The referendum also selected a General Executive Board of 10 members—one each from the eight districts in the U. S. and two from Canada—reelecting all but three of the incumbents.

The five International officers and the ten board members take office January 1, 1949.

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

CIO Rep. Harold Ash reports that in a run-off election of northern California and Nevada Accounting Dept. of the Bell Telephone System, the employes voted UBTW 615 to 444 CWA. UBTW is an affiliate of the CIO Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee.

Regional Dir. Loren Houser reports that in an election conducted in the Bemis Brothers Bag Co. Cotton Mill, Cannelton, Ind., the workers voted 253 in favor of TWUA-CIO to 34 in favor of UTW-AFL.

Regional Dir. Frank Bonacci reports that in an NLRB election held in the Kaiser-Frazier plant at Ironton, Utah, the employes voted 241 to 25 in favor of retention of USA-CIO.

Paul E. Miley, Director of Region 2A, UAW-CIO, announces that in an NLRB election conducted at the K & A Aluminum Foundry, Inc., in Springfield, Ohio, 70% of the employes voted in favor of UAW-CIO. No other union was on the ballot. Intl. Rep. Austin L. Patton of the UAW was in charge of the organizational work.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Director of Organization, IUMSWA, reports that in an NLRB election held for the Union Depot Railroad in Columbus, Ohio, the workers voted 148 to 134 in favor of CIO. There were 4 void.

Martin Gerber, Director Region No. 9, UAW-CIO, reports the following results of NLRB election conducted in Region 9, UAW, Walter Kidde Co., Inc., Belleville, N. J., UAW-CIO 411, no union 113; Federated Metals Division of A. S. & R. (Laboratory Unit), Newark, N. J., UAW-CIO 7, no union 0.

Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh reports that employes of Stoehr and Fister Furniture Store, Scranton, Pa., a division of Spiegel and Co., voted for union shop for Local 437, RWDSEU-CIO, 39 to 19.

Regional Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in elections held in the Bloomfield Molding Co., Bloomfield, N. J., the workers voted 26 to 2 in favor of URWA. The campaign was conducted by John Baldante under the direction of O. H. Bosley, District Director. In an election in the Garfield Mfg. Co., the workers voted 16 to 4 in favor of URWA. This local was assisted by Feld Rep. Joseph Ugrovitch.

Grasso Says:

Labor To Have Greater Voice In UNESCO Work

LABOR unions will play a larger role in the work of UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) hereafter as a result of suggestions made by the CIO's representative, serving as an adviser to the U. S. delegation at UNESCO's general conference in Beirut, Lebanon.

Appointed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Frank Grasso, CIO Paperworkers secretary - treasurer, returned to this country with the report that all of his suggestions regarding labor had been adopted by the full conference.

One of Grasso's proposals will result in formation of a labor liaison section, whose task will be to stimulate the participation of labor groups in UNESCO at all levels.

Grasso told the CIO News he considered the present base of UNESCO "all too academic," composed mainly of educators, scientists and scholars.

"I argued before the U. S. delegation," he said, "that these professionals cannot singlehandedly produce peace. UNESCO must become a mass movement, and any mass movement must necessarily include labor."

ALSO adopted by the full conference were the following Grasso proposals:

- That UNESCO programs for the exchange of persons between countries, in order to further international understanding, be made to include non-academic persons. Thus, workers and farmers, as well as students, could participate in the exchange.
- That UNESCO's present program for reconstruction of schools and libraries be expanded to apply as well to workers' educational facilities and demolished trade union hall libraries.
- That UNESCO's contemplated "History of Mankind," a project to be headed by British scientist and former UNESCO Director General Julian Huxley, include a volume on the history of labor's contributions to the advancement of civilization.
- That UNESCO promote in schools throughout the world the study of organized labor's contributions to civilization.
- That UNESCO make a study and report on techniques and devices used to bring about fascism in Italy and Germany before the second World War.

This last contribution Grasso described as his most important. "The purpose of this study is to provide a base for early recognition of such movements and possibly prevent the promotion of a future fascist state."

Admittedly, Grasso explained, such a study may tramp on the toes of some UNESCO member states, in which fascist symptoms are even now evident.

"For instance," he continued, "in the very country in which we were convening—Lebanon—there is very little democracy. Even the publications we received from the United States — Time magazine, for instance—were censored. Material in conflict with Lebanese policy was cut out. There is no freedom of speech or of assembly."

THE three weeks' conference, which began Nov. 17, was boycotted by the Soviet satellites. The Soviet has never joined UNESCO. Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia, all member states, failed to send delegates.

Elected to succeed Huxley as UNESCO director general was a Mexican, Dr. James Torre Bodet, who has been both minister of education and foreign minister of his country. In the first capacity he distinguished himself for his campaign against illiteracy, organizing rural schools and founding circulating libraries.

The American delegation was headed by Assistant Secy. of State George V. Allen. Other U. S. representatives were Milton S. Eisenhower, president of Kansas State College of Agriculture; Luther H. Evans, Librarian of Congress; Waldo G. Leland, director emeritus, American Council of Learned Societies and Mrs. Anne O'Hare McCormick, New York Times columnist.

Grasso expressed the hope that American workers will take increasing interest in UNESCO.

"UNESCO's program for peace, democracy, education, rehabilitation of lands and the removing of social tensions" he said, "can only be accomplished when all the common people, of which the scholars are a part, rally together and march on a common road for a common goal."

BACK STUDY OF FASCISM: Members of the U. S. delegation to the UNESCO conference at Beirut, Lebanon, backed the proposal made by Frank Grasso, (l.) labor adviser to the delegation that a study be made of growing fascist tendencies. The conference adopted the proposal. Those who backed the proposal included (l. to r.), Richard P. McKeon, Univ. of Chicago; Mrs. Edel Saunte, Social Democratic member of the Danish Parliament; Dr. Frederick Sherwood Dunn, Yale University.

Official Says U. S.:

'Prepared To Tolerate Every Idea Except Intolerance'

The United States has been accused in some quarters of attempting to foist a capitalistic economy on European nations under the guise of furthering democracy.

Either these critics are wrong or one top State Dept. official hasn't been informed of that policy.

Here is how Assistant Secy. of State George V. Allen, addressing the UNESCO conference in Beirut, Lebanon, defined democracy:

"I do not refer, in speaking of democracy, to differing concepts or experiments in the production of wealth. I am not concerned, for example, with the decision of any people that their coal should be mined under government rather than private ownership, or with any other economic experiments which a free people may wish to undertake. . . .

"What does concern the United States delegation is that human beings everywhere be given full freedom either to approve or to criticize the economic system in force or the administration in power. . . . We are prepared, under democracy, to tolerate every idea except intolerance."

That Ain't Xmas Spirit In Loan Shark's Eyes!

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

ONE day not long after the Christmas - gift hunting season opened, I received a nice letter which riled me.

It had a picture of a big jolly Santa Claus in one corner and a Christmas tree in the other. Enclosed was a small white card with my name neatly typed on a dotted line.

Addressing me as "Dear Friend," the letter informed me that I had been given a "cash credit card" certifying me as entitled "to obtain a signature loan" at any one of the four offices of a certain finance company.

All I had to do was fill out a pink card (also enclosed), telling where I lived, where I worked, how much I earned and if I was married, my spouse's place of work and wages.

It was very flattering to read on the back of the card that "according to company records, the registered holder hereof is engaged in such employment as entitles said holder to the privileges and services of the Company as set hereon."

Reading on with interest, I learned that all I had to do was simply telephone a company office or stop by with my card, before I started my Christmas shopping, and I could get any extra money I desired without delay and "at the lowest cost."

WHAT riled me about the letter was that it was smearing the Christmas spirit of giving with the ugly business of money lending. People in comfortable circumstances don't have to borrow money to buy their Christmas presents. It's the low income group, particularly those with children they can't bear to disappoint who would be most likely to fall for such a letter.

Thinking about how the price of so many things suitable for Christmas gifts had already been jacked up ridiculously high, I began to wonder how much more it would cost if one had to borrow the money to buy them.

I took down my telephone and called the company, not to give them my sour opinion of their clever snare they had laid for hard-up Christmas shoppers, but to find out how much a small loan from a reputable finance firm here in the nation's capital would cost.

I talked to a pleasant man who explained frankly, at my request, the financial arrangement for borrowing $200. He said the interest was 2½% a month on the unpaid balance, and that I could have 15 months to pay it off at the rate of $6.15 a month. Only additional charge, he said, would be $2.50 for insurance.

I thanked the man, hung up the receiver and did a little figuring. If the loan was paid off at $6.15 a month for 15 months, it would mean that the company would receive $242.25 plus $2.50 insurance charge, or $244.75. The cost of a $200 loan, apparently, was $44.75.

A LADY CANDIDATE for Congress, even after she had been defeated, finds cause for a grin when she builds a credit union that has more than $56,000 a year allotted to it. Members of the CIO Textile Workers Local 351 at the Lane Cotton Mills, New Orleans, have negotiated a plan with the mill management to have the money checked off for the credit union. This makes Lucille Savoie, extreme right, the defeated candidate, head of the largest credit union in Louisiana. With her, left to right, are Henrietta Hecker and Warren Rilleaux, charter signers, and Lydia Kable, Miss Savoie's assistant.

Bender Wins Maryland CIO Presidency

OVER the objections of seven dissidents, delegates to the Maryland-District of Columbia CIO Council voted to continue their support of the CIO-PAC and to reject a third party at this time.

Some 200 delegates attended the convention, which was distinguished from a number of other recent CIO conventions in that the struggle for Council leadership lay between two right-wing groups, instead of between the right and left.

Winning the top posts by a majority of about 50 votes were CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender, named president, and Steelworkers Reg. Dir. John Klauzenberg, incumbent secretary-treasurer. Defeated for the presidency was Ernest J. Moran, Auto Workers regional director. Luke Helm, Brewery Workers, lost his bid for the secretary-treasurer's job.

CIO members in the Maryland-D. C. area were praised for their part in the Nov. 2 election by Baltimore Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro, liberal Democrat. Political action was again emphasized when CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll urged the group to use the period between elections to build effective ward and precinct organizations.

Expansion Is Financed By High Prices

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"SENATOR, what I'm talking about is what Mark Twain called 'tainted profits'—'Tain't yours and 'tain't mine."

The scene was a public hearing on profits conducted by a Congressional sub-committee of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

The speaker was CIO Auto Workers' Washington Representative Don Montgomery. He was addressing Vermont Sen. Ralph Flanders (R.), the sub-committee chairman.

The Senators had heard industry's spokesmen declare profits were too low. Actually, they cried, their net take was being overstated. The public and the U. S. Treasury just don't know the troubles they've seen.

And the Senators had heard labor representatives describe profits as dangerously high.

THIS little drama was being enacted against a background of declining retail sales just before Christmas. Reflecting those declines were production cuts and lay-offs in many industries. In other industries, plants were being temporarily shut down for lack of raw materials or power.

It was this committee's aim to diagnose the nation's economic ailments and prescribe remedial legislation to cope with them.

One of the things ailing the country, Montgomery told the Senators, is that Big Business has been forcing consumers to pay for its expansion instead of paying for the capital itself through stock issues. This is maneuvered, the witness said, by raising prices so as to create a surplus capable of financing expansion — money which in past years has been supplied by investors.

Clarence Francis, chairman of General Foods, had termed these earnings "costless capital." But, noted Montgomery, "consumers who have been paying the prices for General Foods products which include these capital contributions may not share with Francis the view that it has been costless."

The remedy, he continued: an undistributed profits tax, which would force corporations to pay out the greater part of their earnings as dividends.

Have profits been overstated, as Prof. Sumner Slichter of Harvard University had told the committee?

"We believe present profits are far too high," Montgomery said. In fact, he continued, financial journals have referred to profits as "embarrassingly large."

"There is hardly a device developed by accounting ingenuity to minimize profits" which is not being used by corporations in their financial reports. Most common are special inventory reserves and deductions for "additional depreciation" and "extraordinary obsolescence," the witness pointed out.

GOING still further in his case against the corporations, Montgomery charged them with refusing to expand sufficiently to meet the nation's needs, thus creating shortages of basic materials on which other industries are dependent. Reason for this tendency to "sit tight," he continued, is that the big industrialists are anticipating a depression. "Planning for the worst, they will inevitably bring it about, if they have their way," he warned.

A few days later General Electric Pres. Charles E. Wilson took the stand and, complained to the committee that profits are lower than they should be to "cushion" the company against a market drop.

A General Motors spokesman urged Congress to leave everything to big business.

"The last time that was done," heatedly countered Democratic Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, "there was a depression."

The following day O'Mahoney sought proposals for stemming a depression from U. S. Steel's Ben Fairless.

The answer was a business man's version of "Come up and see me sometime."

"Keep in touch with us," replied Fairless.

I Confess!

A lot of "Nov. 3 liberals" have been confessing and repenting of their sins lately.

Newest recruit was Vermont's Sen. Ralph A. Flanders — a not-as-bad-as-Taft-not-as-good-as-Morse Republican.

Seeking suggestions from the UAW's Don Montgomery on possible sources of increased federal taxes, Flanders was reminded that the Republicans recently did the government out of $4½ billion with their tax-cut bill.

Yes, said Flanders, he had made a mistake in voting for that bill. It was only a matter of party regularity that made him do it. If he had it to do over again . . .

Next confession?

How Profits Are Hidden

HERE are examples of accounting devices corporations used to conceal the extent of their 1947 profits, as reported by UAW's Washington Representative Don Montgomery:

Company	Amount Deducted From Income	Acount Credited With Deduction	Reported Profit After Taxes	Concealed Profit as Percent of Reported Profit
American Can	$ 2,500,000	Contingency reserve	$ 19,336,624	13%
Armour	$ 8,000,000	Inventory reserve	$ 22,950,269	35%
Bethlehem Steel	$10,000,000	Inventory	$ 51,088,375	20%
Dupont	$20,900,000	Provision for excessive construction cost	$120,009,760	17%
Timken Roller	$ 1,250,000	Contingency reserve	$ 11,124,252	11%
U. S. Steel	$26,300,000	Depreciation reserve	$127,098,148	21%
Westinghouse	$12,009,179	Inventory reserve	$ 48,806,417	25%

RED HERRING OR PUNK PUNKIN?

Rhode Island Survey Shows

'Half Fired In July Still Jobless'

A SURVEY of former workers at the closed Esmond (R. I.) Blanket Mills showed that textile workers are not readily employed by other industries when their mills shut down.

Victor Canzano, manager of the Providence Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers, which made the survey, said it is "a direct answer to those who say dismissed textile workers will be absorbed by other industry and that there is nothing to worry about."

"On the contrary," Canzano said, "there is plenty to worry about. Our survey shows that half the workers who were fired when Esmond closed last July are still out of work and most of those who have found jobs are making less money."

The survey, which was made for use in arbitrating severance pay cases of 1100 former workers, showed that employes over 50 years of age have been hardest hit.

When the mill closed there were about 430 past the half century mark. So far, 340 of them are still out of work, 90 are employed, but 60 of them at lower wages. Ninety per cent of those past 65 years are yet jobless.

Youth, however, has not been an open sesame to new jobs. Forty-two per cent of those under 20 have yet to find the magic word which will open mill gates to them and approximately half of the workers from 20 to 50, the mill worker's prime of life, have been unable to land other employment.

The average unemployment was 16 weeks when survey figures were first collected in November. Today, more than 20% of the Esmond workers have used up their Rhode Island unemployment compensation of 25 weeks. The North Providence Unemployment Compensation office said 39% of its total active compensable claims as of Nov. 26 were ex-Esmond workers.

When the earnings of those who found jobs were checked, again the older worker was found to have fared the worst. Sixty-six per cent of all the workers got less money in their new jobs, 5% got the same, and 22% received more.

(The comparison was made on the basis of straight-time hourly earnings.)

Only 15¼% of those answering the survey said they did not have to draw on their savings to support themselves and 6% reported that they had "no savings" to begin with.

Of those who did have to draw on their savings, 43% have had at least one job, generally at a lower rate; almost all have drawn unemployment compensation and 3% have received old age pensions.

The maximum unemployment compensation benefit is $25 a week, old age pension maximum is $25 a month. The average straight time hourly earnings for workers at Esmond for the first three months of this year were $46.40 a week.

In 1949, More Than Ever, You Need to Know the Facts . . .

Back in November, American labor, with the help of others, won a tremendous victory at the polls.

Next year numerous efforts will be made to block the program for which a majority of the people voted. Labor will play an important role in battling for enactment of that program.

During 1949, CIO unions will make new demands on the economic front—demands that will affect you and your pocketbook.

There's an easy way for you to keep well informed about the events in which labor is interested—and that is by reading the CIO News.

We know a dollar's not a dollar any more, but a buck will still pay for a one-year subscription to the CIO News.

Why not subscribe for a friend or two, too?
